Eight to seven for Hayes was the somewhat monotonous announcement of the decision of the Electoral Commission in the Oregon case last Friday. Satisfactory proof of the eligibility of the third elector being given the legality of the Governor's certificate was the question for decision, which was soon given in the negative, and that of the State Secretary accepted. Again the filibustering began with the apparent intention of continuing till the close of this week and leaving the vote uncounted. It is believed, however, that enough Democrats disgusted with the bad faith of their party leaders will unite with the Republicans and finish the vote. Next Monday will probably see the inauguration of Gov. Hayes.

The strike of the engineers of the Boston and Maine railroad has been of so extensive and aggravating a character as to warrant legislative inquiry. The commissioners, Charles F. Adams, Jr., A. D. Briggs and Francis M. Johnson reported to the Legislature of Massachusetts last week the results of their investigations and recommend penal statutes to cover such offenses as engineers abandoning their locomotives before reaching the end of their route, obstruction of railroads and interfering with their employes. The war between the company and the strikers backed by their secret "unions" is very bitter and will be fought to the bitter end.

It is stated that $750,000 are to be sent to New York city from India for the erection of a grand temple of worship to Brahma, and that some zealous Mormons are also about to buy or build a temple to their obnoxious system. The statement is too unlikely to be well founded, for the worshippers of the heathen deity are not numerous here, nor do enough of the followers of Brigham Young live outside of Utah to warrant much expense for their peculiar worship. The suggestion, however, is significant of the aggregation of all nationalities and sects on our soil, and demands a Christianity aggressive in proportion to the danger from the multiform religious rites that are tolerated. None that are likely to be introduced will be of more danger to the church of Christ, however, than that already experienced in the lodge.

The lodge and ring politics has had a severe loss in the defalcation of John McArthur, Postmaster of Chicago. Last Saturday the rumor began to gain currency that his accounts with the Post-office Department were so behind that his resignation and general surrender of effects was necessary, and the definite announcement to that effect was made Monday morning. The arrears to the Government are $55,000; of this sum $21,000 is an unsettled account resulting from the failure of the Cook County National Bank; for the remainder the Government has been made the preferred creditor and the bondsmen will probably settle it. Gen. McArthur has been a "machine" politician of the Republican "ring," and his election expenses may have had a share in his downfall, as well as the losses in the iron business, to which he lays all the blame.

A POEM FOR REFORMERS.

BY REV. DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

We are workers in one vineyard;
Some are strong and some are weak;
But the smiling of the vintage
Is the common joy we seek.
Some must trail the vine and prune it,
Some must stoop to dress the mould,
But the few can pluck the clusters,
In the autumn's haze and gold.

We are builders, and the temple
Rises slowly day by day;
Some must lay the polished corners,
Some the brick of heavy clay.
Only one can place the cap-stone
On the summit grand and high,
While the shout of "Grace unto it,"
Rises to the vaulted sky.

We are fighting in the battle,
But we cannot all command;
Most of us must march at orders,
Forward like a soldier band.
Fame is not the hero's blessing,
But the sense of duty done,
Life and treasure all are ventured
Ere the victory is won.

All our hearts in us are throbbing
For the good of human kind;
But we see not altogether
With a single eye and mind.
Let each workman speed his brother,
With a voice of love and cheer;
Let us not prevent each other
With our words of blame severe.

Golden prizes lie before us,
And the race is open now;
Not the swift alone are victors,
Wearing crowns upon their brow,
For the lame and halt ones running
God hath promised each a goal;
O my poor and sorrowing brother,
Thou shalt be a victor soul!

Let the blessed kingdom hasten,
When the will of God shall be,
Evermore the law and pleasure
Of his people glad and free;
Would we strive to be the greatest,
Let us then be servants all;
God has crowns and jewels waiting,
For the lowly and the small.

THE WORK WE HAVE TO DO.

When the anti-slavery party began to make a political stand in good earnest, they found many newspapers and many pulpits that stood ready to aid them. But when our Anti-masonic party began its operations, we found that the first work which we had to do was to convert the press and the pulpit, so completely had these potent engines of weal or woe fallen under the control of the Masonic lodge. It will hardly be credited some years hence that the American pulpit has had to be purged, in spite of itself, and in opposition to the stubborn resistance of many of its occupants, from one of the foulest blotches that ever stained the human character. That the press should become corrupt, in a free country, can hardly be wondered at; but that the American pulpit should become alloyed with such a monstrous species of idolatry as Freemasonry, in this day of enlightenment, is one of the most humiliating facts that the religious aspirations of mankind will ever have to confess.

In order to show the extent to which this corruption of the pulpit and press has descended to the people, it is sufficient to say that there are bodies of men in various parts of our country, leagued together for the purposes of intimidation and murder, who seem to think that their objects are just, charitable and in accord with the principles of the Christian religion. One of these bodies of men, styling themselves the Ancient Hibernian Order, is located in the enlightened State of Pennsylvania. This self-privileged body spares no one who incurs its displeasure. If any one dares to disregard its secret warnings, and act on his own discretion in selling his labor, it proceeds to deal with him in all the coolness of a court of law, and dooms the offender to death. Many are the lives of American citizens that have thus been taken by this charitable institution which foreigners have introduced into this country from the Old World.

The murders of which we speak have been committed in the region of the Pennsylvania coal mines; but the vicious sentiment that inspired them does not stop there. The murderers find numerous sympathisers in Philadelphia itself, under the shadow of the greatest Masonic temple in the world. There, on Sunday night, the 11th of February last, a large meeting of so-called workingmen expressed sentiments of sympathy with the Molly Maguires, and sustained them in their murderous course of action. This meeting, which is termed a rousing one by the newspapers, advanced the idea that the murders were committed in favor of the working classes, and resolutions were passed demanding a commutation of punishment for convicted murderers. The same sentiment has also been advanced that served as an afterthought to the slack administration of the war of the rebellion, that if only a few of the murderers were hung and the rest let off, it would be unequal and unjust; and if all were hung it would be more than the community would endure. Thus these men, acting under a foreign institution, who give American citizens warning to quit work, and then dooms them to death, Masonic fashion, talks about fairness and justice!

The number of murders committed by this Ancient Hibernian Order in the name of their society has become very large, and one of the most revolting facts connected with it is, that the members seem to think that their transactions are just and honorable; and like the Freemasons, they work their lodge openly, not appearing to think that they thus deserve the execrations of mankind.

But the worst fact of all is, that out of the some sixty thousand preachers of religion in the United States, who are supposed to teach the gentle mercies, charities and sympathies inculcated by our Saviour, there are many, alas, very many, who, by their membership with secret societies, give their countenance, their example, and their covert support to this Ancient Hibernian Order! Which fact is the more astounding, that there should be a secret order of assassins here in the heart of the United States, at the present day, or that ministers of the Gospel should belong to secret orders whose nefarious principles of action are no better than those of the Hibernian Order, and which they dare not commend to their congregations from the pulpit?

The work then which we Antimasons have undertaken is no small one. We have to deal not only with Molly Maguires and the Kuklux, but with the preachers of religion. Nor even with them alone, we have to reform the American press, beginning with the leading daily papers. The New York Times, in treating of the great sympathising meeting in Philadelphia in favor of the Molly Maguires, confesses that the demonstration was alarming; but yet this very Times advocated throughout the war of the Rebellion the very same essential sentiments now advanced for the Molly Maguires; and it now sustains the Masonic lodge, the worst of all secret societies, with a degree of servility that must pain every true American man to witness. The Ancient Hibernian Order is an Irish secret society; the Ancient and Honorable Order of Free and Accepted Masons is an English secret society; the Times is in favor of the English against the Irish society; and thus this leading American daily opens its columns freely to the stupid proceedings of the Masonic lodge, which of course tends to foster and cherish the spirit of secret association throughout the whole country.

What means and resources have we, Anti-masons, to contend against all these powerful influences? We have little tracts, like the little smooth stones from the brook, one of which smote giant fraud in the forehead. We have evangelical preachers, who are outraged and violently dealt with in this Christian country, as were the evangelists in the pagan days of the first century. And above all, we have some Amerisan MEN, who are determined never to vote for a supporter of the foreign institution of Freemasonry on any occasion or for any office whatever. AMERICAN.

SIN.—A presumptuous sin is such a one as is committed in the face of the command, in a desperate venturing to run the hazard, or in a presuming upon the mercy of God through Christ, to be saved notwithstanding: this is a leading sin to that which is unpardonable, and will be found with such professors as do hanker after iniquity.—Bunyan.

THE BAPTIST BEACON AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

TO THE BAPTISTS OF THE STATE OF IOWA:—Dear Brethren:—You are aware that a paper of the above name, after maintaining a precarious existence for the past few years, is now located at DesMoines, and making strenuous efforts to secure your patronage and endorsement as the accredited organ of the Baptist denomination in this State. You are also aware that last summer two short articles, signed "Ex-Editor," appeared in that paper, respectfully asking its editors to define their position in regard to oath-bound secret societies; that said articles were followed by a long and labored editorial excusing or justifying our church members in adhering to such societies, and our churches in holding such members in fellowship; and that—admitting my right to reply to that editorial—they issued the following challenge:

"If 'Ex-Editor' will show us that the Scriptures as fairly and squarely condemn Masonry and Odd-fellowship—not in express terms, but on general principles—as they do Deism and drunkenness, then we shall be ready to agree with him that membership in these orders should be made a test of fellowship and a ground of discipline."

But you are not aware that the article below, written in reply to that challenge, lay in the office of the Beacon for eight weeks before I could even procure its return; and that its return was accompanied by the cool assurance of the senior editor that he had always intended to publish it when he could find space without crowding out matter of more importance!

Now, brethren, I will not question your intelligence or piety by asking you whether you consider membership in oath-bound secret societies to be consistent with the genius of the Baptist faith. I will only ask you to read the article addressed to the Beacon with candor, and judge for yourselves whether it does not prove the religion of the lodge to be identical with Deism, and therefore whether to encourage it, even by silence, is not to encourage the most deadly enemy of the religion of the Bible. Yours truly,

EX-EDITOR.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—It seems to me there is a slight tinge of bitterness in your comments upon my assertion that "some of our strongest and most influential churches are run by a few leading Masons." You call it an "extraordinary statement," and add, "We must say frankly we do not believe such is the case. He" i. e. Ex-Editor "has brooded over the evils of Masonry, whether real or imaginary, until in his mind they are wonderfully magnified." So you not only "don't believe" the testimony, but virtually assert that the witness is a monomaniac. Now all this may be very courteous and very charitable, but to a man of more than sixty years, a professed Christian of forty-six, and an accredited minister of the Gospel nearly thirty, it appears a little rough—especially as, having no personal acquaintance with me, you could not possibly have known that the testimony was false, that the witness was insane, or that he was not a man of truth and veracity. Would it have been too great a compromise of your dignity, or too great a stretch of your charity, to have accounted for what you characterize as my "extraordinary statement" by supposing that a man of my age, or indeed of any age, might possibly know some things that you do not know, and that in the assertion referred to I may possibly have "spoken forth the words of truth and soberness"? And might you not have done this without any mock deference to my "superior intelligence and wisdom"?

But a truce to personalities. Masons, you admit, contradict each other, not only in regard to the revelations of Morgan and others, but in regard to the character and teachings of their pet institution as given by their own standard authors. And it would afford me great relief if, with you, I could "avoid the unpleasant necessity of impeaching either class by concluding that Masonry has been materially modified and many of its objectionable features changed." But unfortunately the evidence is too strong to the contrary. A. G. Mackey, M. D., Past General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, author of a "Lexicon of Freemasonry," "Manual of the Lodge," "The Book of the Chapter," "Cryptic Masonry," etc., in his "Masonic Ritualist," gives us the "Twenty-five Landmarks of Freemasonry," the last of which reads thus:

"XXV. That the landmarks of Masonry can never be changed."

He adds, "These constitute the landmarks, or, as they have sometimes been called, the body of Masonry, in which it is not in the power of any man, or body of men, to make the least innovation." Pages 242, 243.

But I must leave this and points of minor importance, and proceed to my grand objection to the institution—its false religion. You say, "If 'Ex-Editor' will show us that the Scriptures as fairly and squarely condemn Masonry and Odd-fellowship—not in express terms, but on general principles—as they do Deism and drunkenness, then we shall be ready to agree with him that membership in these orders should be made a test of fellowship and a ground of discipline."

Very well. Now let us see if you will abide the result of your own test. Taking Freemasonry as the parent and fair representative of all the secret orders, suppose we attempt to prove that it is a religious institution, that its religion is Deism and yet that it claims to be a saving religion. In doing this suppose we ignore the conflicting testimony of individual members, however "truthful," "veracious" or "pious," and call into court only the best accredited and most popular authorities of the institution. Suppose we call only "two or three witnesses" of this character to the stand, and make them speak directly to the points at issue, not merely giving their own views and glosses, but the actual teachings of the institution itself. And then suppose we leave the testimony of these witnesses to speak for itself, with only here and there a running comment. Will this course be fair and satisfactory? Then I affirm:

I. FREEMASONRY IS A RELIGIOUS INSTITUTION.

1. The truth of this proposition is evident from the following facts: A lodge is said to be opened in the name of God. Its members in lodge meeting profess to have met in the name of God. Its ceremonies throughout are embellished with prayers, hymns, religious allusions, types, symbols and Scripture readings. It has its tabernacle, altar, candlestick, ark, manna, incense, corn, wine, oil, chaplain, high-priest and holy of holies, The lodge closes with religious forms, prayers, benedictions, etc. Its dedications, installations, festivals, burials and other puplic services are professedly religious. See Mackey's "Masonic Ritualist," Salem Town's "System of Speculative Masonry," and standard Masonic writers everywhere. I will not dwell upon these points, however, but proceed to say:

2. Masonry directly claims to be a religious institution.

"In the investigation of the true meaning of every Masonic symbol and allegory, we must be governed by the single principle that the whole design of Freemasonry as a speculative science is the investigation of Divine truth. To this great object everything is subsidiary, * * and all the ceremonies of the order tend to this ultimate design."—Mackey's Ritualist, p. 99.

"A lodge is said to be opened in the name of God and the Holy Saints John, as a declaration of the sacred and religious purposes of our meeting, and of our profound reverence for that Divine Being whose name and attributes should ever be the constant theme of our contemplation," etc.—Ib. p. 14.

"As Masons we are taught never to commence any great or important undertaking without first invoking the blessing and protection of Deity, and this is because Masonry is a religious institution, and we thereby show our dependence on and our trust in God."—Ib. p. 44.

"The principles of Freemasonry have the same co-eternal and unshaken foundations, contain and inculcate the same truths in substance and propose the same ultimate end, as the doctrines of Christianity."—Salem Town in "A System of Speculative Masonry," indorsed by the Grand Lodge of the State of New York, and also by Mackey, p. 351. See also George Oliver, D.D. "Star in the East," pp. 6, 7.

Who says Masonry is not a religious institution?

Free Prayer Meetings.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

By free prayer meetings I mean such as are led by the Holy Spirit, when "the fear of man that bringeth a snare" is not a controling power, and when prayer can be made in sympathy with Him who was manifested that he might destroy all the works of the devil.

Such prayer meetings are not common; and that is perhaps the reason why the practical results are so poor and small. Freedom to worship God, and especially to ask of him to rebuke, expose, and destroy prevalent and popular iniquity, is about as pressing a want now as it was in the days of the Pilgrim Fathers.

Twenty years ago it was accounted discourteous to "remember them that are in bonds as bound with them," in the prayer meeting. Those who persisted in it were either put down as disturbers, or they broke up the meeting; for (as sometimes happened) the prayer meeting was converted to Christ.

The power that now preeminently rules in the church and controls the prayer meeting is the power of the lodge. You may talk and pray against slavery, whisky, tobacco, and even pride in dress, and you will be tolerated; but if you ask the Lord to overthrow "the abomination that maketh desolate," you are on forbidden ground. You will have to be put down, or break up the meeting. It is not necessary that a majority of the church shall belong to secret societies, or even be in favor of them, in order to do this. One or two Freemasons will govern a church and control its prayer meetings as effectually as though they were a majority. Many earnest Christians are feeling deeply this bondage. Some of them submit, but submit under protest. Others will not restrain the spirit within them, but do their duty and accept the reproach. The great want is free meetings—meetings in which men seek not the honor that comes from man, but that only which comes from God—meetings where men shall ask Christ to teach them to pray, and shall pray as he teaches.

It is a matter of rejoicing that such prayer meetings are being established in various places, and with the most encouraging results. Let the good work go on, for in no way can we so powerfully assail the kingdom of Satan as by earnest and united prayer.

The Pacific Coast Wine and Liquor Herald quotes Paul to Timothy, where he recommends him to take a little wine for his stomach's sake, and his often infirmities, and then proceeds in a sanctimonious way to express its horror at the views of temperance men, as follows:

"With what grace, then do teetotalers claim that wine is poison? On what ground can they excuse themselves for the vile insinuation that Paul recommended Timothy to take poison? How can they substantiate so reckless a charge?"

This form of the argument is rather hard to meet from the standpoint of the theory maintained by some of our expositors; but it gives no trouble to those who maintain that there were two kinds of wine of which the Scriptures make mention, in different instances, sometimes with approval, and sometimes with condemnation. Once admitting this distinction, and then all inconsistency and apparent contradiction disappears as by magic. The Bible contains about 130 warnings and admonitions against the use of wine, and it is mentioned, under one name or another, with approval, about twenty times. How can these facts be reconciled without admitting that when mentioned favorably, only unpoisoned, that is, unfermented wine is intended? And especially is this reasoning justified when we consider that the Jews never employed fermented drinks at their sacred feasts. Dr. Isaacs, a Jewish rabbi, of New York, said: "Fermentation is to them always a symbol of corruption, as in nature and science it is in itself decay."—Exchange.

Christian Obligations.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF WESTERN YEARLY MEETING ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

The Society of Friends has ever claimed that all our obligations and relations in life should be essentially Christian; that all men are brethren, and entitled to our friendship, sympathy, and kindness when in need.

We have especially taught and and practiced the obligation to relieve the wants of our own people. When Friends organized themselves into a church this apostolic duty was fully recognized. We conceive it sufficiently covers all our obligations in giving and receiving mutual aid in sickness or in distress.

Some secret orders are pledged by obligations to secresy solemnized by oaths extra-judicial in their administration, and requiring penalties forbidden by the teachings of Christ, and punishable by the civil law. Other similar orders require that their pledges and obligations shall be confirmed and maintained by affirmations which bind the judgments and consciences of novitiates in advance of what may afterwards be known or required of them by all the obligations of sacred honor, and to forever conceal the signs, secrets and mysteries of such orders. Their judgment and conscience are thus solemnly pledged to men who may profess to be religious without being Christian, and to religious observances which are strictly ritualistic ceremonies.

The ostentatious and sometimes grotesque pageantry displayed by most secret orders in public parades, and on ceremonial occasions, and their gorgeous halls and temples, we conceive are not allowed by Christian liberty, nor are they a fit exhibit of economy in works of benevolence and charity.

Herod's oath to Herodias should be a warning to all. Christ commended the son who broke a promise the execution of which would have been a crime. No promise is held by good morals to be binding when its observance would be an infraction of the civil or divine law, or when extorted by threats or punishment. No man can be a free man when his judgment or conscience is so bound that he cannot at all times act in harmony with the divine will. God's will must ever be regarded supreme. To bind our consciences and opinions to any company of men for all time to come, in blindness to the future, and especially to men who do not profess to live according to the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, is but to embarrass our every-day service for our Lord, and to live a covered life when we should be open and free.

The life of Christ is a clear display of unframmeled freedom. "We ought to obey God rather than men" is everywhere seen in it. Men should not, according to his teaching, "put their light under a bushel, but on a candlestick." We should be as a city on a hill, which cannot be hid. Jesus said to the Jews: "I have even taught in your synagogues and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing." His children "are of the light and of the day; * * * not of night nor of darkness."

We do not desire to raise a controversy with any one on this subject. If those who do not bear our name or profess our principles choose to act according to another standard of moral obligation, we concede their rights and privileges as fellow-citizens. "Let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind." "To his own master he standeth or falleth." God is able to make him stand who can show a true life at his judgment seat.

We would earnestly commend to all our members the necessity of a wise and timely decision to keep themselves free from any complications or alliances with any association or order which requires solemn pledges of secrecy, or which stands upon a doubtful moral or Christian basis. Let no step be taken which may be in the way of the future service of your Lord and Saviour, or which will embarrass your relationship to or liberty in his church.

A Recent View of Turkish Affairs.

So far as I have read American papers, there seems to be a strong sympathy for Russia, and a desire that she be allowed to take possession of the Provinces where the war has been in progress, and even of Constantinople itself, and drive the Turks from Europe. These views seem to be held in view of the opinion that Russia would be a great improvement upon Turkey, which is true. I find, however, that the wisest men in the Turkish dominions, who are Christians, and are longing for deliverance from some quarter, are opposed to a transfer from Turkish rule to Russian. This I have from men who have lived in Turkey, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt for many years, and who have studied the question, in the light of the interests of religious liberty and Christian civilization and evangelization. With one accord they prefer new guarantees from Turkey with international supervision to secure their fulfillment, rather than to be under the Russian domination. Russia, if left alone to acquire territory from Turkey, will establish a spiritual despotism in the countries annexed, such as prevails wherever the Greek church is the established religion, and which is but a few degrees better than may be enjoyed in the Turkish Empire. Russia is already strong, and her victory over Turkey would add greatly to her strength, and make the prospect less than at present that she would make any future progress in the interests of religious liberty.

There is, I trust, something better than this in store for Christians in the Turkish dominions. Much has been achieved, already, by discussion and negotiation, and all this will be almost entirely lost if Russia is allowed to take the whole matter into her own hands. The people of the Christian provinces have settled it that Turkey has been guilty of despotic cruelty in her treatment of her Christian subjects, and that there must be indemnity for the past and security for the future. After so earnest and full a discussion, it is great progress to have Roman Catholic Austria, Italy and France, Greek Russia and Protestant England and Germany agree in such views, and so earnestly advocate such a policy. The Turkish question, as it has been discussed the present year and made the subject of diplomatic conference, has been the occasion of educating the conscience of Christendom to a much higher degree than has ever been attained before. To make sure and steadfast what has been attained a stake must be driven, which all will acknowledge to be in the proper place. Russia alone cannot do this, and it were better to have it deferred than to have any mistake about it. It may be as well done by a Magna Charta signed by all the Powers, with Turkey included, with its territory intact, its duty prescribed and acknowledged, and the proper guarantees and penalties made plain, as by dismembering the empire.

It may be said that Turkey will not carry out its pledges, or that she cannot do so. This may be so. I regard it as probable, to almost the degree of moral certainty. But if so, what then? It is better to try it, for several reasons. It will give present security and hope to all Christians in the Turkish Empire. It will be acceptable to the educated Turks, and secure their help in enforcing it. It will, while the experiment is being made, secure the attention and command the growing interest of the civilized world; and if it fails, powers interested will be able to act without being liable to the charge of seeking new territory.

If, on the other hand, the Powers decide that Turkey cannot be trusted to carry out reforms, and if they resolve at once to rescue the provinces of Europe from Turkish rule, there will be no relief for Christians in Asia from the power of the Turks, and they will be more exposed than ever to persecution by Mohammedans. Any change, moreover, in Turkey in Europe will expose Christians of the Turkish Empire, out of Europe, to greater evils than are now inflicted. Such massacres as took place in Damascus in 1860 are very likely to be repeated.—Dr. Montfort in the Interior.

One More Appeal.

To Friends of our Cause in Michigan:

At our State meeting in Hastings, your late lecturer, in presenting his claim for service rendered, offered to settle that claim for $100 in addition to what he had already received, up to that time. The offer was accepted and about $30 received on the spot; since which time nothing has been paid, though a sufficient sum was pledged to meet the amount. I wish now simply to say in this way—I am in pressing need of the sum thus pledged—never more so. If those who pledged the amounts necessary to make up the $70 now due me will remit to me at Fentonville, Genesee county, Michigan, I will acknowledge receipt through the Cynosure so that all can see when the amount is made up. A prompt attention to the above will be a simple act of justice, but will be none the less gratefully acknowledged.

Fraternally Yours,

J. L. Barlow.

P. S. Allow me to say that I have to-day had the pleasure of welcoming to the State my successor, Rev. D. P. Rathbun. He was the first choice of the Anti-masons of the State, and is now, in the providence of God, among you. I cordially commend him to your hearts, homes and purses. Three times he has been brought face to face with death through the malice of the craft. As a seceding Mason, and already a martyr, he can speak from experience, and from an acquintance with him of several years' standing, I believe him to be just what we all want—a perfectly reliable man—one to whom I resign the work with great pleasure. Let him have your warm sympathy, earnest prayers, and hearty support.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

Pursuant to a call for a county convention for the purpose of forming an organization auxiliary to the National Christian Association, a meeting was held in the court house January 24, 1877.

The house was called to order by H. W. Norton, Mr. W. F. Hillman was elected chairman and A. A. Garrison, secretary.

Committees on constitution and by-laws, resolutions and permanent organization were adopted.

By request the secretary read some articles on Masonry. Some tracts and pamphlets on the same subject were distributed, after which the committees reported and their reports as adopted by the convention are as follows:

Whereas, All oath-bound societies tend to originate and promote distrust, and

Whereas, The oaths and penalties by which Freemasonry binds its members to secrecy and mutual succor, are far more terrible and therefore more potent than any known to civil law, there is no guarantee for equal justice in the courts, of the life, liberty, character or property of any citizen not a Mason, where his opponent and his judge, his lawyer, a witness or a juror is a Mason, and

Whereas, The Masonic system, its rights, oaths, penalties and morality, all are borrowed from ancient heathenism, and are contrary to Christian morality, and

Whereas, Its organic despotism with its head center more absolute than Herod is more attractive to bad men than to good, and the bad more naturally aspire to and control it, while the good, swindled into it are bound by its foresworn oaths, and

Whereas, It thus becomes an anti-republican training school to our young men, with its titles of nobility, hostile to free speech, awing into silence most of the pulpits and press, armed and drilled and grasping for power already counts its annual revenue by millions, holds most of the offices of every grade and department, usurps the prerogatives of the government and people, in dedicating their public buildings, and holds its own laws superior to the civil laws, executing its own death penalties when it dares on conscientious members, who, like Morgan expose it. Therefore

Resolved, That Freemasonry is the enemy of civil government, the foe of true religion, the Christian church, the Bible, the God of the Bible and humanity, and should not only be kept out of the church, but exposed destroyed and banished from the earth, and for the speedy accomplishment of which we will devoutly pray and earnestly labor.

The standing officers elected were W. F. Hillman, president; A. A. Garrison, recording secretary; E. G. Paine, corresponding secretary; F. L. Garrison, treasurer; H. E. Walker, vice-president of first commissioner district, Milton, Concord and Ellington; S. C. Davis, of third, Wasioja and Claremont; G. W. Hills, of fourth, Ashland and Canisteo. For the fifth commissioner district there was no vice-president elected.

The appointing of a finance committee, a committee for laboring with professing Christians who adhere to the lodge, and political committee, also the place for holding the first annual meeting of the Association, was left to the executive committee at its first meeting.

The first executive committee meeting will be held at the Seminary at Wasioja, Wednesday, February 14, 1877, at 2 o'clock P. M.

Northern Indiana not Forgotten.

Ligonier, Ind., Feb. 19, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Dear Sir—Once more I have been in the field, battling this enemy of all righteousness. On last Saturdav evening the 17th, I spoke to a very respectable audience two miles east of this place. I have lectured quite a number of times, and always had good order; but this time I spoke to a people who had never before heard the Masonic institution exposed. I presume when my voice was still a pin could have been heard drop in any part of the house. I shaped my discourse more in a political line, as none of the craft were out.

I have another appointment, seven miles southwest of here, to meet on the 3d of March.

I begin to think I stand all alone, like good old Elijah, against the prophets of Baal; but I have God's truth on my side, and while I maintain it I shall never fall.

Yours in the kingdom and patience of our Lord and Master,

Canada Invaded.

Plattsville, Ontario, C. W. Feb. 20, 1877.

Editor Cynosure:—Since the days of the abduction of Morgan we have not had so much excitement on Masonry as we have had since E. Ronayne's visit to Plattsville, whose Anti-masonic lectures, in connection with working the degrees have opened the eyes of church members as well as the church-going community to the abominable Baal-worship called Masonry.

When Mr. Ronayne put in his appearance at the appointed time to begin his lectures, Masonry was aroused as you will see. The Hall was the appointed place for meeting but the Good Templars had it engaged for that night and refused to waive their privilege, Masonic members being at their head. So we met in the old Methodist chapel, where Mr. R. gave us a lecture, sharp and pointed and edifying.

On the evening of February 7th he worked the first degree in Masonry in the Hall to an attentive audience, and gave such proofs of all he said that none dared to oppose him. Just here I would say that the Masons acted wisely, seeing their craft so mortally wounded they yet kept their mouths shut and said nothing.

A most amusing circumstance took place on this night's exposure. A Mason was caught in his own trap. In filling up the number of offices to work the degrees this man consented to be one and came on with the rest. Not knowing him to be a Mason Mr. Ronayne appointed him to the chair of the "Worshipful Master." Soon his position became too warm for him. He could not bear up under the pressure any longer, and taking the advantage when the speaker's back being turned, he untied his apron, laid it on his chair, caught up his hat, and quickly slunk out of the Hall for that night.

The next evening the second degree was worked. We had an increase of hearers. All went off quietly. On the evening of the 9th in working the third degree, we had a crowded hall; Mr. Ronayne worked hard for five hours in this evening's lecture, killing and raising Hiram Abiff to the universal satisfaction of all present.

Now for the result of those meetings; for this I have delayed reporting sooner, that I might know what effect those lectures have had on the hearers, and the neighborhood in general. From what has been learned from parties personally it has been great. Parties who had made up their minds to join the Masons and some that had sent in their names to the lodge in this place all say they have Masonry enough for them, and this I have from quite a number. Now this looks like doing good. Saving men from the lodge saves them from the saloon, from drunkards' graves, and we hope from a burning pit hereafter.

Already the cry comes in from surrounding localities, "Come over and help us." One thing more since those lectures; our village and surrounding country have become a wonderful people, working on the square, school boys and all.

Doubtless Pastmaster Ronayne will be invited to Canada again ere long, not only for one week but for several weeks together. Yours fully on the square, JOHN MASTER.

THE NECESSITY.

Editor Cynosure:—The following letter, just received by me, shows, if anything does, the great necessity there is for a rapid and large increase of your Roll of Honor of seceded Masons. You will, doubtless, bear in mind that in your issue of 30th November last, you published an article from me touching upon the Baraboo seduction and murder case, wherein I urged the friends of Anti-masonry and anti-secrecy in general to promptly forward to your office for publication the names and address of all known out-spoken seceded Masons living in any part of the United States. The friends of our cause in Wisconsin were particularly enjoined to action in this matter. Since then some thirty or forty names have been reported, but none from Wisconsin, the very State where necessity arising in the Baraboo case seemed to demand that an extended list of seceders residing therein should be made known forthwith. At the time the article was published we had the names and address of two seceders in that State, all honor to them, upon our lists. We have the same two now, but no more. Shall this state of things continue to exist? Will not our friends in Wisconsin and elsewhere bestir themselves in this matter? Shall not the list become both famous and formidable? It ought certainly to be. It forms a picture that to the conspiratorial adhering Mason is sad to look upon. The greater and more influential the list becomes the more it encourages desertions (so to speak) from the enemy, and these demoralize and render him far more easy to conquer. And to conquer is the grand object of our ambitions, the theme of our hopes. Beat the revielle. Let the names be spoken, and then for a general charge all along the line. But to the letter. Here it is:

EAST DEERING, Feb. 12.

Mr. J. H. H. WOODWARD:—Dear Sir: Please to send me, as soon as possible, a copy of "How to Defeat Masonic Scoundrelism within the Court House." Should it prove satisfactory you will hear from me again. Address, J. P. SHATTUCK, East Deering, Maine.

I am interested in a case in court, so if you will please forward immediately, you will greatly oblige.

J. P. S."

This communication has been attended to, and the pamphlet mailed, of course. But Mr. Shattuck will lay under a disability. We have not the name nor address of a single seceder living in the State of Maine upon our lists. If Mr. Shattuck desires to take testimony of seceders concerning the nature of the Masonic obligations, so as to impeach Masonic judges and jurors, he must seek such testimony outside of his State, to be taken by depositions with commissions attached. This course will be somewhat troublesome and expensive. Cannot our friends in Maine furnish the Cynosure with the names and address of a number of seceders who are living in that State? They ought to do so, if they can, and at once. And also give the same information to Mr. Shattuck. The courts are the points of attack, in a business sense, upon Masonry, and it is a tremendous blunder, in this reform, to overlook the fact. The courts must not be neglected. You touch a man's pocket and you will wake him up. Masonry in one respect is more destructive than lightning. It is said that lightning never strikes twice in the same place, but Masonry is constantly striking in one spot, and that spot is in the courts. Remove her influence there, and she will die out in the churches and everywhere else.

As appropos to this subject I append another letter, to open the eyes of the many readers of the Cynosure, large numbers of whom are now pretty wide awake to the villainies and enormities of secret societies, Masonry in particular. Here goes:

HOMERVILLE, Medina Co., O., Jan. 28, 1877.

MR. J. H. H. WOODWARD:

Dear Sir—I enclose ten cents. Please send me tract, "How to Defeat Masonic Scoundrelism within the Court House." I could give you a detail of a lawsuit which I had with a Freemason, in which he took out of me $340, without the shadow of a case. It is the first case in all my life that I ever knew one man being sued for another man's debt, without his sanction in some way, manner or form. I could give the details of the case if necessary.

Yours, &c., S. SMITH.

I have advised Mr. Smith to descend into particulars. When he furnishes the facts in this case of Masonic rascality and fraud, I will lay them before the readers of the Cynosure.

Mr. Editor, I have a large number of letters. I might cull over and select some mighty interesting reading matter for your paper, should it meet your views of propriety for me to do so. The opinions and facts contained in these letters would show the "Old Handmaid" off in no enviable light.

Yours for the crusade,

J. H. H. WOODWARD.

"A NIGHT WITH THE KNIGHTS."

"HOW CHIVALRY SPREADS A RARE AND RADIANT FEAST OF MUSIC, FEATS OF ARMS, DANCING AND DAINTIES FOR BEAUTY—LA VALETTE'S GRAND TREAT."

"That silent hour when battle's eye is closed,
And love steals from the tented field to tune
His sweet-stringed lute beneath my lady's bower."

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Feb. 12, 1877.

The above are the head lines preceding a rather lengthy and gushing report in one of our city papers of a grand meeting of the La Valette Commandery of Knights Templars, which has been on the tapis for some time, but came off at the St. George Hotel, in this city, on the 8th inst., and is said to have been a grand success. And the reporter (whoever he may have been), has been careful to insert the following blasphemous paragraph which is quite in keeping with the lodge doctrine of deism, that teaches how men can enter the lodge above by their own good deeds in the lodge below. The reporter says:

"As a matter of course this success is not due to the special smiles of Providence, for even the doughtiest knight has long since discovered that Providence has a 'strong' weakness for the best-trained cavalry and the heaviest artillery, and he who puts his shoulder to the wheel makes the most important sacrifices to heaven."

Of course we believe "the programme of music by the ladies was well executed," and no doubt the "roll of drums and a salute of trumpets," and the reception of the Sir Knights into the hall, in full paraphernalia, must have been "very imposing," although somewhat fantastical, and to the minds of some a fitting prelude to the absurd and ridiculous doings of the followers of King Comus, which are to take place in this city at an early day.

But my attention was particularly arrested, in wonder but not in praise, of those gentleman whose names appear as the reception committee of this assemblage of mock knight errants. I find they are from the ranks of our leading men, lawyers, merchants, &c.; and shall I whisper it to your ear in Masonic style, "foot to foot, knee to knee, breast to breast, hand to back, mouth to cheek," lest cowans may hear it, that amongst the members of this committee there was a Rev. Sir Knight, C. H., whose Foote falls softly on the carpet of one of our leading sanctuaries every Lord's Day when the people are assembled for worship. On former occasions we have seen this same gentleman in our revival meetings, his eyes suffused with tears, his voice loud in praise of God, and his mouth open in exhortation and prayer for the unregenerate of our city; and the hearts of many were drawn towards him as a teacher sent from God. But the sword of the spirit is not in his hand on this occasion. He has laid that aside, and taken up that "murdering engine and implement of war," the sword of steel, with which he has sworn to take the life of opposing enemies. If he ever occupied the high and holy position of an embassador of heaven, O how assuredly has the mighty fallen! The Master whom he professes to follow in "secret said nothing." But this professed messenger of heaven has creeped into the dark recesses of the mystic lodge, and from the wine-cup in his hand, made from the skull of a human being, created in the image of God, drinks double-damnation upon his own soul, "should he violate or transgress any obligation in Masonry or the orders of Knighthood which he has heretofore or may hereafter be instructed in." (See Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 120.)

It's a mystery to me how a professed follower of Christ can become a partaker of these sinful and God-dishonoring practices. The early apostles of Christ could not afford to quit their holy mission and serve tables, even for the necessities of the poor saints; but our modern apostles can lay aside the holy robes of their office, and receive to the ball-room and the banqueting hall the wine drinker and they that are fond of the dance. Terpsichore and Bacchus are the gods they worship. The following bill of fare will speak for itself:

THE BALL.

Warren's orchestra then began the dancing programme, which was opened with a waltz, and in a few minutes the floor of the immense hall was covered with happy dancers, whose enjoyment of the dulcet strains was proof that they would not be tempted away till

"Morning shows her silver ray."

There were a great many more present than could find places for the dance, but these were soon straying away to other places of amusement.

THE BANQUET

was served in the ordinaries, where full arrangements were made in the excellent style of the hotel, and for which that establishment is so justly celebrated. There is no need to describe this. Only those who were present and enjoyed it could appreciate it. The following is the bill of fare:

PROVOKE.

Saddle Rock Oysters.

OYSTERS.

Pickled. Oysters a la Delmonico.
Oysters au Gratin.

HOT RELIEVES.

Fillet of Beef, a la Richelieu.
Breast of Grouse, aux Champignons.
Chicken Croquets, a la St. James.

ORNAMENTAL DISHES.

Boned turkey, with truffles; champagne jelly; chicken salad, a la Pompadour; mayonaise of lobster, a la Neapolitan; boned prairie chicken, decorated; baked Westphalia ham, champagne jelly; Kentucky spiced beef.

COLD DISHES.

Sliced breast of turkey,
Smoked buffalo tongue,
Boned capon, with aspic jelly,
Pate de Fois Gras, a la Strausburg,
Premium "Fosters" hams.

Pate Degibier, a la Charte.
Roman Punch.

GAME.

Prairie grouse, currant jelly;
Blue-wing duck, with plum jelly;
Pheasant, with apple jelly.

CONFECTIONERY. CREAMS AND JELLIES.

Madiera wine jelly, Charlotte a la Russe, St. George,
Vanilla ice cream,
Blanc mange, a la claret wine jelly, fancy. Chocolate.

DESERTS.

Bananas, Apples, Havana Oranges, Figs, Raisins, Dates.
Vienna Coffee.

No hard times about this bill of fare. Those would-be gallant heroes and their companions had a feast sumptuous enough. I wonder if they had even one thought in their hearts of the starving poor in our midst, who didn't possess even the privilege of the dogs spoken of by the Syrophenician woman, who was permitted to eat of the crumbs that fell from their master's table.

O Charity, Charity, methinks thou must have fled to some sequestered spot and hid thy blushing face beneath the shadows of thy drooping wing. X. Y. Z.

Cease Agitating.

My Dear Bro. Post:—I am not a member of any secret organization, but would it not be for the glory of God and the good of the church, and also, my dear brother, for your interest to cease this agitation? I think, my dear brother, you are laboring under a false impression when you state a large number signed a petition. I have been a member of the Masonic order but never took such an obligation as you state in the circular. I am afraid you will get into trouble.

Rochester, N. Y.
Feb. 3. 1877.

Dear Brother.— * * * There can be but one side to this affair of Masonry. The question is, Is it as represented? You admit it is, substantially, in denying Masonic allegiance. (I do not suppose you were expelled from the order.) If it is then duty is clear. God and Mammon are not one. Christ and Baal are two — deduction, Methodism and Masonry are enemies, and cannot dwell together. Your duty then, is clear; so is mine. If you know Masonry to be profane and warn not your brother, then what? His blood will be required at your hands if he perish. We may fear man lest we injure ourselves here. Alas! do we fear God? Dear brother, may I be candid and ask you a few questions? If you could gain the favor of the community, exalt your reputation and greatly increase your salary, and make yourself generally popular by denouncing Masonry, which you know to be anti-Christ and blasphemous, or terribly profane, would you not denounce it? If, instead of endangering you could secure your life, would you not warn the multitude who must now through your reticence drink the bitter cup in the lodge and of it? Can you stand by and see souls beguiled into sin—the iniquity of Masonry—and be guiltless? I pity you; you dare not warn your brother; or if you dare you do not, and he will fall where you fell, never perhaps to escape, and his blood will be required at your hands. On this score you are more responsible than if you had never compromised. You say you never took the obligation mentioned. Then you never was made a Royal Arch Mason. If you were, then you have ten thousand, even Masonic, witnesses against you.

A few years ago a brother minister was made a Master Mason. He said to me, "It is a good institution." He saw no evil in it. All this he said in substance. Only two years ago he said, "Bro. Post, Masonry is a horrible and wicked institution. Said I, "Am I right in my course?" He replied emphatically, "You are." All seceders who speak the truth say the same thing. Morgan's death proves it.

Will you, a minister of Jesus Christ, make apology for Masonry? What care I, through the grace of God, for all that man can do unto me. I fear your sympathy is not sound. "I am afraid you will get into trouble," you say. Trouble, my dear brother, what kind of trouble do you mean? Is it persecution secret and terrible? I have it. What more have you to offer for denouncing the curse of the world? "Fear not them who kill the body," said our blessed Saviour. I would blush at my hypocrisy if I refused to suffer for truth's sake. Yes, I would. "Cease this agitation," you say. What, is it "for the good of the church" to hold our peace and let Satan work his work of death? I trow not. There is a tribunal greater than a conference or Grand Lodge where we shall meet together to answer for our conduct here. The Lord being my helper, I intend to appear there justified as to this subject of profane Masonry, and everything else like it. Bishops, presiding elders and a compromising people cannot harm us there. Nor am I afraid of them here; nor envy them their joys in the persecution of the advocates of truth. Nor, do I hate, but pity and pray for them. If all their honors, wealth and position were proffered me on condition of being like them or as a bribe to silence "agitation" as you choose to call it, I would spurn the offer. Do you understand?

Is not a man "once a Mason always a Mason," unless he has seceded? It is so understood by more than himself. If you are not an Anti-mason you must be a Mason still, in your heart at least. A certain presiding elder said to me, "Bro. Post, I am not a Mason; have not been in a lodge for years. "But Bro. P." I replied, are you not one in your heart?" He replied, "Yes." The blood of Morgan cries out against him. Affectionately and respectfully, W. Post.

Valuable Articles.

Vineland, N. J., Feb. 13, 1877.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

Dear Brother—I have read, with deep interest, two communications contained in your issue of the 8th inst. The one, "The Church Walking with the World," by Mrs. Edwards. This admirable poetical effusion is most graphically and truthfully descriptive of the present state of the church, in its sympathies and affinities with an ungodly world. But how deplorable! When will the church of Christ come back to her primitive purity and simplicity?

The other article is the sermon by Rev. A. M. Milligan, on "The Degeneracy and Danger of the Republic." This sermon ought to be read by all the families in the land. I am glad that there are Reformed Presbyterian ministers and churches in our land, who dare to be outspoken in exposure of the degeneracy and abominations of the present age, and the peril of this nation. The Lord increase the number a hundred fold!

I regard these two articles in this number of the Cynosure worth more than the cost of your periodical for a whole year.

If you have some extra numbers of this issue, and will send them to me, I will see what I can do with them to increase your subscription list. O. Wilbur.

American Party Clubs.

If the American party expects to go on to victory it must now begin to organize its forces for the future battles. Its enemies are perfectly organized by the slyest of tricksters. The men who manage the Republican and the Democratic organizations are perfect craftsmen, who know all the ropes and understand all the wires "in the known world." They know the value of political clubs or local organizations.

Now, there are thousands of anti-secret voters who are not acting with the Cynosure readers. They agree with us, but do not help us. The remedy is to organize "American Clubs" at once. And we must devise plans to draw in all our men, and to get them to feel at home with us. Let us have many suggestions, and also many good examples of active work.

We suggest town and township clubs, or bands, fortnightly meetings, public invitations, readings of anti-secret speeches or articles, debates, tract scatterings occasionally, speeches, etc. Anything to attract and enlighten the voters. We can do many things and much good, if we try. We can give the great American party an introduction to many Americans. We can get readers for our papers and all our publications. Reader, go ahead!

Our Mail.

T. W. Crandall, Greenwich, N. Y., orders tracts, and writes:

"A great many young men in this vicinity are Good Templars and I think a distribution of these tracts might save some of them from joining the Freemasons, whose order is popular here. May you be prospered in your war against these accursed secret societies."

Rev. A. I. McFarland, Stanton, Pa., writes:

"Just now the grangers are taking possession of the northern part of our county. They have almost made a clean sweep of the Presbyterians and Methodists and Episcopalians, leaving what few Covenanters and United Presbyterians there are of us to get along as best we can. I have been requested to lecture against the grange at a place where they are the strongest."

Richard Green, LaGrange, Ind., writes:

"I spent four days with Dr. Cook, of Albion, Noble county. He is a good lecturer and ought to be well supported. * * I hope he will be well sustained in the State for he is worthy and has a family to support."

Victor Gishwiler, Lena, Ill., writes:

"Sorry that you published such a humbug as you did in the Cynosure of December 28th, about lots for $1 in Texas."

We are sorry, too. Before we published it we corresponded with the agent who sent us the advertisement, who assured us there was no humbug about it, and sent us a certificate of the Secretary of Graceland county, Texas, stating that the plat of the town was recorded in his office. A Texas land agent, having his office in this city, tells us that this Secretary has subsequently been impeached and deposed. We will be even more cautious than we have been hereafter, although we reject many advertisements that are offered us now.

Rev. John C. King, Chase City, Va., writes:

"I am in full sympathy with the principles advocated by the Cynosure, and if I had the means would be glad to put it into the hands of one hundred persons. I sympathise with publishers and editors in your self-denying and poorly paid labor."

A stranger from Hesperian College, Woodland, Cal., writes:

"Dear brother in Christ: Suffer this salutation from a convert from Judaism, who is a missionary among his brethren according to the flesh in California. Last evening I withdrew from the order of Good Templars after having worked with and for them the last nine years and reached the office of State Deputy G. W. C. T. of California. This order is somewhat related to the cause of Christ, but I drew out for the simple reason that I heard more cursing in the lodge than in our streets. I am still a temperance man, that is, do not smoke or drink spirituous liquors. I declare that your paper is an excellent one and will try to send you some subscriptions in the future. You are doing a great work in exposing secret societies."

John Bowman, Albion, Ind., writes:

"I have been an Anti-mason ever since Morgan's time. The Masons have now carried their works of darkness into the church of God and have nearly destroyed it in northern Indiana. We have made war upon them and I will never give up until I know that I am whipped."

James Robinson, Washburn, Ill., writes:

"The Masons here run me on account of the small vote that was cast, but I tell them we are scattering the seed this year and sowing it on good ground and in four years it will bring forth fruit abundantly."

We have received the news from Taylorville, Ill., that our friend and supporter, G. C. Washburn is dead. Let this admonish us all to do with our might whatsoever our hands find to do, "for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest."

Jas. R. Clerihan, Woodson, Ill., writes:

"By the kindness of a friend at Jacksonville, I have become a reader of your valuable paper. I do approve of its teachings. I now propose to hold a discussion on secrecy on the night of the 23d of February, at Woodson. My question will be, Resolved, That secret societies are detrimental to free government."

Phil. Beck, Woodland, Cal., writes:

"The public seem not yet enlightened enough on the subject, and many of those right at heart do not have boldness enough yet to come out openly. Meanwhile we in California are scattering tracts and light with them, and are commencing to marshall our forces for the coming conflict. We have now about $500 promised for a lecturer's salary and expect to get more. When we have engaged an able, willing, and courageous man to lecture, which I desire to do by our next annual meeting, we propose to move."

J. F. Fortner, LeGrand, Ia., writes:

"If you publish the Cynosure send me a specimen copy."

How many persons in your locality, reader, who do not know that the Cynosure is published weekly? How many who have not been invited to subscribe for it?

Reuben Cox, Boise City, Idaho Ter., writes:

"By chance I picked up a paper by the roadside bearing the name of Christian Cynosure and dated November 30th. I did not know there was a paper printed which contained so many rich facts concerning the kingdom of darkness that prevails among the human family. I believe the paper and its tracts would have a good influence on the minds of the people of Idaho Territory. I am near sixty years of age and never have belonged to a secret institution. None except the Baptist church of God. You may be sure I desire the circulation of the paper and tracts in Idaho Territory."

Mrs. H. C. Hayden, Harmon, Ill., writes:

"We have been having a good revival here during the last six weeks. Thirty-one have come forward for prayers. Most of them have found peace in believing. Our meetings are still in progress."

Geo. H. Stiles, Green Point, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"Having come across your agent in the Centennial Exhibition I was induced by him to subscribe for your paper and I am glad I did so. I find it is an excellent one. I have always held Masonry in high esteem and regarded it as a fine thing. I never looked at it in the light you put it. If what you say about it is true you do right. I confess your paper has opened my eyes considerably. This place is a very hot bed of lodges of all kinds of orders, and they are into everything. One Masonic lodge laid the corner-stone of a new church a short time since, which they had no right to do. How that church will succeed I know not, but it is Masonry inside and out. Its pastor goes about loaded with emblems; its members have ten words for the lodge to one for Christ."

Abner Branson, West Branch, Ia., writes:

"I rejoice that Moody has given his voice on the side of truth concerning secret societies. If Christian ministers everywhere would raise their voices against them, as some are doing, and stand for the right, fearless of what the world might say of them, I believe that the church at least might be cleared from their influence."

James L. Briggs, Leesville, Mo., writes:

"I am not behind in desires for the downfall of secret societies for I believe they are the powers of darkness and will fall before the light, for light makes manifest."

S. McConoughy, Atkinson, Ill., writes:

"I think a word against card-playing is needed. I believe cards are the devils weapons, leading people into the pit."

Rev. R. J. Thompson, Halsey, Oregon, sends a club of eleven subscriptions for a year, and writes:

"I have done all I could to extend the circulation of this paper, which is doing much to open the eyes of people that they may behold the social, political, moral and religious evils connected with organized, oath-bound secret societies. The light of truth is spreading. The darkness of ignorance and superstition is fleeing. May the good work go forward until the entire world of man shall be enlightened, regenerated and redeemed, and shall rejoice in the light and liberty of the Gospel. I consider the Cynosure a great assistant in fighting the battle for the truth and right."

G. B. Owen, New Goshen, Ind., writes:

"May God bless all who have the courage to write and speak the truth in reference to oath bound secrecy, especially editors and preachers."

Amos Whitson, Valley Mills, Ind., writes:

"Two votes were all that were cast for the American party in Valley Mills, Marion county, Indiana."

James B. Blair, Darlington, Wis., writes:

"You may call me a life subscriber."

Henry LeRoy, Hartland, Wis., writes:

"My heart is with you in the great work of reform, in trying to overthrow the works of darkness, but I am placed in a hard spot here among secret societies. We have Masonry and Odd fellowship, grangerism and Temples of Honor. What will be the end of such work God only knows, but I mean to keep working and doing what I can to put down and overthrow the works of the devil. I have been working for three months and I have been from house to house. I have given my paper to nearly all the church members, but they seem to love darkness rather than light. I have failed to get up a club. Our minister here is a secret man. He goes heart and soul in that direction, and has done me much harm. The Lord reward him."

A. J. Weaver, East Sandy, Pa., writes:

"The Lord being my helper I shall raise the banner of truth amidst the hosts of sin."

W. W. Stringer, Ridge, O., writes:

"Send your excellent paper. It is rare, rich and racy; full of cheering news that comfort the true believer in Jesus. I am poor, but bless God, the poor have the comforts of the Gospel. Go on; drive the enemy to the wall. They that conquer shall wear the crown."

C. H. Ramer, Lewiston, Minn., writes:

"I wish that I was able to buy books and tracts and travel and scatter them broadcast over the land like autumn leaves. I have traveled some three hundred miles this winter. I took an arm load of Cynosures with me and gave them all away."

L. Sperry, Waupun, Wis., writes:

"I feel encouraged in our reform from the fact that there are so many Christian people, men and women, engaged in it. The Lord bless every one of them."

Chas. Follott, Byron, Ill., writes:

"A few days ago I was in Oregon, and as usual got a daily on the arrival of the train, and almost the first thing that met my eye was a notice of a prayer-meeting at 221 W. Madison St. * * * There are many poor souls crushed and galling under the chains of voluntary slavery, who in other things know where to go and who to go to for help. They cannot go to those with whom they are most intimately associated, and the power of Satan over them is so great that their hands drop hopelessly and they remain crushed in impotency and despair. Let us plead with all the earnestness and with all the ability God gives us, by the cloud of witnesses and his own promises, as being bound with them, that they may rejoice in the glorious liberty of the Gospel of Christ."

Wm. Knight, Hulberton, N. Y., referring to the present editor of a prominent religious journal, writes:

"He is a private Anti-mason who don't know what Masonry is because he never joined the lodge; never was bitten by a mad dog and don't know what hydrophobia is. I think it is time for all Christians to feel for the pillars of this heathen temple and call upon God to help them pull it down. Let every well-wisher to humanity say, Amen. I am an old man, past my three score and ten. I was living in Genesee county, when Morgan was kidnapped, and bought one of his books, and have it in my possession at present I have been circulating Anti-masonic papers and books for the past three years."

Luther Wood, Newark, Mich., writes:

"My family are all constant readers of the Cynosure."

Dan'l Countryman, Rochelle, Ill., writes:

"Prof. C. A. Blanchard preached for us Sabbath, February 4th at 10:30 A. M. Also at 7 P. M. We were much pleased with the sermons. I cast the only Anti-masonic vote in Lynnville township. My half-hearted and Masonic friends told me I was throwing my vote away. Well, that is like throwing wheat away. They don't look at the increase. If I don't live to see it others will. It does me good to vote my principles. One man with God and the right is a majority."

Geo. M. Smith, Linden, Mich., writes:

"We felt it a duty we owed to our country, God and humanity to cast our votes with the loyal party and know that we had a government. Hence the voting capacity of our anti-secret friends was but little tested. Yet I have the pleasure of reporting two American party votes cast in this township, and five in the adjoining township of Mundy. The two votes cast in this township of Fenton were not reported in the canvass. I purposely called upon the clerk to ascertain the fact. After looking over his list we found two votes cast by the American party. It appears these votes when found by the Board were laid aside, not counted. Our design is to renew our efforts in this conflict with secrecy in the spring election; meet in caucus and nominate candidates for office whose principles are strictly Anti-masonic. No more compromise with secretism."

LESSON NOTES.—1. Whirlwind: A storm, tempest. 2. Tarry here: Why? To prove Elisha's fidelity? Rather because Elijah wanted no human eye to witness his departure from the world. I will not leave thee: His devotion will not endure a separation. 3. Sons of the prophets: Disciples, or pupils in the schools of the prophets. At Bethel: The very place where Jeroboam had established calf worship. 1 Kings 12:29. From thy head: From being thy head or leader. 8. His mantle: Probably made of sheepskin, and long the badge of his prophetical office. Compare Matt. 3:4. Wrapped it together: Folded, or rolled it like a twisted cord. 9. A double portion: The eldest son's inheritance. Deut. 21:17. 10. A hard thing: For man, an impossible thing: but not for God. Matt. 19:26. See me: This should be a token that his request was granted. 11. Chariot of fire: One of the multitude composing God's invisible army. See Ps. 68:17, and 2 Kings 6:17, and compare 2 Sam. 5:24. Went up by a whirlwind: Not, necessarily, in the chariot of fire, as is popularly assumed. 12. Rent them: In token of his sorrow at the loss of his leader.—Scholar's Quarterly.

Why was Elijah selected for the singular honor of being translated? Several probable reasons may be suggested. 1. To make a powerful impression on that degenerate age. Extraordinary necessities demanded extraordinary remedies. It was so in Enoch's time. What more likely to move Elijah's countrymen, and seal his own work, than a glorious, deathless ascent to heaven? 2. Because of the peculiar character of his mission. He came a reformer, a protestant, a judge. He did a work of which fire and heavenly displays are ever the chosen accompaniments and symbols. Deut. 4:24; 1 Thess. 4:16; Rev. 1:17. It was meet that he should depart like a judge. 3. To furnish a type of Christ's ascension. Almost every other phase of Christ's life and doings was foreshadowed. Why not this? 4. To give an earnest and an assurance of the glorification of all saints.—Evangelical Repository.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1877.

The United Brethren vs. The Lodge.

* * * "A convention of laymen in the United Brethren church in the State of Ohio, was held a fortnight ago at Westerville, in that State. A resolution favoring the change of the prohibitory law in that church against secret societies, to unequivocal testimony against them was among the topics considered, and was lost, by a vote of 28 to 26. President H. A. Thompson, of Otterbein University, took strong ground against the resolution, and in favor of the law as it now is."

We clip the above from a late Christian Statesman, and it shows trouble ahead for one of the best church organizations in this country and world. Some one has likened the lodge to a fighting gander, which, if knocked down and grubbed in the dirt, if the breath of life is left in him will get upon his legs, run back to his geese and gabble and brag and chatter as though he had whipped instead of being whipped.

It is now, we think, some eight or twelve years since the General Conference of the "United Brethren in Christ" met at Lebanon, in Pennsylvania, and after an earnest discussion, lasting through days, sustained their rule excluding unrepentant Freemasons by a very decided vote. They also then elected Prof. Milton Wright editor of the Telescope. in place of Mr. D. Berger, the previous editor, who had proved weak-kneed against the aggressions of the lodge. Not long afterward a preacher-doctor in Indianapolis carried the majority of his church into open secession; and if the lodge had not as many lives as a snake, whose jaws will bite after the head is sundered from the body, the United Brethren would have had peace. But money was found, and a pretence invented to start "The United Brethren Tribune," in Harrisburg, Pa., which was, and if still running is a disguised Masonic organ, run by pious jack-masons. Now we have a laymens' convention at Westerville, Ohio, voting 26 against the anti-secret rule to 28 in favor! No matter what the pretended object of that "laymens'" convention, it was raised and run in the interest of the lodge. So large a vote to let in the excluded Masons into the churches was no accident, but a matter of forethought and plan. Only think what cheek is required to invade a modest, self-denying church organization, opposed to secrecy from its manger birth in Isaac Long's barn, Lancaster county, Pa., more than one hundred years ago. These men, knowing that their church has been committed against the secret worships from the first, enter the sacred enclosure, violate in practice first its fundamental principles; undertake to revolutionize it; are beaten: renew the attack, are beaten again, but like the drubbed gander in the illustration opening these remarks, they swagger, bluster, vote, and crow to their associates in error as though the great and good church which they trouble and disgrace had no rights which a Freemason was bound to respect. Verily, the Canaanite is still in the land.

We feel like suggesting to the United Brethren whether some change in the wording of their action might not meet their wicked assailants with better effect. They speak of "legislation" and of "laws" enacted by their church. But the demons worshipped by the lodge dread no human legislation. Their language is: "Jesus I know,—but who are ye?"

The founders of the American Presbyterian church (1788) say: "We hold that all church power is only ministerial and declaratory;" that Christ is the only lawgiver, and the Bible the only law for his church. This, doubtless, is what the U B. General Conference mean, viz: that their "laws" are only declarations that such are the laws of Christ. Whether these turbulent spirits might be cast out more effectually by confronting them directly with Christ, instead of the church of the United Brethren in Christ, they can judge, perhaps, better than we.

Eldership in Wheaton.

The largest church meeting ever held in Wheaton, assembled in the College chapel, February 22d, evening, to discuss eldership as held and practiced in the College church. This church, though Congregational in that it is strictly self-governing, yet professes to be strictly undenominational, or rather unsectarian, is called simply "The First Church of Jesus Christ in Wheaton," after the manner of the original churches of New England; and has, as they had, a simple standing committee of discipline, called by the Bible name of "elders," and ordained by the prayers of the church. It excludes adhering, unrepentant Masons, testifies against dancing by its members; takes an annual collection for the National Christian Association; is unfriendly to the use of tobacco, and professes, by its manual, to be governed by the Word of God, simple and pure; yet fellowships all Gospel churches which hold to Christ however much they may differ from it in their construction and understanding of the Bible.

Such a church cannot but be bitterly hated by the "god of this world" and his worshippers in the lodge and out.

The arguments for and against eldership brought out in this discussion both in the meeting and outside were these:

1. That elders were simple pastors or preachers.

To this it was replied that some preached habitually, others occasionally, but all had oversight as a committee of discipline. See 1 Tim. 5: 17.

2. That multiplying officers endangered the liberty of the people.

To this it was answered that giving up elders and leaving the church in the hands of professional preachers was what endangered the liberties of the people.

3. That the Congregational churches in New England rejected and dropped elders as a remnant of aristocracy brought from Europe.

To which it was answered that elders were in the Cambridge Platform of 1648 in the purest days of liberty; that the Platform was "Gathered out of the Word of God," as they say in the title-page; that the Puritans learned it in their Bibles in the jails of London where "aristocracy" incarcerated them. And that eldership was slowly given up by the New England churches from 1708 when the Saybrook Platform was adopted, until 1740, when George Whitfield expressed the opinion that a majority of the New England pastors were unregenerate men. See his letter to England in Tracy's "Great Awakening."

The arguments against the petition to abolish eldership in the Wheaton church were:

1. It is a divine institution. That there is no such thing as a committee, standing or occasional, in the whole Word of God; and therefore dropping the name and ordination prayer of elders is to take out God's ordinance and put a human substitute in its place; which is forbidden.

2. That all the ancient churches, and more than eight millions of modern church members, including Presbyterians, have a board of elders.

3. That deacons, though properly sharing with elders the general oversight of the church, have their special duties pointed out in the sixth chapter of Acts; as the elders have their's in Acts 20: 28.

4. And finally, a report by Dr. E. Beecher in the Illinois State Association, 1859, was cited declaring that there was a board of elders in the primitive churches who performed this duty; and great emphasis was laid on a report of Dr. Leonard Bacon to the great Congregational Council of 1865, Boston, which contains these words:

"While no church can be rightly subjected to a presbytery exterior to itself, every church should have its own presbytery," (or board of elders.) The same report to the great Council declares that the primitive or Bible churches had such elders; and as the Wheaton church manual declares it to be a Bible church and not a denominational one, it was bound by its solemn covenant to have the Bible elders.

The debate was earnest and solemn and conducted almost entirely in the spirit of Christ. The vote stood for eldership 55; against, 49; required to change the manual 110, or a two-thirds vote. So the eldership was sustained.

As the petitioners for the abolition were all willing to have a committee of some kind, standing or occasional, they really only asked to have the Bible name and ordaining prayer dropped; the elders only having the duties of a committee of discipline—no more nor less. But to strip that office of its Bible name and the prayers of their brethren, and leave nothing but a human committee in the place, is secularizing the church of God.

Washington's Birthday and the Chicago Association.—The meeting held at 221 West Madison street, February 22nd, in commemoration of the birth of George Washington was a pleasant occasion. The meeting although not large was respectable in numbers, and most present seemed interested in the brief exercises of the evening. In the absence of the President of the Chicago Christian Association, Rev. J. W. Bain, J. P. Stoddard called the meeting to order. After the reading of the 117th Psalm all united in singing "Rock of Ages" when Rev. E. S. Cook led in prayer. An essay followed by Mrs. E. A. Cook, on the Farewell Address and Home of Washington, which will appear in our columns next week. The chairman gave some examples showing how Freemasonry is false to its own professions and explaining how it controls all other interests that will tolerate its presence and thus becomes a conspiracy and a dangerous element in our country, against which Washington faithfully warned his countrymen.

The Blasphemy of Freemasonry.—J. H. H. Woodward, the indefatiguable opponent of secretism, has issued his second pamphlet under the title "Every Freemason a Blasphemer." It contains twenty-four closely printed pages written with the intense earnestness of one who knows the impious yet dreadful power of the lodge, and with a careful and exhaustive appeal to authority. In no work of this character have we seen so thorough an examination of Masonic authority. It should be circulated by the million to enlighten the honest and God-fearing in regard to the actual and awful character of Masonry as a system of false religion. We could wish friend Woodward had placed the title with which he begins the work on the title page, instead of the one chosen. It would have secured more readers and more unbiased ones. The work is for sale at this office, price 10c. per copy; 75c. per dozen; or by express $6.00 per hundred.

—The Illinois Lecturer has gone to Central Indiana, at the request of Secretary Stoddard, to speak at a number of points in Grant county.

The Spring Elections.

Whatever may be thought of the wisdom of our national political action against the lodge, no one who believes in the principles and platform of the American party can for a moment doubt the extreme importance and wisdom of making a distinct issue against secretism in all our local elections. By so doing we shall not only relieve our court houses from the control of the lodge and prevent the perversion of justice and waste of funds through the trickery aud dishonesty of men, who if not upheld by the lodge could neither attain to such places of power or hold them, but we shall prepare by this drill and experience for the next national campaign. Justice, patriotism and Christianity call the true friends of this reform to this work now.

HOW TO PROCEED.

Write out a simple call for a meeting of the friends of good government and get what signatures you can to it and hold the meeting, no matter if but five will sign the call and you have to meet in a barn for the want of even a school house. There nominate the best men who are true as steel to our principles and get the question squarely before your neighbors with all the facts at your command that bear on the reform.

Find out, at least approximately, what offices are now held by secretists and what proportion they are numerically entitled to. The need of a change will then be apparent. Let there be no delay in beginning this work for it will take time and labor to get signatures to the call, and the earlier your nominations are made the more time there will be left for the canvass before friends of this reform are pledged to support some other party.

For a meetiug to nominate town officers the following will answer for

A CALL.

We the undersigned voters of the town of ———, county of ———, State of ———, hereby call a public meeting of those voters who with us are opposed to secretism and ring-rule and in favor of good government to meet at ———, on the day of ———, A. D. 187–, for the purpose of nominating supervisor, collector, assessor, treasurer, clerk, two justices of the peace, two constables, three school trustees and three road commissioners for the town of ———.

Of course these offices vary in different States, and the call for the nomination of county officers will be different.

How many towns and counties shall the American party carry this spring?

Illinois township elections occur the first Tuesday in April.

EZRA A. COOK.

—The General Agent last week visited Flora, Winnebago county, Ill., at the invitation of Rev. W. H. Vandoren, the warm friend of reform and pastor of the Wesleyan church. Bro. Stoddard has been full of labors in getting the depository, reading-room and lecture hall in order.

—An arrangement has been made by which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of this city are to have the use of the hall in the Carpenter building every Monday evening, for a meeting in the interests of the temperance reform. This society has been a most valuable coadjutor of Mr. Moody's reform work here, and many a drunkard can point to its efforts as the means of his salvation.

—Past Master Ronayne returned from Crestline, O., last Thursday, satisfied that his visit had a very well defined effect on the lodge of that city, and that the reform has got well upon its feet. The debate of Monday and Tuesday evenings was followed by the third degree exposition. Elder John Finney of Mansfield, attended the meetings and sends the first report of them. He says Bro. Ronayne and Dr. Booth made a complete success in their debate.

News of the Week.

—Four Rear-Admirals of the United States Navy, Alden, Bailey, Davis and Wilkes, died last month. Wilkes was the commander of the United States exploring expedition (1838–42) and the discoverer of the Antarctic continent. He was also conspicuous as the captor of Mason and Slidell in the late war. Davis was for many years superintendent of the Naval Observatory at Washington. Admiral Bailey was another veteran officer, fifty-nine years in service. Alden was a younger man, who distinguished himself in the Gulf of Mexico during Farragut's operations.

—The papers for the pardon of Joyce, the last whisky-thief languishing in the penitentiary, have been made out at the office of the department of justice.

—The Russian consulate at Constantinople warns shipping merchants that torpedoes are being placed on the Black Sea coast between Sookgoom, Kale and Fort St. Nicholas. Guard-ships are stationed at Poti and Sookgoom (Kale) roadsteads, to indicate the course. Balaklava must not be entered without communicating.

—Emperor William, in opening the German Parliament last week, expressed the opinion that the peace of Europe will not be broken in consequence of the Eastern complications, basing that opinion upon the belief that the united demands of the Powers upon Turkey for guarantees of reform will be complied with by the Porte. and war thus averted. His Majesty, however, took occasion to add the significant remark that his government will continue to exercise its influence in behalf of the Christians in Turkey, and of the preservation of the peace of Europe, but, "above all things, strengthening its own good relations with the governments allied or otherwise friendly to it."

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 25.—At 12:50 a fire broke out on the stage of Fox's new American Theater, and at 1 A. M. the whole place was in flames. The fire spread with remarkable rapidity and communicated with Rogers' wagon warehouse. The Mercantile Library Building was in danger; also, the New York Mutual's new building at Tenth and Chestnut streets. All had left the theater before the fire broke out. The theater had a seating capacity for 3,000 persons, and was the popular resort for apprentices and newsboys, and had especial accommodations for loose women. The loss on the Library will be from $50,000 to $80,000.

—Besides the usual full and excellent expositions, the National Sunday School Teacher for March publishes some valuable articles on themes relating to the lessons for the month. Rev. E. L. Hurd, D.D., writes on "Elisha's Double Portion," Rev. E. F. Williams on "The Land Law of the Hebrews," a subject that teachers need to understand. and Rev. J. C. Taylor on "God's Care for Converts under the Old Testament Dispensation," a theme full of interest. Mr. J. B. T. Marsh gives an interesting account of the Oberlin Sunday School, under the title of "The Motor and the Machinery." Chicago: Adams Blackmer & Lyon Publishing Co.

The Home Circle.

I Know Not.

BY W. O. S.

I know not what's before me,
Nor where my pathway lies;
What dangers hover o'er me,
What judgments from the skies.
"Be faithful," said He, kindly,
But sinful flesh is weak,
And often go I, blindly,
To earthly pleasures seek.

I know not what's before me,
My God alone can tell;
And from his throne in glory,
"He doeth all things well."
I'm hoping, trusting, praying,
But oh my faith is small!
And feebly am obeying,
His gentle, earnest call.

I know not what's before me,
What earthly way is mine;
Unless "To tell the story,"
Of Jesus—God, Divine;
I'd place all on the altar—
My life, by being—all,
Oh why! why should I falter,
Or tremble at the call?

I know not what's before me,
While toiling here below;
But when in "realms of glory,"
As known, I then shall know,
For there my earthly vision
Will have the veil removed,
And in fair fields, elysian,
I, evermore, shall rove.

Fresh from the Fountain Head.

"Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them." Are we, even we, Protestant Christians, who acknowledge the Bible as our sole authority in spiritual things, sufficiently careful here? We pride ourselves on having our supply of the Water of Life from the Fountain Head; are we quite sure that there is no color in the water and no taste which does not properly belong to it?

What a host of religious books there are and have been in the world since we began to read: books of every sort and size and quality, differing from each other as much as the men and women who wrote them! And how we have been taught and preached to, and lectured to, and addressed, and plied in every sort of way for all these years! How can we be sure that the opinions and views which are the joint product of all these multifarious influences are really such as are "given by inspiration of God?" Only in one way. Only by the constant, independent study of the Scriptures themselves. Only by such conduct as that of the Bereans, who, though they "received the Word" preached to them "with all readiness of mind," yet "searched the Scriptures daily to see if these things were so." The mere reading of the Scriptures, as "reading" is generally understood will not do. The Bible is not like a great deal of our popular literature, which can be taken in by the most empty-headed and empty-hearted men and women without any effort. It is the book of all others that will least bear to be dealt with in a careless, easy-going way. Yet we fear that more than any other it is treated in this way; and what is the consequence? The more difficult parts suggest no idea at all, so that the exercise would be as beneficial and as sensible if the words were read backwards. The simpler parts may suggest some ideas; but what are they? Just the old ideas that have been in our heads before, and which have come from no one can tell where. Sermons we have heard, books we have read—it may be Paradise Lost, or the Pilgrim's Progress, or some religious novel, or some nameless tract—but most likely from those who had most to do with teaching us these things when we were young. Now, we do not say that the train of thought thus suggested is necessarily, or is even likely to be, an unscriptural one. That depends on whether you have read good books or poor books, whether you have been well-taught or ill-taught in your young days. But this at all events is certain: it does not come at first hand from the Bible. It is a second (or fiftieth) hand matter all the way through. There are people who read their Bibles more or less regularly the year round, and scarcely ever get a single new idea from their reading. There is a certain round of things which they have "learned and been assured of" long ago, and when the part which is read happens to touch one of these things, it sets the old thoughts a-going; when it does not come near any of them, it sets no thoughts a-going at all. The old thoughts, being old thoughts, were not of course derived from the Bible at that reading. Where did they come from first? Aye, that is the question!

We do not say that this method of reading the Scriptures is of no use at all, for these old trains of thought may be very good ones. It does not follow that a thought is useless because it is old. On the other hand it may be a very needful thought; and it may be a very valuable thing to have the old thoughts sent through the mind again. But in this way the peculiar advantage of reading the Bible is lost. If it is only old thoughts that are suggested, it is of no consequence what it is that suggest them. But when the mind is so exercised as to be actively engaged on the things which are written, so that they shall not be its own old thoughts that are turned over once again, but new and fresh ones, taken from the author whose work is being read, it is a different thing. Then the Bible becomes to us a Bible indeed—a revealer of the mind of the Spirit of God.

What is the reason that you sometimes hear the confession made by Christian people that they get more profit by the reading of what are called good books than by the reading of the Bible? Is it not because some of us are so much like children that we find it difficult or impossible to take our food, unless it is all cut up into little pieces and made ready for us to take down at once without any preparatory process? Is it not sometimes even worse than this, that some Christians are spiritually so dyspeptic that they must have their food digested for them before they can make use of it? In the Bible we have the raw material, so to speak, which must be worked up into the forms in which it is fitted for use. We have the mine from which the treasures are to be dug, the garden from which the flowers are to be gathered. It is better to have other people work up the raw material for us, dig out the treasure for us, gather the flowers for us—better this than nothing, certainly. But it would be far better if we could help ourselves—dig our own treasures, gather our own flowers, draw our own lessons, take and cut and eat and digest our own food. Only thus, at all events, can we get it at first hand. Only thus can we have the water of life fresh from the fountain head. To be plain the thing we are speaking of is a symptom of laziness. It is so convenient to have some good divine do all the work for us, and so much better than we can do making it all ready for use, done up, canned, labeled and everything. And it is good, very good, and even necessary to have these helps, if it were for nothing else than to show us how to go to work. But would it not be better if we did more of this work for ourselves? Is it not better and healthier, after all, though it be harder work, to go and gather the fruit from the trees and the bushes, than to have it brought in to us served up ever so nicely? And then we are sure of having the genuine article. The human instrumentality is not to be despised. It is God that gives us this as well as the other; but then he never intended, either, that the ministers of the Gospel or the machinery of the press should supercede the testimony of the Lord Jesus himself and of his apostles and prophets. And if we are careful to make the Bible our main study, not only reading it regularly, but following it closely, bending the mind to it, stopping at the difficult passages till we have mastered them, and looking at the easy ones till we make sure that the ease with which we understand them does not arise from our putting into them some old notions of our own, instead of getting out of them what the Spirit of God has put there—then we shall not only not be led astray in hearing of sermons, and reading of books, and listening to conversations, but we shall be in a position to get great good from them all. Being familiar with the standard of truth, we shall be able at all times to "gather the good into vessels, and cast the bad away."—S. S. World.

Paris.

Paris shows but little of the effects of its capture in 1870 by the Germans. The damage in 1871 by the Commune to some of its best buildings, is more marked, and not so fully repaired. The most conspicuous monument of the savage ruin of Communist leaders is the palace of the Tuileries, the residence of Louis Napoleon from 1852. It is still in ruins. The injuries of the late war have been chiefly repaired, and much progress also has been made in erecting new buildings, and making other improvements. The population in 1873 was 1,851,792, and it is now much greater than ever before, and rapidly growing. The republican form of government now prevailing seems very favorable to the prosperity of Paris. Whether it lasts or not it is, for the time being, less expensive to the people than monarchy or the empire. Financial prosperity prevails beyond all that political economists expected. The city was never more able than now to pay its portion of the public debt and of current expenses, municipal and national.

The future of France, or of "Paris, which is France," is without the bounds of satisfactory probability. It has had three republics, and that it now has is encompassed with many imperfections and infirmities. Whether such a people are capable of self-government remains to be tested by experiment. Theory answers in the negative. The family is the basis of a free state. Virtue and intelligence must go to together to secure a stable republic. What are the facts as gathered from the public statistics? The births in Paris in 1874 were 53,786. Of these 5,593 were in hospitals, 1,434 were illegitimate; still born, 4,236. The deaths were 40,759, and of these 26,612 died in their homes, 10,994 died in hospitals and prisons. Of the population, 140,000 are paupers. Nearly 21,000 are in the hospitals, 5,000 in prison. Foundlings and aged and infirm persons amount to 20,000. If "Paris is France" the prospect of self-government is discouraging indeed. The number of persons of fortune, or engaged in liberal pursuits, is put down at 140,000, or about one in thirteen of the whole population. Others make a living, but are able to save little. There are 22,000 rag-pickers. The number of servants is 90,000. The hands employed in factories number 300,000 men and 120,000 women. The wages of 17,200 of the women average from five to thirty cents a day, and of 88,700 from twenty-five cents to eighty cents a day. These statistics throw light upon the moral and industrial condition of Paris, which is certainly not very hopeful for the success of popular government.

The prospect does not improve by a view of the liabilities and expenses of the city and the State. The Paris Budget for 1876 presents for receipts and expenditures 204,859,675 francs, or over $41,000,000. This amount is raised from many sources, about four millions by direct taxation; twenty millions by entrance duties; two millions market duties; one hundred thousand, weights and measures; five hundred thousand, slaughter houses; two hundred thousand, stands rented on public places; one hundred and seventy-five thousand, burials; three hundred and fifty thousand, lots sold in cemeteries; seven hundred and twenty thousand, omnibuses, cabs, etc.; six hundred thousand, scavengering; and other such items. Almost every occupation is taxed; every car and cart, every horse and ass, that bears anything into the city, has to be inspected, and must pay a tax upon the value of the commodity for sale. It is not probable that such a people as the French, with such a limited and exposed territory, will continue to be either willing or able to meet such taxation as is necessary to pay expenses and liquidate the public debt, and keep up such an army and navy as the national safety and defence require. French citizens are made up chiefly of two antagonistic classes—Roman Catholics and infidels. The Papal church is the enemy of civil and religious freedom, and infidelity is lacking in the morality and humanity needed in a system of self-government. These classes will continue to be the prevailing forces in France. They can only be elevated and assimilated by a strong government in the hands of a wise ruler.—Herald and Presbyter.

Kindness and Love.

Kind hearts are the gardens,
Kind thoughts are the roots,
Kind words are the blossoms,
Kind deeds are the fruits;
Love is the sweet sunshine
That warms into life,
For only in darkness
Grow hatred and strife.

NASHVILLE, Feb. 17, 1877.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—I will send you a puzzle for your paper if you think it worth printing.

I am composed of seven letters.
My first is in loose but not in gain,
My second is in part but not in main,
My third is in spoke but not in wheel,
My fourth is in owl but not in eel.
My fifth is in stove but not in fire,
My sixth is in wheel but not ir tire,
My seventh is in early and also in late,
My whole is the strongest Anti-mason in the State.

I will send the answer to H. H. Hervey' enigma. It is "Edmond Ronayne." My father takes your paper and likes it.

Your little friend, CARRIE MOON.

ELDENA Ill., Feb. 18, 1877.

MR. EDITOR:—I am thirteen years old and like to work out puzzles. I send you the answer to the first enigma in the Cynosure of February 15, 1877. "Christian Cynosure." Yours truly,

GEORGE B. HELDMAN.

W. T. S. Smith, of Belpre, Ohio, answered both the enigmas of February 15th correctly, and sends us another very ingeniously contrived, but we think best not to print it because of its references to the holy Bible. If our young friends will read the article "The Bible a Plaything," in the Home Circle department of February 1st, they will see why we object to Scriptural puzzles, though we may have formerly encouraged them.

The Manly Boy.

"Is there a vacant place in this bank which I could fill?" was the inquiry of a boy, as with a glowing cheek he stood before the manager.

"There is none," was the reply. "Were you told that you could obtain a situation here? Who recommended you?"

"No one recommended me, sir," calmly answered the boy. "I only thought I would see."

There was a straightforwardness in the manner, an honest determination in the countenance of the lad which pleased the man of business, and induced him to continue the conversation. He said: "You must have friends who could aid you in obtaining a situation; have you told them?"

The quick flash of the deep blue eyes was quenched in the overtaking wave of sadness as he said, though half musingly, "My mother said it would be usele s to try without friends;" then recollecting himself. he apologized for the interruption, and was about to withdraw, when the gentleman detained him by asking why he did not remain at school for a year or two, and then enter the business world.

"I have no time," was the reply; "I study at home, and keep up with the other boys."

"Then you have had a place, already," said the interrogator. "Why did you leave it?"

"I haven't left it," answered the boy, quietly.

"But you wish to leave. What is the matter?"

For an instant the boy hesitated, then he replied, with half-reluctant frankness, "I must do more for my mother."

Brave words! talisman of success anywhere, everywhere. They sunk into the heart of the listener, recalling the radiant past. Grasping the hand of the astonished child, he said, with a quivering voice:

"My boy, what is your name? You shall have the first vacancy for an apprentice that occurs in the bank. If, meantime, you need a friend, come to me. But now give me your confidence. Why do you wish to do more for your mother? Have you no father?'

Tears filled his eyes as he replied: "My father is dead; my brothers and sisters are dead, and my mother and I are left to help each other. But she is not strong, and I wish to take care of her. It will please her, sir, that you have been so kind, and I am much obliged to you." So saying, the boy left, little dreaming that his own nobleness of character had been as a bright glance of sunshine into that busy world he had so tremblingly entered. A boy animated by the desire to help his mother will always find friends.—Selected.

THE ARCHER FISH.—That is a kind of fish with which we are not acquainted. It lives in the waters about the Java Islands. It is about half a foot long, and doesn't look very different from other fishes, except that it has a very long lower jaw, which it uses as a bow with which it shoots drops of water for arrows. When the fish wants his dinner he goes out with his bow and arrows—he always carries it with him—and shoots at flies and bugs of various kinds. His aim is so good that he never misses, and can hit a fly three or four feet off. The fly, when shot, drops; the fish gobbles it up, and soon has made a good dinner.

Power of Sight in Birds.

So keen is the sight of the condor of the Andes that if a carcass be exposed where the naked eye can detect none of these creatures in the horizon, yet in a few minutes they are seen streaming from all directions straight toward their hoped-for meal. But though birds be long-sighted, it is also highly necessary that they should see minute objects at a short distance. No entomologist will deny that an insectivorous bird must have keen eyes for short distances if it is to get its living with ease. A microscopic sight is scarcely less requisite for a grain feeding bird. The swallow, which plunges with such reckless impulse through the air will nevertheless seize a small insect as it dashes along with almost unerring certainty. Usually the prey is so small that the wonderful powers of the bird displayed in the chase cannot be observed; but sometimes, when the insect has large wings, this dexterity may be seen. The writer has seen a swallow seize, while in a headlong flight, the beautiful, scarce swallow-tailed butterfly, and shear out its sapid body from between the wings, and let them float severally down; and then not satisfied with a feast so little proportioned to the splendor in which it was dished up, glance round and seize the several pieces before they reach the ground. How, then, is a long sight and a keen short sight to be obtained from the same eye? This is done mainly by the aid of bony plates so disposed that the edge of one is capable of sliding over the edge of its neighbor; so that when the fibers of the muscle which unites them contract they compress the eye all around and make it more tubular, while the humors of the eye, thus subjected to pressure, cause the corona to protrude more, also the retina to be removed further from the lens.—Cassell's Popular Educator.

Tell it to Others.

Shall we not be continually telling unsaved men that we have got what they might envy? If they saw us winning Christ, and finding what delighted us, and kept us ever searching further, might they not be allured by such a discovery? If they saw that we had got a secret they knew nothing of, it would draw some one who fancy when they hear a few words about Christ often repeated that there is very little in Christ.

Home and Farm.

WARM FLOORS.—The most effectual arrangement would be some filling, acting as a fire and vermin-proof non-conductor. In Europe, where buildings are constructed more thoroughly and durably than with us, such materials as sand or ashes are used. The inodorous building paper can be put in more quickly, and with less trouble, as it can be tacked on beneath the joist without interfering with the lathers. Other material may be better in many cases, however, as well as cheaper, in this way: Lay a floor of cheap boards between the joists of the first or main floor over the cellar, fill between the joists with fine coal or wood ashes to the depth of an inch or two. Sawdust would be a better non-conductor, but not so good a protection from fire and rats. Sand is heavier, and not so good a non-conductor. Other material, as tanbark, may be found in some cases better than either. To prevent dust sifting into the cellar, use newspapers, etc., beneath the filling. If there are chambers, to be much occupied, there need nothing be done with the second floor, although a filling is good against fire and to deaden sound. But over the chamber ceiling let the best and safest non-conductor be used. Light material, to the depth of an inch or two, can be spread upon the lath after the plastering is dry. This, with a plain board floor above the ceiling joists will effectually prevent the escape of heat out of the top of the house, and protect the chambers from the sifting of snow through the roof.

EARACHE IN CHILDREN.—Where a child's ear becomes painful, as it often does, everything should be done to soothe it, and all strong irritating applications should be avoided. Pieces of hot onion or fig should not be put in; but warm flannels should be applied, with poppy fomentation. if the pain does not soon subside. How much children suffer from their ears—unpitied because unknown—it would probably wring the hearts of those who love them suddenly to discover. It is often very hard, even for medical men, to ascertain that the cause of a child's distress is seated in the ear, and frequently a sudden discharge from it, with a cessation of pain, first reveals the secret of a mysterious attack, which really has been an inflammation of the drum. The watchfulness of a parent, however, would probably suffice to detect the cause of suffering, if directed to this point as well as to others. If children cry habitually when their ears are washed, that should not be neglected; there is, most likely, some cause of pain. Many membranes are destroyed from discharges which take place during teething. Whenever there is a discharge of matter from the ear it would be right to pour in warm water night and morning, and so at least to try and keep it clean.

THE ORCHARD should receive careful attention during the winter months. The large limbs it is best to remove in summer, when the freely flowing sap induces rapid healing of the wounds. But all small limbs which need to be sacrificed may as well be removed now. The orchards should undergo a thorough inspection, and the greater portion of the young succulent growth among the larger branches be made acquainted with the saw and chisel. It is a great mistake to let the heads of fruit trees get thick and matted with small "suckers."

To Extinguish Kerosene Flames.—One of the most ready means is to throw a cloth of some kind over the flames, and thus stifle them; but as the cloth is not always convenient to the kitchen where such accidents are likely to occur, some one recommends flour as a substitute, which is said to promptly extinguish the flames. It rapidly absorbs the fluid, deadens the flames, and can be readily gathered up and thrown out of doors when the fire has been extinguished.

Your own Mason.—Small holes in white walls can easily be repaired without sending for a mason. Equal parts of plaster of paris and white sand—such as is used in families for scouring purposes — mixed with water to a paste, applied immediately and smoothed with a knife or flat piece of wood will make the broken place as good as new. As the mixture hardens very quickly it is best to prepare but a small quantity at a time.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

Enthusiasm.

[From a sermon in the Boston Tabernacle.]

You are a little afraid of it (enthusiasm) here in New England, but it won't hurt you to have a little more. I know there is a cry among very wise men against anything of this kind. They already begin to cry, "Undue excitement, large meetings." It is astounding to hear some people talk. When the meetings are very small, then they are mourning over the smallness of the meetings; then, when the Spirit of God does come, and the people do have ears to hear, and great crowds come, they become very much disturbed and say, "We are afraid of these great crowds. Now we must be very careful." We hear no complaints about politicians when they wake up a great deal of enthusiasm. I have seen Boston all on fire, politically. I happened to be here a few years ago when they took Anthony Burns out of Boston, and I never saw a city so excited. I never saw a city so moved. Talk about enthusiasm; every man was full of it. And yet. the minute you talk about getting a little fire into the church, a little enthusiasm into our hearts, a great many people shake their gray hairs and say, "I am afraid; now be careful." They jump on to the safety-valve to keep down the steam.

I have yet to find a man who succeeds in his ministry that does not feel some enthusiasm about it. I have yet to find a successful Sunday-school teacher that don't take up his work with some enthusiasm. For years I was superintendent of a Sunday school in Chicago, and I learned one lesson, if I didn't learn any more, and that was that a man or woman who had a class who didn't take hold of it with some enthusiasm didn't succeed. We want to get this eternal truth deep down in our hearts, that we can't have success unless we carry this enthusiasm into God's work. You will not find a very successful business man in Boston, but he carries enthusiasm into his business. I believe Joshua and Caleb were called two enthusiasts, when they came back after they went to spy out the country. I believe the man Gideon was called by a great many of the men of Israel an enthusiast. The idea of his going out to meet that great host with three hundred men, with nothing but pitchers in their hands. and candles in the pitchers! Who ever heard of such a foolish thing? Many men in Boston would say, "That man has gone clean mad." He was an enthusiast, but the Lord God of heaven was with him, and what we want is to get filled with this enthusiasm, and then it will be holy fire, and if we get that into our souls and hearts, then we shall see the work of God advance. We want it in the pulpits; we want it in the pews; we want it in the church. Some one said to me, "When are you going to preach to the unconverted?" I don't know as I shall preach to them at all. I want you to preach to them. We want two or three thousand sermons preached in Boston every day, every man and woman going out to speak for Christ. It is very easy to reach Boston when we have our hearts full of holy enthusiasm, and our hearts are all on fire with love of God and his work.

There will be some that will cry out: "That man has got zeal without knowledge." How many times have I heard that cry! I had a great deal rather have zeal without knowledge than knowledge without zeal. There are a great many who know a great deal who never tell it. There are a great many buried talents in Boston. If we are as enthusiastic for Christ as we ought to be, there will be a cry raised against us. Some will call us fanatics, and some mad; but when that cry is raised against us, it is a very sure sign that we are right in the sight of the Master, because they said he was mad.

There is a man that I admire very much. I don't know as I admire his judgment in all things, but he is such an enthusiastic man. It is Garibaldi, and I am not an Italian either. I can see how he could fire the heart of all Italy. It was said that in 1867, when he was going up to Rome, they took him and threw him into prison; and he grabbed up his pen immediately and wrote to the people of Italy: "Let fifty Garibaldis be thrown into prison, but let Rome be free." He left Garibaldi behind, and was looking only at Rome; and when the love of Christ sinks so deep into our hearts that we forget ourselves, and want only to see Christ exalted and given to a perishing world, then the church will have a power, and all the hosts of death and hell cannot stand before it.

Temperance in the Boston Revival.

At the first young men's meeting held in Berkeley street church, Boston, Wednesday evening, January 31st, a young man arose, and said, "In the town where I live there is a reform club started. There are twenty-four young men who have signed the pledge, but some of them have fallen under temptation and broken their vow. And I rise to ask you young men of Boston to pray for these, that they may be brought back, and those who have not fallen may be kept." Mr. Moody, who conducted the meeting, sprang to his feet and asked if those twenty-four had had been converted. "No, they have not," was the reply. "Then," said Mr. Moody, "I would not give a snap of my finger for their reform. Mr. Story," said he, calling to a gentleman in the rear of the congregation, "come forward and tell your experience." Mr. Story, whom Mr. Moody introduced as formerly "the worst drunkard in New York," went to the platform and said: "One year ago I was a confirmed drunkard, and had been so for thirty years. I went to New York city. The Hippodrome meetings were then in progress, and from mere curiosity I went one evening. My heart was touched by Mr. Sankey's songs and by Mr. Moody's earnest words. I felt troubled; went away and tried, that night, to drown my feelings in rum. But when I became sober again I was still unhappy, and went once more to the Hippodrome, and after the sermon was over I went into the inquiry room. A dear Christian brother came and talked with me, and asked me if I wanted to be a Christian. I said, 'Yes, but this terrible appetite I have for drink is too strong; I never can subdue it.' He said, 'No, you never can, but God's grace can.' 'Oh, you don't know about it,' I said, 'I never can overcome it, and there's nothing in the world that can.' Then this man told me that he also had been a slave to the same awful tyrant of strong drink. But he had taken his appetite to God and had asked him to take it away, and it was all gone. Then he asked me to kneel down with him and pray. We knelt, and asked God to take away my awful thirst for rum. God answered my prayer. His grace came down into my heart and purified it. I have lived a year rejoicing in my deliverance from the chains of intemperance. I not only do not long for rum; I hate the smell of it. I have been where I could see and smell it, but it does not excite the least desire for it. And I bless God for his wonderful grace that has freed me from my sin. I am devoting myself to the work of telling those who are given to drink, that God can save them. The redemption of Jesus Christ is sufficient to take away the unholy appetite." Can the "philosophers of Jerusalem" account for this upon natural principles?—Zion's Herald.

Naaman.

There is one thing in Naaman's favor, he took the message, though he didn't like the messenger. So down to Jordan he goes and dips himself once in the water. He says to himself, "They will laugh at me terribly when I get back if I don't get cured of my leprosy, so I may as well try it." But when he comes up and looks to see if his leprosy is one-seventh gone, and sees no change at all, he begins to be discouraged. But he is in the way of obedience. God's prophet had told him to dip seven times, and he is going to do it. "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice." If ever you get out of the pit of Adam you must get out where you got in. He got in by disobeying God, and the way out again is obedience. So down he goes the second time. Now, if there had been some of these Chicago Christians there they would have said, "Well, Naaman, how do you feel now?" But still he didn't feel any better. Down he goes the third time, and again and again; still no change. The sixth time he comes out and shakes himself, and rubs the water off him, and looks at his flesh. Still no improvement. Once more, and now as he comes up he feels a thrill of death; as quick as he can get the water out of his eyes he sees that he is cured; his leprosy has floated away in the waters of Jordan—the waters of death and judgment—and now he comes out in a new body—a resurrected body. He lost his temper; then he lost his pride; then he lost his leprosy—that is generally the order in which proud, rebellious sinners are converted.

And now how happy he is. Hear him shout, "This is the happiest day of my life. I am cleansed; I am cleansed; I am a leper no more!" Away he goes to the prophet's house and offers him the gifts he has brought, but the prophet won't have anything at all. It would have spoiled this beautiful story if he had taken anything for his work. The gift of God is eternal life. You can not buy anything of God. Naaman takes back to Syria with him everything he brought—except his leprosy. And that is the way with you, sinner. When you come to Christ you haven't anything Christ wants except it be your sins. Naaman might have taken his leprosy back with him, if he had not obeyed the prophet and dipped seven times in Jordan, and you will take your sins down to death with you unless you submit your will to Christ. The battle has to be fought out on the line of your will. Who will obey him to-night? Who will believe him and trust him to-night? May God open your eyes and show you how you can be saved by just believing in Christ.

Religious Intelligence.

—Major Whittle having closed his work in Chicago to enter upon another in Dubuque, Iowa, the Farwell Hall noon meetings were led last week by Rev. Dr. Goodwin, Mr. Stebbins leading the singing. Last Sabbath Rev. J. Monroe Gibson preached to a large audience in the Tabernacle on "The Bible." It is announced that Maj. Whittle will return next Sabbath.

—The Chicago Presbytery having refused to endorse the establishment of a new Presbyterian church by Rev. H. M. Paynter, on the ground that it would not be self-sustaining, the movement took an independent form and last Sabbath the church was organized on an independent basis, in the west part of the city. Three elders and as many deacons were elected to assist the pastor in the spiritual oversight and charitable work of the church.

—Further reports of accessions to the city churches show the power of the work of grace here. The Scotch Presbyterian church has received 57 members in three months. The Evanston Presbyterian church lately received 42 members, all but two by profession.

—Rev. J. M. Snyder of Norton, Ill., a member of the corporate N. C. Association, has received 121 members into the Wesleyan church of which he has been pastor for about a year. He organized a new church last month.

—Another new Wesleyan church has been organized in Bureau Co., Ill., by Rev. G. P. Riley. Another has started at Hopkins Station, Mich.; and yet another near Cawker City, Kans., where 25 new converts have set their faces toward Jerusalem in the "wickedest place" on the Salmon river. At Bethel, Ind., Rev. J. W. Hiatt has been conducting a powerful revival in the Wesleyan church and 83 have joined it.

—Reports from Boston show that the Tabernacle is inadequate to accommodate the throngs, and that Mr. Moody has found it necessary to repeat some important sermons, those who having heard them when first preached, absenting themselves to make room for others: There are also large delegations from the surrounding towns who charter trains to come in, and that it has become necessary to issue tickets of admission in order to reach workingmen who would otherwise be crowded out.

—The Moravian is the great missionary church of the world. They carry on missions in Greenland, Labrador, the West Indies, the Mosquito Coast, in South Africa, Australia and Thibet. They have in these missions 92 stations, 307 missionaries, 1,530 native ministers and helpers, and 21,960 communicants.

—There comes from nearly every part of Canada intelligence of a deep and decided spiritual movement, as if the breath of the Spirit were passing over its snows with its genial and heavenly warmth. The different churches are crowded, and deep impressions are made under the simple preaching of the Word.

—Spurgeon's church in London is one of the largest and most influential through its training school and home and foreign missionary enterprises. The pastor has associated with him for the spiritual oversight of the flock a board of elders, ordained after the Scriptural manner.

Masonic Ring Rule in the Pennsylvania U. B. Churches.

Editor of Valley Spirit: In your last issue there appears an article relating to the proceedings of the U. B. Conference, held at Baltimore, Md., stating that in the examination of the local preachers, "Presiding Elder Colestock stated that he could not report favorably upon the character of J. M. Bishop, as he had heard of his using improper language. It was stated that he had purposely absented himself from the conference, knowing this matter would come up. In his absence the case was postponed." I have been an itinerant for twenty-five years; nine years Presiding Elder of Chambersburg, with an unblemished character all the time, and am still in the itinerancy. With regard to improper language, I did say, at the court held at Chambersburg some time ago that I thought it was useless to call ten or twelve witnesses to prove that a certain brother, who was passing through a process of trial, said there was a ring at the last annual conference, when the running gears of the ring wagon were present, one sitting as chairman, and the other as committeeman. (See Sterns' letter that was designed for the "Junto, Cabal, or intrigue paper," or nullification sheet, called the Tribune, but was by mistake placed in the wrong envelope and landed at the Telescope office, from there brought to light and exposed.) And when called upon to testify at that trial, I stated that I declined to testify before such an illegal and unlawful court as that was. I further said that I was done hearing or paying such men, and say so now.

With regard to my absenting myself from conference, Bishop Dickson preached at Salem church a few weeks before conference. I announced an appointment at conference time. The Bishop said, "Make that appointment providing you don't go to conference—I want you at conference." I remarked, "Did you hear of the high-handed conduct of Colestock & Company since the death of Bishop Edwards?" (Implying the efforts put forth by that ring to crush every man that would not bow to nullificationism. See Sterns' letter, "We will silence the fanatics," &c.) The Bishop remarked he did, "and I want you there to help to settle the matter." I answered that I did not wish my Christian feelings harrassed by such fellows as Colestock and his coadjutors. As to purposely absenting myself from conference, &c., I pronounce it an infamous and unmitigated falsehood.

Mr. Editor, I have the honor to belong to a church that has been in existence 100 years, now numbering 145,000 members, and from its origin was opposed to three giant evils, viz: slavery, intemperance and secret oath-bound societies. (Otterbein, founder of the church. See Unity Magazine, Vol. I. page 127.) The constitution of the church says "There shall be no connection with secret combinations," and this constitution cannot be altered unless by request of two-thirds of the whole society. Will nullificationists please take notice? And in the language of the lamented Bishop Edwards, "Any man or set of men who prove traitors to their church will prove traitors to anything else." Now be it understood that for my loyalty to the principles of the church to which I belong, these fellows are pursuing me. Yet none of these things moved me; and to all loyal ministers and members of the church I would say you will find the door-string hanging out; but to nullificationists we would say, stand from under. I subscribe myself fearless and free,

JAMES MADISON BISHOP.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

TRUE MASONIC CHART; OR, HIEROGLYPHIC MONITOR.

BY JEREMY L. CROSS, Grand Lecturer.

With a Memoir and Portrait of the Author, Containing all the Emblems explained in the Degrees of entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason. Designed and arranged agreeably to the Lectures.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry.

A PRACTICAL Guide to the Ceremonies in the Degrees conferred in Masonic Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated edition. In cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 Cts.

Although this Monitor is extensively used in the Lodge, especially in conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an "exposition," and not allowed as authority.

Allyn's Ritual of Masonry.

ILLUSTRATED by a large number of Engravings, and containing a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, Orange and Odd-fellows' Societies. Price, $5.00.

DUNCAN'S MASONIC RITUAL AND MONITOR,

PROFUSELY Illustrated with Explanitory Engravings, and containing the entire Ritual and work of the Order for the Seven Degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a Standard Text-Book in the Lodge, and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though almost every officer of the Lodge makes use of it. Price in cloth, $2.50.

FEMALE MASONRY.

MANNUAL OF THE ORDER OF THE EASTERN STAR.

Containing the Ritual, Symbols Lectures etc., of the five Degrees of "Adoptive Masonry:" Jeptha's Daughter; Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustrated and handsomely bound.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

Dnring the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. bnt funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of onr most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." No. subscribers Saturday, Dec. 9, 1876.....3,885

Since our number of subscribers was reported on the 8th of last December, about half of the subscriptions on the list have expired, many have been renewed, and now, after eleven weeks the list stands nearly as it did then. The gain from this time forward will be more apparent, rs fewer subscriptions expire during the coming month.

H. Nash, Monmouth, Ill., sends a club of ten for a year, and writes: "I think your paper ought to be in every house, and the sentiment in every heart. I find many business men and ministers of the Gospel tied to the monster beast with seven heads and more horns. Will try and make the list larger."

W. K. Morley, Brush Creek Iowa, sends a club of ten for a year, and writes: "I am in hopes to do better next time."

Anson Larabee, Crown Point, Ind., sends ten for a year, and writes: "I have at length succeeded in getting up a club of ten subscribers for the Cynosure. I find there are many more obstacles in the way of canvassing for the Cynosure than there should be in a Christian community like mine, the most formidable of which is the influence exerted by so-called ministers of the Gospel, who are in reality mere tools in the hands of secretists."

Clubs of five or more: From D. B. Heckert, Ogden Center, Mich., five for a year and one for three months, and writes: "I am going to have five copies of your valuable paper in this town."

J. H. Wilcox, Howell, Mich., sends five for a year, and writes: "I sent you one a short time since. Will procure four more, and more if I can. I would like to send one hundred if I could."

S. R. Morris Harmony, Ill., sends the paper to four persons for six months each.

Philip Bacon, Weatogue, Conn., sends three subscriptions for a year, one for six months, and five for three months each.

Geo. M. Smith, Linden, Mich., sends a club of one subscriber for a a year, two for six months, and two for three months, and writes: "I have succeeded in obtaining a few subscribers for your paper. Many complain of hard times, and are taking no paper at present, but intend to subscribe for the Cynosure as soon as possible."

Three clubs of ten names have been sent in during the past week.

John Macauley, Pittsfield, Ill., has completed his first club, and writes: "I have a good prospect for another."

J. A. Rouser, Bloomington, Ill., has just completed his first club of ten.

Isaac Bancroft, Belmont, Wis., sends three subscriptions for a year, and writes: "These are to be added to twelve I sent you some time ago, which makes in all fifteen, and I am in hopes of getting enough to make twenty in all, and perhaps more. I have never done much before, but have had very good success so far."

Fanny M. McClarty, W. Berkshire, Vt., writes: "I am in hopes by the end of the next three months to send you a few new subscribers. At least I shall try hard for them."

"Thos. Radabaugh, Cambria Mills, Mich., writes: "I am going to canvass for the Cynosure soon, and try hard to get you some subscribers."

Rufus Northway, Orwell, Ohio, writes: "I will endeavor to do all I can for the paper."

Miss Minnie Saddler, Big Bend, Wis., writes: "I think I will get a good many subscribers for your paper. I will do as well as I can."

L. Ketchum, Riceville, Penn., writes: "I shall try to get more subscribers for the Cynosure here."

Josiah Dodds, Winchester, Kan., writes: "Some of the friends are trying to get up a club for the Cynosure."

"Luther Wood, Newark, Mich., writes: "I intend to get up a club as soon as possible."

Rev. Abner Orr, Cainsvills. Mo., sends a new subscriber, and writes: "This makes fourteen subscribers for the Cynosure. The work still moves with power in North Missouri."

Asa Warren, Warren's Corners, New York, sends three subscribers for a year, and writes: "This makes my club twenty-three since the 1st of January."

E. Gould, Pillar Point, N. Y., writes: "I will try and do something for your paper."

The above words taken from different letters show that some of the readers of the Cynosure realize the importance of working for it, and mean to do so.

Three hundred and thirty-one subscriptions expiring in January and February have not been renewed. Is yours one of them? Let us hear from these persons promptly. Renew if you can, if not write telling us to discontinue your paper.

The work for the Cynosure went on nobly during the month of February. Shall not March show even greater results?

How many new subscriptions or renewals will you send?

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK,

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

TIN ROOFS

BRICK WALLS.

OUR BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

THE GRANT COUNTY, IND., CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, opposed to secret societies, will (D. V.) hold its annual meeting at Marion, on Saturday, March 17, at 10 o'clock, A. M. Speakers from abroad are expected to be present, and all those who favor or are opposed to our reform are earnestly desired to be present.

GEO. W. CHAMP, Pres.

All friends in Eastern States desiring a series of public Masonic expositions will please address me at No. 104 Bremer street, Chicago, as I am now ready to make my Eastern trip and would like to start without unnecessary delay. Let arrangements be made for three expositions in each town if possible and when writing give the town, county and state in a legible manner. To avoid delay let me say that $20 in each place will be a sufficient remuneration for all expenses. Michigan and Ohio can be visited either before or after my return. I want to hear right away from Conn., N. J., N. Y., Mass. and N. H.

E RONAYNE.

Topics of the Time.

The events of last week in Washington were of an intensely exciting nature to all who have followed the action of Congress and the Electoral Commission during the past month. The Oregon case had just been completed the week before, and as this had been the last rallying point for the advocates of Tilden, his case was given up by a large proportion of the Democrats in Congress. Some eighty members of the House, however, were determined to fight till the end, and Pennsylvania and Rhode Island being past, the electoral vote of South Carolina was sent to the Commission on Tuesday. The decision was quickly reached for a Congressional investigating committee had already reported that the Hayes' electors were legally chosen. Seven States then remained on Wednesday morning. The filibustering Democrats interposed every obstruction though, barely one-third of the House, but were defeated by the firmness of Speaker Randall and the skill of Fernando Wood. The count proceeded in the joint convention until Vermont was called. Here Mr. Hewett of New York, chairman of the National Democratic Committee, drew from his pocket an envelope said to contain a second electoral vote which he had carried since December last. Much time was lost over this fraud, which was settled by the refusal of the Senate to countenance it. The great fight was made, however, on Thursday in the House and in joint convention, when after a continuous session all day and until half past four Friday morning, the last remnant of opposition from the obstructionists was overborne and the vote of Wisconsin closed the list with 185 votes for Hayes and the President of the Senate declared him elected President of the United States. Such a contest was never known in joint convention before, and great praise has been given to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress for their firm resistance to the factious elements of the losing party. On Friday the President elect arrived in Washington and was received with great demonstrations by his friends. In spite of the fears of many for his personal safety he appeared publicly but without ostentation, and his calm and manly bearing at once brought pride and confidence to his friends and disarmed his enemies. On that day President Grant met his Cabinet for the last time, and considerable unfinished business was brought to vote in Congress. Shortly before midnight the House passed a Universal Amnesty bill, including Jeff. Davis. The Republicans were caught napping and the bill slipped through without debate. On Saturday after long consultation it was decided by the President elect and his friends that the oath of office should be privately administered before President Grant had formally vacated his office. Acting Vice-President Ferry's term having expired on Saturday this precaution was taken to meet any emergency that might arise from a vacancy in the executive office. Chief Justice Wait administered the oath at the White House and the matter was kept secret till the next day, a transaction that bears an unpleasant look, though not illegal and perhaps justified in every sense by the exigencies of the time. The formal inauguration ceremonies took place on Monday and the telegraph has borne everywhere the first official utterances of our new President. Mr. Hayes enters upon his responsible duties with greater advantages of political education than many of his predecessors. He has been three times Governor of Ohio and no charges of corruption have been brought against his administration. The question of the dual governments left him by Gen. Grant will be among the first to be decided and none that are likely to arise need so careful management.

The brief address of Gov. Hayes, at a reception given him and his family in the capitol at Columbus, last week, revived the memory of 1861 and Lincoln's farewell speech to his neighbors at Springfield. "As for myself and my family," said Mr. Hayes, "we go, perhaps, to return in a few days to occupy our accustomed place in this commuuity. Possibly we go to other scenes and duties, not to meet you again as fellow-citizens of Columbus. In that event I wish to say, as Mr. Lincoln said on parting with his friends at Springfield, sixteen years ago, that I trust you will pray that I may have that divine assistance and guidance without which I cannot succeed, and with which I cannot fail." This humble and manly acknowledgment has called out public prayer in an unwonted degree. The Philadelphia churches held special meetings for this purpose last Sabbath, and their example was followed by many congregations all through the land.

The stringent temperance law of Indiana, known from its framer as the "Baxter law," after operating for a year or two very hopefully for reform, was by some means repealed. But the happy effect of temperance regulations has brought forward another bill in the legislature of that State, which makes the sale of alcohol only for mechanical purposes and the arts legal, and provides a State commissioner, with agencies in every county and city, to sell for such purposes only. Other regulations in respect to general traffic are very stringent. The relations or friends of drunkards shall notify dealers not to sell them. If they do they shall be fined. The drunkard is required to testify from whom he got the liquor. For failure to testify he shall be imprisoned. The saloon-keeper who sells the drunkard contrary to law shall be jointly responsible for damage done by drunkards while in a state of intoxication. The wife of the drunkard may sue the saloon-keeper for damage.

THE BAPTIST BEACON AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

II. THE RELIGION OF MASONRY IS ABSOLUTE DEISM.

1. It denies the inspiration of the Bible. This it does by using it, like the square and compass, as simply a part of the furniture of the lodge, by representing it as simply a symbol of — what? by degrading it to a level with the Koran, the Shasta and the Zendavesta, and by welcoming to its membership the representatives of any of the religions on the face of the globe, except perhaps the avowed atheist.

"Every well regulated lodge must contain a Bible, a square and compass, which are technically said to constitute its furniture, and which are respectively dedicated to God, the Master of the lodge, and the craft. In the lodge the Bible is a symbol. To the Christian it is God's Word of truth. All Christians receive and love it. Many Masons do not even believe it as God's word. The Christian esteems the Bible above gold. The Mason associates it with the square and compass. Masonry always has the material implements, the square and compass upon its altars, in every country and in every lodge. But the Bible is displaced and supplanted by the sacred books so called, of false systems of religion." —Morris' Dictionary. Art. Furniture, p. 193.

"It is a landmark that a book of the law shall constitute an indispensable part of the furniture of every lodge. I say advisedly a book of the law, because it is not absolutely required that every where the Old and New Testaments shall be used. The 'book of the law' is that volume which by the religion of the country is believed to contain the revealed will of the Grand Architect of the universe. Hence in all lodges in Christian countries the book of the law is composed of the Old and New Testaments; in a country where Judaism is the prevailing faith, the Old Testament alone would be sufficient; and in Mohammedan countries and among Mohammedan Masons, the Koran might be substituted, Masonry does not attempt to interfere with the peculiar religious faith of its disciples, except so far as relates to the belief in the existence of God and what necessarily results from that belief."—Mackey's Masonic Jurisprudence, p. 33.

But I am told that according to the old charges of 1722, "Every Mason is obliged by his tenure to obey the moral law." True, but high Masonic authority says

"This moral law is not to be considered as confined to the Decalogue of Moses, within which narrow limits the ecclesiastical writers technically restrain it, but rather as alluding to what is called the lex naturae, or the law of nature, * * * for it is evident that no law less universal could have been appropriately selected for the government of an institution whose prominent characteristic is its universality. The precepts of Jesus could not have been made obligatory on a Jew; a Christian would have denied the sanctions of the Koran; a Mahommedan must have rejected the law of Moses, and a disciple of Zoroaster would have turned from all to the teachings of his Zendavesta."—Mackey's Masonic Jurisprudence, pp. 502, 3.

The truth is, and Chase makes a clean breast of it and says, "Blue Lodge Masonry (that is Ancient Craft Masonry) has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible. If it was it would not be Freemasonry, it would be something else."—Digest of Masonic Law, pp. 207-8.

Who says that the religion of Masonry recognizes the inspiration of the Scriptures, or "that a man cannot become a Mason unless he believes the Bible?"

2. The religion of Masonry is Christless.

a. In all the twenty-five to thirty prayers recorded in Mackey's Ritualist there is not a single allusion even to "the Name that is above every name."

b. The name of Christ is uniformly expunged, wherever it occurs, from their Scripture readings. Note especially 1 Pet. 2: 1–7, and 2 Thess. 3: 6–16, as quoted in Mackey's Ritualist, p. 271-2 and 348-9.

c. The XIX. Landmark of Freemasonry effectually rejects the name of Christ when it requires "every Mason to believe in the existence of God" only "as the Grand Architect of the universe."—Mackey, p. 242. Hence, "The religion of Masonry is pure theism on which the different members engraft their own peculiar opinions, but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge."—Mackey's Lexicon, p. 402.

d. The religion of Masonry expressly and distinctly repudiates the use of Christ's name in any of its ceremonies. In the third section of the Lecture of the Entered Apprentice's degree this paragraph occurs:

"The Blazing Star is said, by Webb, to be commemorative of the star which appeared to guide the wise men of the East to the place of our Saviour's nativity. This, which is one of the ancient interpretations of the symbol, being considered as too sectarian in its character, and unsuitable to the universal religion of Masonry, has been omitted since the meeting of Grand Lecturers at Baltimore, in 1842."—Mackey's Ritualist p. 56.

Perhaps the terms "expressly and distinctly" which I have used in this connection, may be considered too strong and sweeping. But it is evident that if the reason assigned for omitting the name of Christ in a single case is valid it must be so in every case; and Masonic authorities everywhere so treat it. Who says, therefore, that Freemasonry is not a Christless religion? And yet

III. It Claims to be a Saving Religion.

Masonry teaches that a Mason "on the night of his initiation, commences the great task which is never in his Masonic life to be discontinued, of erecting in his heart a spiritual temple for the indwelling of God." —Mackey's Manual, p. 41.

"The common gavel is an instrument made use of by operative masons to break off the corners of rough stones, the better to fit them for the builder's use; but we, as Free and Accepted Masons are taught to make use of it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our minds as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."—Sickel's Monitor p. 34-5.

From the prayer at the closing of a Mark Master's lodge:

"Supreme Grand Architect of the universe. * * * Guide us in the paths of rectitude and honor; correct our errors by the unerring square of thy wisdom, and enable us so to practice the precepts of Masonry that all our actions may be acceptable in thy sight. So mote it be. Amen."—Mackey's Ritualist, p. 296.

"The three steps, usually delineated upon the Master's carpet, are emblematical of the three stages of human life, viz., youth, manhood and age. In youth, as Entered Apprentices we ought industriously to occupy our minds in the attainment of useful knowledge; in manhood, as Fellow Crafts we should apply our knowledge to the discharge of our respective duties to God, our neighbor, and ourselves; so that in age as Master Masons we may enjoy the happy reflection consequent on a well-spent life, and die in the hope of a glorious immortality."—Mackey's Ritualist, p. 126.

Thus, Messrs. Editors, I have given you an outline, and it is a mere outline of the evidence upon which I rely to prove that "the Scriptures as fairly and squarely condemn Masonry" and other kindred orders, "as they do deism and drunkenness;" that in fact Masonry is organized deism, denying both the Scriptures and the Christ of the Scriptures. I have done this with the most kindly feelings toward all, whether Masons or Anti-masons. I have done it in the midst of severe personal affliction. But I feel that I have done my duty. I now leave the matter with you. I only ask that God will enable you to investigate without prejudice, and enable you to embrace the truth as he shall enable you to see it. And at any rate, as the late Charles G. Finney said in his appeal to Masons themselves in the last paragraph of the last chapter of the last work he ever wrote, so I say to you: "Be not offended with my telling you the truth in love. We must all soon meet at the solemn judgment. Let us not be angry, but honest."

Yours for light and truth,

Ex-Editor.

Toleration.

One of the arts on which the Jesuits of the lodge depend for confusing and deceiving the people is the misuse of words. Among the good words which they are apt to misuse and wrest from their meaning, is the word toleration. This word, so long as it is synonymous with charity, is a very good word indeed; but when, through fraud and deception, it is made to mean that we must tolerate falsehoods, must accept them into our religious faith in order to please a deceiver, then it is wrested from its true religious meaning and made to serve a bad purpose. With such a use of the word the reform of Luther would have been impossible. He would have been obliged to accept all the absurd dogmas of Romanism. No one has a right to tolerate lying, stealing, or the violation of the ten commandments. It is his duty to separate himself from those who commit these crimes, as it was Lot's duty to separate himself from Sodom and Gomorrah. The Mohammedan, who believes in an impostor, might as well demand a place at the Lord's table, under the plea of toleration and kindness of spirit, as the Freemason, who pretends to believe monstrosities as great as those of Mohammed. The demand, if complied with, would work confusion; which is just what the Jesuit wants; for it is by creating confusion that he expects to unhinge our present religious belief and our present government, and substitute his own schemes in their place.

Of a piece with the subtle misuse of words is the Jesuitical art of perverting truths and making bold and impertinent assumptions. Thus the assumptions of Freemasons that John the Baptist and John the Apostle belonged to their "order," is a mere impudent assertion, intended to deceive by its boldness and audacity. It is like the cunning that might be used by the inmates of the brothel in choosing the Virgin Mary for their patron saint. If there are any two characters who, more than other men, are unlike Freemasons in every respect, they were these two saints whom the lodge has chosen as its patrons.

The question of preventing cunning, designing men from making a wrong use of the church and of keeping separate good men from the bad, evidently occupied the attention and deeply excited the concern of the Apostles themselves. There is no difficulty so long as Judases separate themselves from the church; then the simple machinery of the church works well; but when Judases, perceiving the advantage of being in the church while opposing it, begin to rush into it, and demand toleration of their deliberate crimes; nay, ask that good may be confounded with evil, to separate which, Christ, the head of the church, died, then there is a practical difficulty offered, the settlement of which is rendered troublesome in proportion to the shrewdness of the Jesuits who seek to prevent a settlement.

That this question filled the mind of St. John the Apostle with great concern is very evident from the tenor of his epistles. The seat of his bishopric was at the same time a seat of gross mystification worship like that of Freemasonry, and it is natural, therefore, that of all the apostles he should show most concern for keeping corruption out of the church. In his second epistle, the one to the elect lady, after having anxiously tried in his first epistle to show who is a Christian and who is not, who is for Christ and who is anti-Christ, he says that "many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh," or in other words who regard Christ as they would Confucius, or Mohammed, or Buddha, or the sun, and not as Son of God.

He tells the lady that whoever surpasses or goes beyond the doctrine of Christ and does not abide in it hath not God. The English version of the New Testament uses the words "transgress the doctrine of Christ" instead of to go before or surpass the doctrine of Christ, as the original Greek has it. The Greek word used by St. John is proago, which means going beyond what was taught by the Saviour, and not simply violating or transgressing that which he taught.

This distinction becomes one of some importance when it is reflected that the Jesuits of the lodge do not abide in the simple doctrine of Christ, but go far beyond it, admitting into fellowship Jews, atheists and pirates, and adding thereto sheepskin aprons, squares and compasses, gavels, Christless prayers, maudlin songs, grand high priests, grand lodge above, horrid oaths as steps thereto, cable-tows, hoodwinks, blinders, five points of fellowship, etc. Nothing of these things and much else of Masonic teaching besides, can be found in the doctrine of Christ. And if the words of St. John mean anything they mean to tell the lady that if a teacher comes to her adding such or similar things to the doctrine of Christ she is not to receive him into her house nor to wish him God speed: "For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds."

It is a difficult question, we admit, that of separating the bad from the good in this wicked world, but it is a duty which every one owes to his Saviour to accomplish it as far as possible. No member of the church could reasonably inspect with over-closeness the life of a fellow-sinner who should penitently go the communion, but he who would admit a troup of unregenerate Ishmaelites, or a set of studied blasphemers, or a lodge of Masons there, might appropriately put the finishing touch to his tender spirit of toleration by offering for our acceptance Hamburg grapes grown upon Canada thistles; or a pious life founded on studied deception.

At all events so long as the American man is still left some discretion in casting his own vote, it will be thought perhaps no sin against toleration if he should assume the right to cast it against a Freemason on every possible occasion.

AMERICAN.

A Brief Review of Washington's Farewell Address.

TOGETHER WITH A SKETCH OF HIS HOME AT MT. VERNON.

BY MRS. EZRA A. COOK.

[Read before the Chicago Christian Association, February 22, 1877.]

It is not the wish of those present this evening to garnish the memory of Washington with glowing though pointless eulogies, if I correctly interpret your motives. Earnest patriots, in the early dawn of our nation's second century, with its civil and religious problems looming up in our horizon can more acceptably honor his memory by hearing his words and by heeding his warnings. After forty-five years of mature life spent in active service for his country, Washington deliberately collects and condenses the most valuable lessons he has acquired and transmits them to the people.

His self-denying toil undesignedly appears in the following words taken from the introduction of his Farewell Address:

"The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a nniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference to what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn."

"I rejoice," he continues, "that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety."

The whole introduction of this Address breathes an earnest, humble, loving and grateful spirit, and when completed he writes: "Here perhaps I ought to stop." But his burning love for humanity and his anxiety for the welfare of our free institutions will not permit him to do so. He continues:

"Bnt a solicitude for your welfare which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitnde, urge me on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation and which appear to me all-important to the permanancy of your felicity as a people. * * Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment."

With the most judicious and discriminating language he then nrges the maintenance of the Union under one government.

"The name of American which belongs to yon, in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. * * The North in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government finds in the productions of the latter great additional résources of maritime and commercial enterprise—and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South in the same intercourse benefiting by the agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. * * The East in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and, in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest, as one Nation."

These paragraphs as well as the following show that Washington's patient unwearying efforts for the Colonies and infant States were not the result of a stupid, unquestioning perseverance but rather the inspiration of a grand principle which so long as acted upon will operate for the happiness of our great nation. He concludes his remarks upon this subject as follows:

"To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. * * Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. * * The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government, presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government."

Now Washington apparently recalls the intense disapprobation with which the public looked upon the order of the Cincinnati; the seven days of anxious debate before they consented to alter their anti-republican and other most objectionable features. He remembers the weary march of armed patriots of three hundred miles over rugged mountains in the face of an inclement season, to quell riots instigated by secret democratic societies; he recollects the disapprobation of a minority of the Senate and of a majority of the Honse at his bold denunciation of these self-created societies (although sustained by the general sentiment of the people) and continues:

"All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract or awe the regular deliberations and action of the regularly constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force—to put, in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party; often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

"However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to their unjust dominion."

The weak or wicked author of the Masonic history "Washington and his Masonic Compeers," Pastmaster of Rural Amity Lodge, No. 70, Pa., alludes to this part of Washington's Farewell Address and asserts that with such a "foreign idea" as that this warning alludes to Freemasonry banished from the mind, the reader will remember that the closing scenes of Washington's administration were embittered by party strife.

Could any honest, sane person find any allusion to party strife in the above quotation? But to relieve the weakest mind of a suspicion that party strife was the cause of the warning, we remark the next paragraph but one following this reviews that subject.

To return; did Washington mean secret societies? Did he include Freemasonry? Did Freemasonry ever obstruct the execution of the laws? Will the Morgan conspirators, or Jefferson Davis or General Belknap tell us? If so Washington meant Freemasonry. He says "All obstructions" are of fatal tendency. Does Freemasonry ever direct, control, counteract or awe the regular deliberation of constituted authorities? Will Masons who lay the corner stones of government buildings tell us whether or not they ever direct the action of constituted authorities. Let Judge Whitney by his published testimony tell us. Affirmative answers come both from the friends and the enemies of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry obstructs the execution of laws and designedly seeks to direct, control, awe or counteract the deliberation and action of constituted authorities. Hence Washington meant Freemasonry and all kindred orders, and though by this testimony against these potent engines for evil he has destroyed the favorite cherry tree of some of his Masonic associates he speaks with all the innocence, fervor and truthfulness of his childhood: "I cannot tell a lie." "All combinations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract or awe the regular deliberations of the constituted authorities, are destructive of the fundamental principle that it is the duty of every individual to obey the established government, and of fatal tendency." There are at least fifty Masonic lodges having this tendency in Chicago. Do you honor Washington's memory? Will you show yourself worthy of such wise, self-denying rulers as he was? Labor with the members of these lodges, as he did with the order of the Cincinnati, and inculcate in the minds of those not yet entangled in their net, that these societies are of a tendency fatal to their best civil, social and religious interests.

Washington passes to other dangers and writes:

"Towards the preservation of your government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, bnt also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles however specious the pretexts. * * Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally."

My blood fairly tingled with shame and sorrow when in the Assembly Room of the House of Representatives at Washington this fall my guide remarked "The Republicans sit on this side and the Democrats on that side of the House." It was a revelation to me.

Washington continues:

"There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This, within limits, is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast, patriotism may look with indulgence if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popnlar character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. * * A fire not to be quenched; it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume."

"Those who would exclude the Bible from schools and in other ways yield to the demands of liberalism should ponder the following paragraph:

"Of all dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are the indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it be simply asked where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. * * Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

His remarks on national finance are valuable, we quote from them as follows:

"As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible; avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace; but remembering also that timely disbursments to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursments to repel it—avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear."

As his mind passes on, foreign nations come within the range of his thought. He writes:

"The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. * * Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors and preferences."

He closes his Farewell Address as follows:

"Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error—I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence. * * Relying on its kindness in this as in other things and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat, in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government, the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers."

MT. VERNON.

Since thought and imagination are not limited to time or space let us go to that retreat to which Washington so often looked from the tumultuous scenes of strife where he stood at the post of duty.

Let us start from the Federal city. It is ten o'clock in the morning. The weather is bright and delightfully cool. Comfortably seated in the stern of the boat we glide away from the shore, down the broad smiling waters of the Potomac. The Arsenal with its little pyramids of shining black cannon balls is passed. We leave a few passengers at the quiet old town of Alexandria and the houses fade in the distance. No loud-voiced sailor disturbs the serene restfulness of the occasion. The air warms with the ascending sun. The suppressed melody of the receding waters suddenly finds distincter utterance in the liquid music of a mournful harp, brightened and made positive by the sunny tones of the violin.

Now we pass old Fort Foote and a few minutes later Fort Washington, The fifteen miles' ride on this river on such a day under such conditions is a most appropriate preparation for a visit to the home and tomb of Washington.

We leave the boat and step on the wharf whence Washington used to ship the products of his farm and fisheries.

Passing within the enclosure we walk up a well shaded avenue and soon reach Washington's tomb. It is a capacious, plain brick structure at the foot of a steep hill, with an arched roof. Through the iron grating of its gate we look upon the marble sarcophagi which contains the mortal remains of Washington and his beloved wife. Mrs. Washington's sarcophagus is plain. The lid of her husband's is ornamented with an American shield suspended over an American flag, surmounted by an eagle, all carved in bas-relief. Above the vault door on a stone panel we read:

"I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead yet shall he live." We turned our steps towards the old mansion saying, "O! death where is thy victory!"

On our way we pass a magnolia tree planted by Washington's own hand. The buildings are large substantial frame houses painted white, standing on a lovely eminence overlooking but for the dense foliage of intervening trees, the Potomac river. Though now a hundred and thirty years old they are in a much better state of repair than they were a few years since. We approach it on the west side and receive a glass of water from the old family well at the hand of a colored attendant. The house contains eighteen rooms, old-fashioned, when compared with modern mansions, but the memories which hang round them give them a charm which neither money or time can bestow. We step out from the chamber in which Washington died on to a balcony and look for a moment on the pleasing scene. We ascend to a room directly over this chamber and see the place where for nearly two years after the decease of her husband, Mrs. Washington waited for the summons to join him. Now we walk along the great piazza which extends along the whole eastern front of the house. Here the remains of Washington lay on the 18th of December, 1799, and from thence were carried to the grave. We pass through the garden with its luxuriant borders of box more than one hundred and twelve years old; through the greenhouses now filled with choice plants.

We turn from the romantic loveliness and as the boat carries us back to the city of Washington we recall another remark from his Farewell Address: "In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish." Whatever there is of wisdom in Washington's life and in his Farewell Address the principles which underlie it may be found in the Bible.

Let us "Search the Scriptures," and rising above the vanities that lure us, prove our competency to care for the inheritance intrusted to us, in a humble and Christ-like discharge of our civil, social and religious duties. In such a course we will honor the memory of our first illustrious ruler, and Washington's fondest hopes, so far as we are concerned, will be more than realized.

Reform News.

From Bro. Richards, Lecturer in S. W. Illinois.

Bowensburgh, Hancock Co., Ill., Feb. 24, 1877.

Editor Cynosure:—

Thinking the readers of the Cynosure would be interested to know how the work of reform progresses in this section, I offer a brief report of my labors as lecturer.

Some weeks since I delivered two lectures in Houston township, Adams county, near the north line of said county. The lectures were received with marked effect and set the community thinking deeply. There were Masons present who gave good attention.

Last week I delivered two lectures in the Lauderdale school house, in Hancock county, Ill. The first evening the seats were tolerably well filled, the second evening the seats were packed, and the platform on all sides fringed with boys. The school house is one of ample dimensions, surrounded by a thickly settled community of intelligent people. I proved the great antiquity of Masonry to be a myth, to the satisfaction of the audience, quoting Dalcho, Weinbrenner and others. The lectures were received with marked satisfaction, and are bound to do good.

On the second evening Masonic oaths were dissected, their blasphemy and wickedness made transparent, and the people there do not "want any Masonry in theirs."

I am now prepared to respond to invitations to lecture, come from where they may. I am satisfied that Anti-masons need not be so fearful of Masonry. Masonry is just a puff-ball; and all I ask is an opportunity to ventilate the thing, which can be done.

In the Carpenter Building.

The services on Thursday evening at 221 West Madison street were of a special character. Half an hour was spent in singing from "Gospel Hymns," before entering upon the regular programme.

After a brief and appropriate prayer E. A. Cook read selections of Scripture from 1 John 1: 6–11; 1 John 2: 12, 22, 23 and John's Gospel 15: 23, showing that the rejection of Jesus Christ is the rejection of the only true God, and presented a carefully prepared paper on "Freemasonry a False Religion," sustaining his position by numerous quotations from standard Masonic authors showing conclusively that Masonry is a religion and that as a system it purposely and designedly excludes Jesus Christ, and that it is anti-Christ and should be rebuked and disfellowshiped by all Christian people.

All then united in singing "The Light of the World is Jesus." Bro. Thos. Hodge led in prayer, after which the meeting was free to all for brief speeches or testimonies. J. P. Stoddard related one or two incidents showing that the practice of Masonry accords with its theory in actually prohibiting the mention of Christ's name in the lodge when any member objects to its use.

A gentleman from a neighboring city remarked that he had seen a notice of our meeting in the papers. He was engaged in Gospel work, and had found that secret societies were a great hindrance and very often prevented men from coming to Christ. He had a relative who was once a prosperous business man and exemplary at home and abroad, but who joined the lodge, which was the first step in a life of dissipation, financial and social ruin. He spoke of another instance in which he was told by a friend very far advanced in the orders, that knowing what he now did of the system, if he was not already a member he would never join. He closed his remarks with a hearty God-speed to the work of discussing the secret system and an earnest warning to the young men to stand aloof from all such sinful connections, and to seek and find in Christ an all-sufficient and unfailing portion.

After the close of the meeting in the Hall we were especially glad to meet this brother in the reading-room and to find that Bro. Hodge had enrolled him as a regular reader of the Cynosure. We hope the visits of our brother, now no longer a stranger, may be frequent, and that he will bring with him his friends.

The closing speech of the evening was made by Bro. Ronayne, in which he urged the necessity of Christian consistency, and more pronounced and active efforts against the lodge. Bro. Hodge wished to speak, but the time for adjournment having arrived he was requested to defer his remarks until a future meeting. Before the closing prayer it was announced that Bro. Ronayne would lecture on the system of secretism in the Hall on Tuesday, March 6th, at 8 P. M.

Bearing Fruit.

Hadley, Mich., Feb. 12, 1877

Dear Cynosure:—I visited lately Pine Run, in Genesee county, Mich., where Rev. J. L. Barlow lectured Jan. 7th and 8th, 1876, and there learned that since said lectures many of the Freemasons had neglected the assembling of themselves together and had failed to pay their dues, and the balance of the members becoming very much excited in the exercise of their Masonic charity, the Grand Lodge took away their charter, so their light in the "east" has gone out.

The Odd-fellows of Pine Run can scarce muster enough to do business except Rebecca nights, when there is a fair attendance.

The grangers came nigh expiring when they bethought themselves of the blacksmith's wife, who is an excellent festival cook, so they made a "maid of the kitchen" of her, which for the present has revived their revelries.

Elder Barlow will see from the above whether he killed, or (as was threatened) was killed at Pine Run.

Yours truly,

W. M. Beden.

Father Auten on the Crestline Meetings.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Dear Friend:—I went to Crestline, Ohio, on the 20th inst. to hear the virtues of Freemasonry discussed, and there to my joy I found Edmond Ronayne who had come the day before, and the work had begun very hopefully on the side of truth. The second evening Edmond was on time with his Bible and a full supply of Masonic books of the best and highest authority, and when the assembly was seated he commenced to unravel Masonry and proved by Masonic documents that Masonry was entirely the reverse of what it professed to the full satisfaction of his hearers, and sat down after he had invited his opponents to examine his books, but none offered to dispute them or examine them. Then his opponent got up, without Bible or any Masonic authority, to support Masonry. After wandering round for a long time telling Masonic circumstances and Christian experience, seeing he belongs to a Baptist church and is a Mason, he there found out what Jesus had said: "You cannot serve God and Mammon." The poor fellow was to be pitied for his ignorance, for he could not support his religion and be a Mason at the same time. His time ran out and he sat down.

Dr. Booth then got up and spoke a little, very much to the purpose, to the satisfaction of all that heard him. Then the second man of the second part got up and spoke. He also lacked wisdom and common sense and good manners. He seemed to be in a bad humor and vented his spite chiefly against Edmond for telling the truth about Masonry, insomuch that he made himself a laughing stock for that respectable assembly, and he sat down.

Then Edmond got up and apologized for him on account of his ignorance and inability to do otherwise. So closed that meeting.

It was agreed on that the first three degrees of Masonry should be worked out on the following evening, Feb. 21st; so the time came and the assembly gathered. A few little boys were on the front seats, while their protectors took the back side of the hall. Edmond came with his working tools as usual. He set his house in order and called for his guests; five came forward, two lacking for work and a candidate for initiation, as the promised one had recanted. Edmond felt bad with many more of us, but soon two more came forward, then a request was made, "Who will volunteer to be made a Mason in due form?" and a young man back in the house rose up and came forward. Then a United Brethren preacher offered up a very appropriate prayer and the exercises began. The little boys began to laugh and the older ones to stamp and talk, and for about two hours a continual disturbance occurred; but they found they could not break up the meeting in that way. Edmond advised them as soon as they were satisfied to leave. The big ones then began to be ashamed and the little ones sleepy, so the work of initiation went on peaceably through the Master Mason degree and the meeting dismissed in good order.

The Lodge Finds a Tongue at Albion, Iowa.

February 27, 1877.

Dear Cynosure:—I have been waiting for some time hoping some one would report what we are doing about here. As you are aware Rev. H. H. Hinman visited us about the last of January and gave us two very interesting lectures at Albion. He dealt some very severe blows, against Masonry particularly, in his mild way, which seems to have aroused the wrath of the fraternity.

Some things occurred that cheered the friends of the cause; but only seem to have added fuel to the flames of wrath already kindled. Two young gentlemen from Marshalltown came the first evening and at the close of the lecture one of them made some remarks by request, in which he said his mind had been directed but recently to the subject and he had asked the advice of a good Methodist brother about joining the Masons. He told him not to do it; that it was too expensive; that he would have to compromise his religion, etc. At the close of the second lecture the Rev. Mr. Chapman, pastor of the Presbyterian church at this place, in a very few remarks gave us all to understand where he stands on this question.

All these things put together were too much for the secretists. They boiled over through his Honor Rev. Judge Wm. C. Smith. I will quote two or three specimen bricks from the tower. He writes to the editor of the Marshalltown Times: "January 23, 1877.—Last night we were visited by one of those old tramps who are going the rounds lecturing against Masonry, by the name of Hinman, hailing from Illinois, we are told [He never attends the lectures, but has "to be told," or "is told on the street next day."] who emitted his poisonous spleen in superabundance, and I suppose there are a number of persons ready to be swallowed by this angel of light." Again, "all these old scapegraces that have lectured here as yet seem to sympathize much with Masons' wives and make strong appeals to the sympathies of the ladies when perhaps these old scapegoats have wives at home who are glad of their absence."

The next day he has an article in the same paper headed, "Rev. Mr. Chapman, of Albion, a Bulldozer," in which he tells us about another lecture "from that same old tramp." Then undertakes to quote what Rev. Mr. Chapman said. Now this reverend gentleman perhaps does not know whether what he has said is true or false. If asked before an Albion audience, as on a former occasion, whether he believed what he had written or not, he would no doubt do as he did then, refuse to say.

This same pious gentleman who quotes Scripture so fluently for the benefit "of those old tramps," said a few years ago that he had taken out his demit ten years ago and had nothing to do with the lodge since, and when asked to give his honest opinion of the institution said, "it was as corrupt as hell." Now none of "those old tramps" ever said as much, and why, Bro. (?) Smith get so angry because "these scapegoats" lecture against such a wicked institution? And if these "scapegraces" say such wicked things why do you not tell them so right there and not fly to the newspapers after they are gone? You know, Mr. Smith, it is a wicked institution and you cannot meet "these old tramps" in a fair discussion on the subject, and you lack the Christian courage to renounce it, or you would. You know how Masonry would persecute you. Look what is said of A. J. Swett for his few utterances. "This gentleman," according to the Times, "has taken the contract to exterminate the order of Freemasons from this city—indeed from the face of the earth." Now, did Mr. Swett say anything of the sort? Yet you and your Masonic friends are willing to let that lie go uncorrected.

A Sabbath in Winnebago Co., Illinois.

Flora, Ill., Feb. 27, 1877.

Dear Cynosure: Bro. J. P. Stoddard preached for me last Sabbath morning, and lectured in the evening on secret societies in connection with Christian organizations, and on Monday evening on secret societies in connection with the civil government. We have no words to express the truly Christian spirit and deep research developed by our brother. Our souls were fed, our minds enlightened as a people, and the blessing of God and the prayers of the good attend our brother. Let other churches, who want a glorious vindication, who stand opposed to all secret societies, secure the labors of the above.

Yours in Gospel bonds,

Wm. H. VanDoren.

—As soon as funds can be raised to meet the expense, the Colonization Society will send out another body of emigrants to Liberia. Quite a number of freedmen from North and South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi, are said to be anxious to go, among them five preachers and two teachers. Thirteen young men from Liberia are now in this country preparing for usefulness in the young African Republic.

Correspondence

Not the Signals of the Lodge

Springdale, Cedar Co., Ia.
Second Month 21, '77.

Respected Friend:—I am writing an article for the Christian Worker on various topics; among which there is one in regard to Freemasonry as follows: Some Friends while traveling in the ministry have been judged to be Freemasons. They have been so regarded on account of some motion or sign while performing religious service in the gallery. I apprehend that there is not a minister in the Society of Friends who is an adhering Mason, and no one who would intentionally give a Masonic or other secret organization sign in the gallery. The writer cannot certainly say why they should be so judged, but from what he has read on the subject is apprehensive that one cause is on account of the manner of kneeling in prayer.

In taking the obligations of the first two degrees of Masonry, the candidate is said to be required to bow by the altar on one knee only. A speaker would be very likely to be taken to be a Mason if he should, for a few moments, hold one hand above the other an inch or two apart, as that is said to be one of the Masonic signs. We are told to "abstain from all appearance of evil."

I would be very much obliged to thee if thou would inform me if my suppositions on the subject are correct, or what signs are ministers liable to make, that they should be stamped as Freemasons.

Respectfully,

LAWRIE TATUM.

ANSWER.—Preachers who are not Freemasons are unlikely to frequently make gestures which could be supposed to be Masonic signals. The mere kneeling on one knee or the apparent use of any other sign should not be taken as proof of Freemasonry. If such things, however, arouse suspicion in the mind of any person let him frankly ask the preacher and know for a truth, and not circulate a suspicion for evidence of so grave an offense against the Gospel of Christ.

UNINTENTIONAL CONFESSION.

GOODRICH, Mich., Feb. 1, 1877.

Dear Cynosure:—A little conversation had with a stranger in circulating my petition two years ago this winter, I think worthy of note. In a hotel in Ortonville I met with a friend whom I had not seen for some time; I shook hands with him and not thinking he belonged to any secret society I passed him my petition to sign. He read it and passed it to a person unknown to me sitting near him, and then went in to dinner leaving the stranger reading the petition. He read it and then looked up at me with a staring look and said, "Do you expect to get rich by circulating such a petition as that? Perhaps you are rich already; but you will not make money by circulating such a petition as that, I will assure you."

"Is there anything wrong about it?" I asked.

"Well," said he, "you will not get Congress to pass it, I will bet you fifty dollars."

"Why not?"

"Because the largest proportion of Congress are Freemasons now."

"Very well," said I, "we will let them know what the wishes of the people are concerning such things. Do you belong to the order of Freemasons?"

"I do," said he.

I then handed him Sickels' Freemason Monitor. "I suppose," said I, "that is your guide?" He took it and turned over some of the leaves and then said:

"There is no guide about it."

"What, is not that a Freemason's guide?"

"No, there is no Masonry about it."

"Did you ever see such a book before?"

"No," he said.

I then handed him Richardson's Monitor, and asked him if he ever saw such a book before. He took it, turned over some of the leaves, and then reached the book back again, and with a more staring look than ever, as though he was astonished to think that I was showing such books, he said, "That is an expose of Masonry."

"What! you don't call that an expose of Masonry?"

"Yes, I do, a regular expose of Masonry."

He then took the book again and turned to the picture of the candidate being forced to drink wine from a human skull. "There," said he, "I have taken that degree."

"What! have you drank wine out of a human skull?"

"Yes, I have, but you Antimasons say we drink blood out of a human skull and that is a lie."

"We say no such thing," said I. "I never heard that remark before; but I am very glad you have owned that book is an expose of Masonry. Some Masons don't like to own it."

"Well, I mean a spurious expose." He discovered his mistake and went out. I was informed his name was John Bird and that he belonged to the Knight Templars.

I was in Ortonville a short time ago and had a book entitled "How to defeat Masonic Scoundrelism." A man stepped up by the name of Bird and prevailed on me very strongly to bring him a book; he said he wanted to plague his brother John, who was a Freemason, a Knight Templar. So I had Richardson's Monitor pretty well established as an expose of Masonry.

Now if that be true then is it not astonishing that such men as our judges, our lawyers, our magistrates and ministers of the Gospel and well-educated men will stoop so low as to go through such performances? I don't wonder that some men disbelieve those books.

Yours, M. LISCOMB.

BEAUTIES OF LODGE RULE.

The people of Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts are now experiencing the advantages of lodge rule applied to one branch of business. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers wished to dictate on what terms the Boston and Maine Railroad should employ its help. The Superintendent declined to be ruled by a secret lodge, and consequently on Monday, Feb. 12, at 4 o'clock p. m., about 150 engineers and stokers stopped their engines wherever they happened to be, put out the fires, and left hundreds of people to pass the night as best they could. Not content with this, in case of two heavily-loaded passenger trains, they uncoupled the engines, run them back and forth to exhaust the steam, until 6 p. m., put out the fires, and left the trains helpless in the open country. In some instances they disabled their engines permanently. Their threats of violence have turned the depots into military camps. Business is deranged, and the lives of the traveling public are in peril. Other railroads offering aid to the B. and M. are threatened with a similar strike. These fruits of lodge rule are opening the eyes of many. S. C. KIMBALL.

BOSTON, Mass.

STRANGE.

It is one of the strangest infatuations in existence, among men of any country, that the superstitions of past ages ought to be continued, with their mummeries and ceremonies, among the citizens of these United States, the freest and most advanced of any nation in the world in popular education, &c. If the proposition was submitted to the people in plain language, to revive the usages of ancient heathenism and Judaism, and to so mix them as to be interesting and palatable to our citizens, we fancy they would laugh such a proposition to scorn, and its advocates would require to hide themselves in the darkness which secrecy prescribes and provides for its midnight advocates.

We would recommend our readers to carefully study the history of the Jews, as given in the Scriptures. The conditions of obedience to God and the necessity of being faithful to Him, when violated, brought certain penalty. The principles of God's providence are not changed. If men serve the Masonic gods, or any other than the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, they depart from the God of those fathers, who landed on Plymouth rock—the root from which our glorious country has grown. VERITAS.

MASONIC TRICKS.

Not recorded by John the Baptist or John the Evangelist, said to be the great patrons of Masonry. William Whitlatch was a poor man, a very poor man, occupying a small lease on a farm in Aleppo township, Green county, Pa.; a hard worker, with a large family, including one boy crippled for life. He, however, owned two or three cows, and these were about all the property he did own in this world These cows generally ran out in summer time and browsed for subsistence. Well, in corn-hoeing time they got into the cornfield of "Bulldozer," as I will call him, (but let the reader take note that I use no fictitious names except for the Masonic actors). Bulldozer was a near near neighbor, and a devoted Mason, and a man endowed with about the regular amount of Masonic charity. He, hearing the cattle in his field, arose about midnight, and calling up a man to help him, drove the cattle wink's (as I will call him) in the same township, making the air ring with oaths on his way, Bulldozer's religious experience having been confined to the Masonic "shock of entrance." But Squire Hoodwink was a brother Mason. Now the driving of these cattle off and delivering them into the hands of a third party, unless he had been keeper of a public pound, was a direct violation of Pennsylvania law Whitlatch was immediately summoned to appear before Hoodwink to answer for damages. He came. Bulldozer demanded fifteen dollars damages. Whitlatch asked to have the suit put off to give him a chance to prepare his defense. Defendant had a legal right to demand that the trial be put off ten days. Not a moment was given. He also asked for a subpœna for witnesses. He was flatly refused; but judgment was given against him for the fifteen dollars. But on taking possession of his cattle again he found they had been beaten and stoned on the way till they were half dead. Having looked up witnesses to prove the facts, he hastened back to Squire Hoodwink's to punish Bulldozer for the damage done to the cattle. I met the old man on his way. He told me his business. I told him he might as well return home for he would get neither law nor justice. He persisted in going, but got no law, as I had predicted. Well, some weeks elapsed when it appeared that the damage done was imperceptible; also that the fence was not a lawful fence, permitting the cattle almost to walk over, on which account Whitlatch was not liable though his cattle had eaten all the corn. Whitlatch being too poor to take the case to court paid the fifteen dollars. So ends my tale.

Moral.—If you are not a Mason yourself vote for no Mason for office. J. W. M.

OUR MAIL.

S. E. Orvis, Waukesha, Wis, writes:

"In common with many others I am anxious to see righteousness victorious in all our borders."

Rev. Abner Orr, Cainsville, Mo., writes:

"We have organized a Christian Association, which will not fellowship in religion or support in politics any person who belongs to secret societies, especially those persons who are wedded to the old harlot, Masonry. One of the members of my pastoral charge asked the P. E, J. T. Boyle, who is a Master Mason: 'Does Bro. Orr know anything about Masonry?' 'O, yes,' said he, 'Bro. Orr knows enough. Masonry is no longer a secret.' This comes from one whom we all love as a good and true man. Archibald Taylor, a local preacher now on my charge, who has taken the third degree, while reading Honeywell's 'Appeal to Young Men,' as he pored over the wicked and blasphemous oaths and death penalties, exclaimed: 'Isn't it horrible—and it is true.' Thank God, men are fleeing from this spider web of Satan. So the testimony is coming in."

J. B. Crall, Berrien Center, Mich., writes:

"My subscription to the Christian Cynosure has nearly expired, and I cannot hope to succeed in my endeavors to withstand this detestable principle of secretism without an understanding of its treacherous schemes, I again enclose you $2 20 for this fearless advocate, which so nobly exposes the enemy's works."

Philip Bacon, Weatogue, Conn., writes:

"I have met several strong friends of our work who knew nothing of the N. C. A. or the Cynosure. I trust the Lord will bless his own truth to the hearts of these new-found friends, and that great good may be done in the name of the Lord Jesus."

D. D. Beal, Hamilton, O., writes:

"I send you the money for another year, and a hearty God speed in your efforts in grappling with the tyrant of tyrants. Victory is begluning to perch on the side of Him who 'In secret said nothing.' I trust you will push the battle to the very gates of the enemy."

Fred. Huber, New Corner, Ind., writes:

"Four of the Walker and Kirkpatrick tickets I had were voted. They did some good in advertising our cause. I have two neighbors who came to me for books and papers, who say they will forever quit the lodge. One is a four-degree Odd-fellow, and the other is a Mason and Odd-fellow, and a preacher in charge here of the M. E. church."

A subscriber from Atlanta, Kan., writes:

"I am not neither a Mason nor an Odd-fellow, and if I were I would not consider it anybody's business but my own."

We do not consider this spirit in accordance with Christ's example and teachings, but more like the thrifty foreigner who, when urged to encourage his shiftless neighbors to practice industry and frugality, answered, "I takes care of myself, dey must take care of demselves." Or like the priest and Levite, in the Good Samaritan story, who "passed by on the other side."

A. C. Bundy, Alpha, Ill., writes:

"One Methodist preacher, who had formerly been both Odd-fellow and Mason, after renouncing both gave me a hearty shake of the hand, saying, 'I am now as strong an Anti-mason as you are.' I hope he will subscribe for the Cynosure and become a power in the hands of the Lord for good. I feel that the prayers of many have been answered by the stand that Moody takes in regard to secret societies Count me a life subscriber to your paper."

Rev. Wm. Blair, Glensville, N. Y., sends the paper to a friend at his own expense, and writes:

"If nothing more is effected, I will try at least to leave some people without excuse."

Geo. M. Smith, Linden, Mich., writes:

"I wish that every reader of the Cynosure would make an earnest effort to enlarge the list of subscribers, and become more zealous and determined workers in this cause of God and humanity."

John Milner, Greenfield, O., sends one new subscriber, and writes:

"I hope he will make a worker in our great undertaking to break up the dark dens of secrecy. He had never heard of the Cynosure, nor of any organized movement to break down the powers of darkness. He was glad to hear the good news, and said, 'I want the paper in my house. I want to give it to the preachers when they stop at my house, for many of them are Freemasons.'"

J. M. Marks, Lebanon, Oregon, writes:

"Send on the paper, and give us the light, that all may see."

L. Ketchum, Riceville, Pa., writes:

"I am still desirous for the success of our anti-secret cause. I have not much faith in the administration of our government until the downfall of secretism takes place. May our Heaveuly Father hasten the glad day when Baal worship shall cease in both country and city, church and state."

E. McCoy, Union City, Mich., writes:

"I am bold to stand up for the right in this glorious warfare against Masonry, Odd-fellows, Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, and grangers, all of which I think are the work of the devil to prevent men from trusting in Christ for salvation. I love my brother man, but I hate the institution that binds men in oaths that all must be done and kept in secret from the outside world, and then call it charity of the pure kind, and religion, too, and at the same time ignore Jesus Christ and all the teachings of the New Testament, and even teach ministers that it will not interfere with religion, before being blindfolded and led like an ox to the slaughter."

A. Needies, Sparta, O., writes:

"I plainly see that the leaven is at work."

B. C. Elrod, Orleans, Ind., writes:

"I still live in hopes of doing something for the good cause after awhile."

Mrs. B. N. Cravath, St. Charles, Minn., writes:

"This is a hard city. Masonry prevails with intemperance. I pray the time may come when both of these sins will be done away with, and Christ's kingdom built up instead."

Anson Larabee, Crown Point, Ind., writes:

"I am personally acquainted with at least a score of ministers who have been, and are still, striving to work for the Lord in this vicinity, and I have never heard but one of them say anything in public against secret societies. I have therefore adopted this rule, never to pay anything for the support of any minister of the Gospel who will not publicly renounce every principle of secret oath-bound societies. My health is very poor, but I shall continue to work for the Cynosure and the general cause of anti-secrecy until the end."

J. S. Gard, Warren, Ind., writes:

"We have considerable opposition to contend with from the lodge, but a glance at Ronayne's pictures puts them to silence."

H. W. Clark, Hebron, Ill., writes:

"I am surprised, and often much pained, to see the neglect with which the tract fund is treated, even by the friends of this great reform. The importance of the work, and calls for more money to furnish more tracts to supply the increasing demand has frequently been presented in the Cynosure, yet but few respond. In every paper we see reports of 'tracts sent,' but in many papers no report of 'donations to tract fund.' Every friend of the cause should, and I believe will, willingly help this work if the affair is taken hold of in the proper manner. I will here give my plan. I drew up a subscription paper, as follows:

"We the undersigned do pay the sums set opposite our names, to be used as follows, viz: One-half given as donation to the Anti-mason tract fund, and one-half for tracts for free distribution in our community.' I found it worked 'like a charm.' The first man on whom I called gave one dollar, and his hired man gave twenty-five cents. Another gave fifty cents; all the rest twenty-five cents each. I found that the Cynosure subscribers gave the larger sums. Now is there not one or more in every place where the Christian Cynosure is taken who will start in this work immediately. If so, then within four weeks the dollars will roll into the treasury by thousands, and all who wish can have tracts free. Remember that every dollar donated to this fund counts two. I think those who have a mind to try this plan had better donate two-thirds of the money raised, and one-third returned in tracts for distribution. Now, friends of this reform, friends of the world's Saviour, here is work for you, and you can do it. Here is work for the boys and girls. Who will get the most money for the tract fund. Start out with a subscription paper at once. Some boy or girl can get five dollars. Try—try hard."

FROM THE SECRETARY.

That for which so many have devoutly prayed and earnestly labored is beginning to be realized at 221 West Madison street in this city. This has for two years been a point of special interest to a large class of Christian men and women throughout this country, but recently it has become a point of influence and is already giving back to generous contributors the early fruits which foretoken a bountiful harvest. Those who have aided in reaching the present advanced position will feel a satisfaction and loyal pride in the fact that they are sustaining active aggressive movements against the realm of secretism in this city and over the whole land, and will doubtless be inspired by past success to new and bolder undertakings.

The National Christian Association obtained possession and control of this property April 1, 1876, and has since that time been moving steadily and cautiously in the direction of its occupancy for the business and objects of the anti-secrecy reform work. At the close of regular religious services in the great Tabernacle there was a favorable opening for a West Side daily noon prayer-meeting, and it was decided to open a room in the Carpenter building for that purpose. The upper story, a room twenty-five by seventy-five feet was unoccupied and could readily be fitted up to accommodate some three hundred persons. This room, made neat and commodious, supplied with chairs, stoves, platform, table and other conveniences and lighted with gas is both cheerful and attractive. It is the "upper chamber" where the Lord's disciples may gather and speak and pray without let or hindrance, and we hope that if any of our speaking brethren visit the city they will send us word in advance that arrangements may be made to hear from them.

Since January 17th this room has been occupied for a daily union noon prayer meeting with a Gospel meeting once each week. On Friday of each week the subject is "Gospel Temperance," and on Saturday the Sabbath school lesson for the following Sabbath. These meetings have been owned of God in the conversion of souls and the quickening of Christians, and will, we trust, be remembered in the prayers of Christian people throughout the land.

On Monday evening of each week the Ladies' West Side Temperance Union occupy the Hall and the last Wednesday of each month it is occupied a part of the day by the Ladies' West Side Union of Christian Workers. Thursday evening of each week is devoted especially to our anti-secrecy reform work, which, with such occasional meetings as may be required, is the use now made of the third or upper story of the Carpenter building.

Room No. 2 on the second floor is occupied as a free reading room, which has been partially supplied with necessary fixtures and suitable reading matter, but which needs to be enlarged and improved as soon as our means will permit. A full assortment of our books are kept on sale and a supply of our own and a few other religious tracts for gratuitous distribution. The room is cared for and kept open by a competent young man from nine A. M. until nine P. M., and all who come are made welcome. Some are reached by this means with a tract or occasional word who could not be otherwise so well approached.

In this work we expected opposition and have not been disappointed. The direct and indirect attacks of the lodge would have been simply shameful and villainous coming from any other source. Reform means nothing if it does not mean opposition to existing and prevailing evils, and devils were never known to go out of the church or of society without crying out "Let us alone," and rending the body they were compelled to forsake, as they did the "man with an unclean spirit" whom Christ found in a synagogue at Capernaum on the Sabbath day (see Mark 1: 21–26). Every inch of ground will be hotly contested and victory can be achieved only by the most persistent, uncompromising efforts.

Never before in the history of our reform have we been so favorably situated to repel the assaults of our adversaries and carry on aggressive campaigns against them. The whole land is dotted over with lodges, and every city of any note has its temple, built in some instances at a cost of millions of dollars, where Sir Knights practice their manual of arms and prepare for the contest, while at 221 West Madison street, Chicago, stands, as a light-house in the midst of breakers, or a "lamb among wolves," the only building on this continent held for the exclusive purpose of "exposing withstanding and removing secret societies, Freemasonry in particular." It rises up among the gorgeous temples "where Satan's seat is," as John Quincy Adams rose in a pro-slavery Congress to plead the cause of righteousness and human freedom, and no finite mind can comprehend the important interests that cluster around and go out from this one spot consecrated to God and the unrestricted proclamation of his truth.

Shall we "Hold the Fort" or shall we allow the enemy to exult over its surrender for want of the comparatively small sum required and which is necessary to secure not only a temporary occupancy but the fee simple of this landmark and light-house of the age. My fervent appeal is to the friends of righteousness and truth who know and hate the wickedness of the lodge to come "up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against" this mighty one, by completing the amount required in the just and liberal proposal of Mr. Carpenter with which you are already familiar. Statistics recently submitted to the readers of the Cynosure show that $23,257.46 of the $30,000 required have been already provided for and it seems but just and right that this matter should be closed up before our annual meeting in June approaching. Fellow soldiers, what do you say and what will you do? Let us hear from you. Shall we "Hold the Fort?"

J. P. Stoddard.

The Federal Balance.

There is every reason to believe that the scales of American national politics will continue wavering for the next four years. No real principle divides the two great parties, and as a slight weight turns an even scale, the parties of reform, if they unite, will surely furnish that weight and control the destinies of this great country by wielding the balance of power.

Our first effort should now be to form acquaintance with the leaders of the Prohibition party, and the constituency of the "National Reform." The sentiments put forth by some of these bodies are admirable respecting the recognition of God, the Bible, and Christian morality; and if we can form a compact, unflinching phalanx of voters, who will carry their principles to the polls, we may compel the selection of unforsworn candidates by the two large parties, or even absorb one of them, as the anti-slavery sentiment of the country created and characterized successively the Freesoil and Republican parties, and drove the defiant slave power to the wall.

No one of the reform parties can stand but ours, for the plain reason that they all ignore and embrace the lodge, which by its spurious worship cuts loose from God, the only source of reform. The only law of right and wrong among heathen is the law of the strongest arm and the most cunning contrivance: and the lodge is heathenism. Paul could do nothing with the consciences of the Areopagites on Mars Hill till he had first set up in their understanding the idea of God, and thus given them a standard of right by which to test their actions. Had he opened his discourse with a denunciation of idolatry as wrong,—"wrong!" "wrong!" they must have puzzled, "Which god does that go against?" So with the lodge-worshipper. His oaths of allegiance and cut-throat penalties are made nugatory by the variety of secret "orders," each presenting allegiance to itself as the law of right, and breaking down conscience as a variety of marriages breaks down virtue.

While with patriotic Americans we hail, therefore, the settling of the presidency on the person of Mr. Hayes, let us keep our excellent flag at our mast-head until our platform becomes that of the country, and ours is indeed "a Christian and not a heathen country."

The Christian Patriot.—The treasurer of the Kansas State Association, Mr. C. A. Sexton, of Topeka, has taken a new step forward in his publication work for the reform, and in connection with Rev. J. T. Kiggins of Wilson, Kansas, has begun to issue a monthly with the above title. The Patriot though not large, is sound and earnest and begins on such terms as will prevent loss to subscribers. A list of five hundred will sustain the enterprise for a year and subscribers need not send their money until this number is secured and the regular issue begins. All lists of subscribers to be sent to C. A. Sexton, Topeka, Kansas. We hope this new reform journal will be quickly placed on a permanent footing and the new settlements thronging the wide Missouri valley be leavened by its testimonies for truth.

—Bro. Philip Kribs of Lamartine, Pa., desires any reader of the paper who may be able to furnish a list of the secret orders now in the country, with the date of their origin. Such a list has been once or twice published in years past, but it is well to keep such information freshly before the people.

—A friend in Indiana calls for the Secretary's report of the late State Convention at West Newton. One or two reports have been published but nothing official. Though late a brief report would be of value to many friends in that State.

—Communications from Indiana and Illinois of general interest are withheld until the writers forward their names to the editor. It is necessary to require so much as this as a pledge of good faith. The name need not be given to the public if good and sufficient reasons appear, though it has ever been our rule to discourage the use of fictitious signatures.

—Through the kindness of Bro. J. P Bartlett of Blackberry, Illinois, we have been permitted to read a letter direct from New Orleans regarding the recent attempted assassination of Gov. Packard. Weldon, who attempted the deed, is a Freemason and it is pretty well established belongs to Fernwood Lodge, No. 534, Philadelphia. Gov. Packard, whatever may be his failings or virtues in other respects is not a Freemason, so that if he succeeds it will not be by grips so far as he is concerned, nor is he at the same time under any obligation to the White League.

— The idea seeming to prevail in some places that Pastmaster Ronayne is employed by the National Association, and therefore no arrangements are required with him personally for services, we are desired to call attention to the mistake. He is working entirely independent of the Association or the Cynosure, except such aid as we are able to give by extending notices, publishing reports, and other "like aid and comfort." In some cases he has had far from a fair treatment, his pay hardly covering traveling expenses. "Brethren," says Father Auten, "we must prove ourselves Anti-masons by our walk and talk and purse, and tear off our purse strings and throw them away," rather than allow ourselves to be overcome by the lodge.

—A paragraph from an interesting letter from Dr. Montfort in the Herald and Presbyter descriptive of Egyptian ruins is a striking illustration of the argument of Prof. O. F. Lumry a week or two since on 'Freemasonry the Pantheon of False Religions." The lodge exists for and shelters all false systems of worship. Only Christianity is wholly separate and exclusive so far as such religions are concerned. The letter says of the Egyptian structures: "Many of the temples have additions made to them by the Greeks and Romans, while Egypt was under their control. Idolatrous nations generally have been quite willing to add the religion of a conquered country to their own. The ruins of Baalbec, in Syria, seem to indicate a partnership between Baal and Jupiter."

—The last Iowa Freeman has a cheering item in its report of revival meetings held by the Free Methodist brethren at Plymouth, Iowa, under the charge of Rev. G. C. Coffee. Members of other churches who attended received the sanctification of the Spirit, and some most interesting special cases are given in the following:

"During the meeting, Bro. C. W. Tenney, a seceding Mason of three degrees, has told the people what he knows about bond Masonry, and the superintendent of the village Sabbath school, a Congregationalist, and heretofore an adhering Mason, has made a clean confession of his guilt in having taken the horrid oaths, and submitted to the beastly rites and ceremonies of initiation practiced by the order, and in having given his money and influence to sustain it. This brother thought for a time that it would answer to simply cease to attend the meetings of the lodge, but when 'God softened his heart, and the Almighty troubled him,' he clearly saw that the only road to peace was by a full and free confession of his sin. This will be found to be so in the case of every one who has been drawn into this whirlpool of profanity and blasphemy."

OBITUARY.

EMMA A. WALLACE, wife of W. A. Wallace, died in New Concord, Ohio, on the morning of February 19th, of peritonitis in the thirty-eighth year of her age. She leaves a husband and two little children to mourn under the afflicting hand of God.

Thousands will read with sorrow the above announcement, who have become acquainted with Mrs. Wallace through the able productions of her pen. So far as we are informed her labors in this direction were given almost entirely to the cause of reform, and have received and merited high appreciation. Her contributions have been chiefly given to the reading public through the Anti-masonic Christian Herald, in the management of which she was a self-denying and faithful assistant of her bereaved husband. A more popular use of her talents might have gained the favor of the world and its rewards, yet such emoluments are nothing to those words of Christ, "She hath done what she could."

Religious Intelligence.

—The quarterly meeting of the Wesleyan Methodists held last month in Mason City, Iowa, was conducted by Rev. E. I. Grinnell who was faithful to the truth and the testimony of the church against the lodge, and was cheered by a hopeful revival which sprang from the meeting.

—The Free Methodist churches of Noble county, Ohio, have been greatly enlarged and strengthened during the past winter by a series of revival meetings in several towns. Over 125 conversions are reported and 89 united with that testifying church.

—The U. B. Board of Missions will hold its next annual meeting in Vermillion, Edgar county, Illinois, commencing Tuesday evening, May 8th, at 7:30 P. M. Rev. W. J. Shuey will preach the annual sermon.

—A prominent Unitarian minister has been prophesying that Unitarianism will soon die out in this country unless something be done to infuse new life into it. Three Unitarian churches in Boston, Mass., are now occupied by Roman Catholics, one by Presbyterians, one by Baptists, one by Universalists and one by Jews.

—Rev. W. T. Moffett, Agent of the United Presbyterian Synod of Illinois, reports hopefully concerning the loan fund for the Chicago church. Rev. Mr. Bain's congregation is reported to be in a prosperous condition, and is cheered by the prospect of a speedy removal of a burdensome debt.

—The quadrennial conference of the churches of the United Brethren in Christ meets this year in Westfield, Clark county, Ill., beginning May 10th and continuing two or three weeks. The conference will come into a congenial atmosphere at Westfield, for nowhere are the principles of the church held in more honor.

—The twenty-six ministers of the Sandusky district of the United Brethren church hold their twentieth semi-annual ministerial association at Bascum, O., April 10th. Among the appointments are the names of Revs. Harbaugh, Caldwell, Long, Miller and Raudebaugh who are more or less identified with our reform in a friendly way, while Revs. Bulger and Rose are otherwise known to many of our readers.

—A Christian Convention for New England similar to that held in Chicago, Philadelphia and New York is to be held in the Boston Tabernacle beginning on Tuesday evening next, March 13th. Moody and Sankey conduct the meetings as here and the topics discussed will be similar.

—The union effort resumed under Major Whittle in this city will be continued until April, perhaps later. There will be preaching every evening in Farwell Hall and every Sabbath afternoon in the Tabernacle. Mr. James McGranahan conducts the singing.

The poorest education that teaches self-control is better than the best that neglects it.

The Home Circle.

The Resting-Place.

A voice has called me to the wilderness
For quiet rest,
Far from the place which rapid footsteps press
In eager quest;
And here I lie and wait from morn to night
Till there shall be
Some marching order sent in words of light
To set me free.

But while I walk within this Achor-vale
I look away
To where the sunny joys of life prevail,
And hear One say,
"After the quiet and the rest of life
Thou shalt be strong;
And when has died away the noise of strife
Thou shalt have song."

And he shall teach me in these quiet days
Of peace and rest,
The old, forgotten songs of joyous praise
Which I loved best;
And so that he be with me while I stay,
And make me glad,
There is no hour of all the passing day
That can be sad.

And so I thank the Father-voice that bade
Me rest awhile,
Where visions of the future make me glad;
And in his smile
The quiet days shall pass, till once again
It is his will
That I should leave the vale of night and pain,
And serve him still.

The Bible and Creeds.

It is not to be assumed by the Christian or the infidel, that we have in fact, in our creeds and in our interpretation of the Bible, precisely the system which was revealed. That we have the true record in the Bible we are to believe, and the infidel may hold us to that; but that we have the proper interpretation of that record is not to be assumed as certain. Christianity has been transmitted to us from a far-distant age. It has come in contact with all the philosophical systems in the world. Its outward form has been much moulded by philosophy, much by its alliance with the State. The synods and councils that have determined the creeds of the church have been, like other assemblies, composed of imperfect men—often of men more under the influence of philosophy than religion; often ignorant of the plainest rules of exegesis; and often seeking rather to establish a hierarchy than to promote the kingdom of Christ. As a matter of fact, we know that during that long period there is no absurdity of doctrine or interpretation which has not been embraced by the church; almost no error which has not been sanctioned by synods and councils; almost no truth the belief of which has not exposed him who held it to persecution by the church itself.

Christianity has thus come down to us through the descent of eighteen centuries, collecting in its progress whatever of good or bad there might be that could in any way be made to adhere to it; adopting as its own the opinions in mental philosophy, and the doctrines of science, true or false, which have prevailed in the world; and uniting all in its symbols of faith—taking the church at large, a vast and monstrous conglomeration of original sacred truth, and of the errors and absurdities which the world has accumulated in the lapse of ages.

It is a ship, not now just sailing out of port, fresh and new and clean, but one that has sailed afar, and has collected in distant seas, whatever of barnacles and sea-weed that could be made to adhere to it. Those barnacles and that sea-weed must be detached from it if the ship is to be made to traverse safely distant seas again. A great part of the work of the church in modern times, has been to detach from it the errors and corruptions which it had accumulated in the long period of its history. This was, in fact, the main service which Luther rendered to the church, restoring it in a great measure, to its pristine beauty, purity and vigor.

This is the service which has been rendered by modern sacred criticism; this is the work to be done by the efforts to secure a correct text of the Bible; this is the work to be done by the application of the canons of criticism to the Word of God.—Albert Barnes.

Family Prayer.

I know a man. He is not a Christian. His daily life is not in accordance with even principles of morality. He has three beautiful, well-behaved children. The other day he told me this incident of one of them, his little girl, three or four years old:

Said he: "Perhaps some people would think it sacrilege, but I don't; but for some time back I have been in the habit of reading the Bible and of having prayers every night before the children go to bed. I have done it because it has a good influence on the children, and because I hope it may have a good influence on myself. Last night I went to the lodge (he is a Mason), and did not get home till after 11 o'clock. The children, of course, were all abed, and I supposed asleep. Before going to bed I knelt down by my bed to pray, and had been there but a moment when I heard Nabbie get up from her bed in the next room, and her little feet came pattering across the floor to me. I kept perfectly still, and she came and knelt down beside me, without saying a word. I did not notice her, and in a moment, speaking just above her breath, she said: 'Pa, pray 'oud.' I prayed. I kissed her, and she went back to bed. And I tell you I have had nothing affect me so for the last ten years. I have thought of nothing else all day long but just that little, 'Pa, pray 'oud.'" —Dr. Haven.

The praise of man is not a test of our praiseworthiness, nor is their censure; but either should set us upon testing ourselves.—Whately.

Oaths—Their Form and Force in Different Countries.

[From Macmillan's Magazine.]

When a Galla of Abyssinia sits down over a pit covered with a hide, imprecating that he may fall into a pit if he breaks his word, or when in our police courts we make a Chinaman swear by taking an earthern saucer and breaking it on the rail in front of the witness-box, signifying , as the interpreter then puts it in words, "If you do not tell the truth, your soul will be cracked like this saucer," we have here two full oaths, of which the penalty, magical or religious, is shown in pantomime before us. By the way, the English judges who authorized this last sensational ceremony must have believed that they were calling on a Chinaman to take a judicial oath after the manner of his own country; but they acted under a mistake, for in fact the Chinese use no oaths at all in their law courts. Now, we have to distinguish these real oaths from mere asseverations, in which emphatic terms or descriptive gestures are introduced merely for the purpose of showing the strength of resolve in the declarer's mind. Where, then, does the difference lie between the two? It is to be found in the incurring of supernatural penalty. There would be no difficulty at all in clearing up the question were it not that theologians have set up a distinction between oaths of imprecations and oaths of witnesses. Such subtleties, however, looked at from a practical point of view, are seen to be casuistic cobwebs which a touch of the rough broom of common sense will sweep away. The practical question is this: Does the swearer mean that by going through the ceremony he brings on himself, if he breaks faith, some special magic harm, or divine displeasure and punishment? If so, the oath is practically imprecatory; if not, it is futile, wanting the very sanction which gives it legal value. It does not matter whether the imprecation is stated, or only implied. When a Bedouin picks up a straw, and swears by him who made it grow and wither, there is no need to accompany this with a homily on the fate of the perjured. This reticence is so usual in the world that as often as not we have to go outside the actual formula and ceremony to learn what their full intention is.

Let us now examine some typical forms of oath. The rude natives of New Guinea swear by the sun, or by a certain mountain, or by a weapon, that the sun may burn them, or the mountain crush them, or the weapon wound them if they lie. The even ruder savages of the Brazilian forests, to confirm their words, raise the hand over the head or thrust it into their hair, or they will touch the points of their weapons. These two accounts of savage ceremonies introduce us to customs well known to nations of higher culture. The raising of the hand toward the sky seems to mean here what it does elsewhere. It is in gesture calling on the heaven god to smite the perjurer with his thunderbolt. The touching of the head, again, carries its meaning among these Brazilians, almost as plainly as in Africa, where we find men swearing by their heads or their limbs, in the belief that they would wither if forsworn; or, as when among the old Prussians a man would lay his right hand on his own neck, and his left on the holy oak, saying, "May Perkun (the thunder god) destroy me!" As to swearing by weapons, another graphic instance of its original meaning comes from Aracan, where the witness, swearing to speak the truth, takes in his hand a musket, a sword, a spear, a tiger's tusk, a crocodile's tooth, and a thunderbolt (that is, of course, a stone celt). The oath by the weapon not only lasted on through classic ages, but remained so common in Christendom that it was expressly forbidden by a Synod. Even in the seventeenth century to swear on the sword (like Hamlet's friend in the ghost scene) was still a legal oath in Holstein. As for holding up the hand to invoke the personal divine sky, the successor of this primitive gesture remains to this day among the chief acts in the solemn oaths of European nations.

It could scarcely be shown more clearly with what childlike imagination the savage conceives that a symbolic action, such as touching his head or his spear, will somehow pass into reality. In connection with this group of oaths we can carry yet a step further the illustration of the way men's minds work in this primitive stage of association of ideas. One of the accounts from New Guinea is, that the swearer, holding up an arrow, calls on heaven to punish him if he lies; but by turning the arrow the other way, the oath can be neutralized. This is magic all over. What one symbol can do, the reverse symbol can undo. True to the laws of primitive magical reasoning, uncultured men elsewhere still carry on the symbolic reversal of their oaths. An Abyssinian Chief, who had sworn an oath he disliked, has been seen to scrape it off his tongue and spit it out. There are still places in Germany where the false witness reckons to escape the spiritual consequences of perjury by crooking one finger to make it, I suppose, not a straight but a crooked oath, or he puts his left hand to his side to neutralize what his right hand is doing. Here is the idea of our "over the left;" but so far as I know this has come down with us to mere schoolboy's shuffling.

A group of instructive rites belongs to Central and North Asia. Probably to this day there may be seen in Russian law courts in Siberia the oath on the bear's head. When an Ostyak is to be sworn a bear's head is brought into court, and the man makes believe to bite at it, calling on the bear to devour him in like manner if he does not tell the truth. Now, the meaning to this act goes beyond magic and into religion, for we are here in the region of bear worship, among people who believe that this wise and divine beast knows what goes on and will come and punish them. Nor need one wonder at this, for the idea that the bear will hear and come if called on is familiar to German mythology. I was interested to find it still in survival in Switzerland a few years ago, when a peasant woman, whom a mischievous little English boy had irritated beyond endurance, pronounced the ancient awful imprecation on him, "the bear take thee!" (der Barnimm dich!) Among the hill tribes of India a tiger's skin is sworn on in the same sense as the bear's head among the Ostyaks. Rivers, again, which to the savage and barbarian are intelligent divinities, are sworn by in strong belief that their waters will punish him who takes their name in vain. We can understand why Homeric heroes swore by the rivers, when we hear still among Hindus how the sacred Ganges will take vengeance sure and terrible on the children of the perjurer. It is with the same personification, the same fear of impending chastisement from the outraged deity, that savage and barbaric men have sworn by sky or sun. Thus the Huron Indian would say in making a solemn promise: "Heaven hears what we do this day!" and the Tunguz, brandishing a knife before the sun would say: "If I lie, may the sun plunge sickness into my entrails like this knife." We have but to rise one stage higher in religious ideas to reach the type of the famous Roman oaths by Jupiter, the heaven god. He who swore held in his hand a stone, praying that, if he knowingly deceived, others might be safe in their countries and laws, their holy places and their tombs, but he alone might be cast out as this stone now—and he flung it from him. Even more impressive was the great treaty-oath where the pater patratus, holding the sacred flint that symbolized the thunderbolt, called on Jove that if by public counsel or wicked fraud the Romans should break the treaty first—"in that day, O Jove, smite thou the Roman people as I here to-day shall smite this swine, and smite the heavier as thou art the stronger!" So saying he slew the victim with the sacred stone.

In court lately a little girl was asked the usual preliminary question, as to the consequence of swearing falsely, and answered in due form, "Please, sir, I should go to burning hell!" Unluckily, however, the unusual question was then put, how she knew that. Which brought the reply, "Oh, please, another girl outside told me I was to say so!"

England early in the present century was still, as a contemporary writer called it, "a land of oaths," and the professional perjurer plied a thriving trade. A single illustration will suffice, taken from the valuable treatise on oaths published in 1834 by the Rev. James Endell Tyler: "During the continuance of the former system of custom-house oaths there were houses of resort where persons were always to be found ready at a moment's warning to take any oath required; the signal of the business for which they were needed was this inquiry, 'Any damned soul here?'" Nowadays this enormous excess of public oaths has been much cut down, and with the best results.

THE LETTERS AT SCHOOL.

One day the letters went to school,
And tried to learn each other;
They got so mixed 'twas really hard
To pick out one from t'other.

A went in first, and Z went last;
The rest all were between them,—
K, L and M, and N, O, P,—
I wish you could have seen them!

B, C, D, E and J, K, L,
Soon jostled with their betters;
Q, R, S, T,—I grieve to say—
Were very naughty letters.

Of course, ere long, they came to words—
What else could be expected?
Till E made D, J, C and T
Decidedly dejected.

Now, through it all, the Consonants
Were rudest and uncouthest,
While all the pretty Vowel girls
Were certainly the smoothest.

And simple U kept far from Q,
With face demure and moral,
"Because," she said, "we are, we two,
So apt to start a quarrel!"

But spiteful P said, "Pooh for U!"
(Which made her feel quite bitter),
And, calling O, L, E to help,
He really tried to hit her.

Cried A, "Now E and C, come here!
If both will aid a minute,
Good P will join in making peace,
Or else the mischief's in it."

And smiling E, the ready sprite,
Said, "Yes, and count me double."
This done, sweet peace shone o'er the scene,
And gone was all the trouble!

Meanwhile, when U and P made up,
The Cons'nants looked about them,
And kissed the Vowels, for, you see,
They couldn't do without them.

GOOD FOR EVIL.

"Mamma," said my little Charlie, "now that I have a new sled, what shall I do with the old one?" His face wore a puzzled look for a little while, when a thought struck him. "Mamma, there's a chance to do something real good, too. What's the use talking so much about a thing, and never doing it?"

"What, Charlie?"

"Well, mamma, if there's any boy in the world that I dislike, that boy is Sim. Tyson. He's always plaguing and teasing me, and all the other little boys, either taking our things from us or pretending that he's going to. It never does any good to get cross; for that's just what he likes. But, better even than this, Sim. does like a sled. And—well, maybe it's foolish; but I've half a notion to give the old sled to him. It might make him think, and so do him good; mightn't it, mamma?"

"Yes, it might," said the mother.

So Sim. got Charlie's sled, which pleased and touched him beyond everything; and they do say he is kinder, not only to the little boys, but to everybody, than he was before.

TRUE STORY OF A HORSE.

One bitter cold morning, last winter, as I was standing with my little Charley at the front parlor window, I saw a quiet old horse coming down the street, drawing a light wagon, and driven by a neatly dressed young man. They came on until they were just in front of our house, when the horse stopped, backed the wagon up the curb-stone, and refused to go any further. The young man tried to urge the horse, but the horse would not go; then he sat down and waited patiently, speaking kindly; then he jumped out, pulled off his gloves, and patted the horse, and rubbed him, and took hold of his bridle to lead him. It was of no use; so he got up on the seat again, and hit him with the whip, saying:

"Get up!" as loud as he could.

But he could not force the horse to move; so he got out and rubbed and patted him again, whistling and swinging his arms to keep himself warm; for the air was very keen and sharp.

At last, after a long struggle, when he found the horse would not go an inch for him, he called a man who came hurrying down to see what he could do. Together they worked, first coaxing, then whipping, again and again, but all to no purpose; for the poor animal would not go one step.

At last I became very restless at the sight of so much useless beating, and said to my little boy: "Charley, go down to the cook, and tell her mamma wants her to give you a lump of sugar as large as your hand."

"And what shall I do with it, mamma?" said he.

"Take it out to the man, and ask him to give it to the horse," was the reply.

Charley was pleased with the errand, and going quickly to the cook he got the sugar and carried it out.

"Mister, mister!" I heard him say, "here is some sugar to sweeten that old horse and make him go; give it to him."

"My old horse is sweet as honey, now," said the man, laughing. But he took the sugar and gave it to the poor animal, who was so pleased with it that he rolled it over and over on his tongue and licked his mouth, and seemed to enjoy it greatly.

When the man had waited until he had finished it they got into the wagon, pulled the reins, and said, "Get up!" and the pleased horse "got up" and went on.

Charley came in shivering, but delighted. "If I were that man," said he, "I would always carry a lump of sugar in my pocket when I had to drive that horse on a cold morning."—Nursery.

"Charlie," said the teacher of an infant-class to a little boy who, on account of his poverty, had come many Sundays without a copper for the missionary-box, but who had now eagerly dropped a coin into it, "Charlie, where did you get that halfpenny?" "Please, teacher," said the little fellow, his face all aglow with delight, "please, teacher, I found a ginger-beer bottle, and sold it for a halfpenny, and thought I should like to put it into the missionary-box."

Home and Farm.

SCARLET FEVER.—Scarlatina and Scarlet Fever are one and the same disease. It is very infectious. A very mild case may give rise by infection to a very severe one. Infection is contained in all discharges from the body during the progress of the disease and recovery; but more especially from the skin during convalescence, and when the cuticle is being shed. The dry particles which are separated from the skin are highly infectious, and retain their infectious nature for an unknown time, unless thoroughly disinfected. They are disseminated through the air, and become attached to articles of furniture, clothing, draperies, and wall papers, etc. Thus the disease may readily be conveyed from one person to another by those who are not themselves suffering from it. It is also conveyed, as has been mentioned, by bedding, clothing, furniture and other articles, and by rooms which, having been exposed to infection, have not had their floors, ceilings, or walls disinfected, or had the wall papers removed.

No child should be permitted to go to school from an infected house, and communication of such in play or otherwise with healthy children should be prevented.

When a person has had the disease, he should not be permitted to mix with others until he has perfectly recovered and has had his clothes thoroughly disinfected; and not even then without the permission of his medical attendant. Nor is it advisable that any one who has had the slightest communication with a person suffering from the disease should go to any church, meeting, public-house, fair, or market, etc. Neglect of these precautions is a prolific cause of the spread of this disease.

Attendants on persons suffering from Scarlatina should be chosen, if possible, from those who have already had the disease.

"It is believed that the dispersion of contagious dust from the patient's skin is impeded by keeping his entire body (including limbs, head and face), constantly anointed with oil or other grease; and some practitioners also believe this treatment to be of advantage to the patient himself. When the patient's convalescence is complete, the final disinfection of his surface should be effected by warm baths, with abundant soap, taken on three or four successive days (under the direction of the medical attendant), till no trace of roughness of the skin remains. After this process, and with clean clothes, he may be deemed again safe for association; but previously to this, however slight may have been his attack, he ought always to be regarded as dangerous to persons susceptible of Scarlatina."—MR. SIMON, Medical Officer to Privy Council.

FOUNDATIONS FOR WALLS.—It is a frequent practice in making foundations for walls, even under heavy structures, to dig a trench and fill it with coarse gravel, or fine or broken stone. This saves labor and supplies a drain for water. It is, however, a very bad practice, and one which no skillful mechanic will countenance. On such a foundation a heavy wall will inevitably settle, and if unevenly, as it is liable to do, will surely crack, and thus the first step towards destruction is begun. In the course of time the ground softens under such a foundation if water settles there, and thus another way for destruction is opened. We have had some experience by observation, with walls thus built, and they failed invariably, to some extent, after a few years. The foundation should be permanent and immovable. Better dig a wide trench and put firmly in it the largest stone attainable. Fill up the interstices with smaller, and mortar freely. Make the foundation firm and the wall will stand. If small stone are to be used at all in it, lay down first a thick coat of water-proof cement, and imbed the first tier of stone in this. Aim to keep water out of and from under the foundations of the wall, instead of making them a drain for it, if you would build in the most durable manner.—Ex.

KEEPING MICE OUT.—Mouse holes in walls and closets should be first filled with lime and afterward pasted over with plaster of paris, mixed with water. It is a good plan to keep a paper of the latter in every house, as it is useful in filling up cracks, and, in fact, comes in many other ways into household economy.

IF onions are sliced and kept in a sick room they will absorb all the atmospheric poison. They should be changed every hour. In the room of a small-pox patient they blister and decompose very rapidly, but will prevent the spread of the disease. Their application has also proved effectual in the case of snake bites.

VEAL LEFT OVER FROM DINNER.—Cut in small, thin slices, peel and chop two medium-sized onions, fry in a small piece of butter to a light brown, add a dessert-spoonful of flour, then the gravy, if there be any left from dinner, add the meat to this gravy and just heat through. Serve immediately.

DIPHTHERIA.—I want to here send a receipt for the cure of diphtheria, one I have tried in more than a hundred cases, and have never failed yet. Knowing there is much of this much-dreaded disease in the world, I want others to have the benefit of it.

What will last an ordinary family a year is:

Golden seal, 3 oz.;
Bayberry bark, 3 oz.;
Chlorate of potassa, 3 oz.

Of the first two take a table-spoonful each in a half pint hot water, and drink as a tea. The same of potassa in half teacupful of warm water, and use as a gargle, or it may be used in small quantities put in the mouth dry, and let it dissolve and penetrate the tonsils. No danger in using it. Respectfully,

T. K. BUFKIN.

—A San Francisco letter says: "There is less home life here than in any other city in the Union. The mildness of the climate breaks up the domestic circle, and tempts its members to sit apart, or to wander out of doors. A New England winter draws the household together around the stove, or the blazing fireplace. But here we need fire only a few hours in the year. The effect of climate on habits and morals is an interesting study. If our Christian civilization had started on this side of the continent instead of the other it might not have grown as vigorously as it did amid the storms of the Atlantic."

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

MR. MOODY'S SERMON ON "GRACE," BOSTON.

We are told that we should be ready to give a reason for the hope that we have within us. I think I was a Christian a number of years before I could give a Scriptural reason for the hope that was within me. I was about in the condition of the blind man that we are told about in the ninth chapter of John, who said, "I was blind and now I see," but how I was made to see I didn't know. Now, this Scripture I am going to read to-day will give us light, I believe, if we are ready to receive light on this point. I was telling you that were here the other night that perhaps this word was the one least understood in the language, for one that is used so often, this word grace, undeserved mercy, or unmerited favor. There are two classes of people we meet with, one that think they don't need the grace of God, and others that think they don't deserve the grace of God. Now, this first class is the one we want to reach—the class that needs undeserved mercy, unmerited grace. I want to read a few passages to show the source of the river of undeserved mercy that has been flowing through the world these 6,000 years. Some people talk a good deal about the discovery of the source of the Nile, but the discovery of the source of the river of Divine Grace is far more important. Now, in the first chapter of John it says: "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth." And in the seventeenth verse of the same chapter we read, "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

God wants to give his grace to every man and woman in this assembly, and there is only one thing to keep grace from flowing into all our hearts to-day, and that is unbelief. He wants to do us good. He wants to give us the favor of heaven. He wants to smile upon us, and the only thing that keeps it out is this miserable unbelief. You go up in Scotland and you find very often a beautiful farm; in fact I have seen them in the Rocky Mountains, where all around is desolate and barren. But you will find that away up in the mountain there is a spring which comes down into that man's farm and irrigates it. Now, that is just what the Jews were at one time. There was a time when all the blessings of God came through the children of Israel. And when he sent his Son down to just bless them some more the Jews were so self-righteous and so conceited that they said, "O! we are the seed of Abraham, we have got Moses and the laws." But Christ said, "I will give you more, I have come to bless you." They wouldn't have him, and they built up a great wall of unbelief, and now the river of grace is flowing out to all the other nations, and that is the only spot that is dry and desolate. And if you want to find a nation that is wandering over all the face of the earth, without a king, without a nation, look at the Jews. Why? Because they despised Christ and refused grace. And there are a great many people like them to-day, who say, "We are good enough; we will get to heaven without God sending his Son to save us." Men are not willing to become partakers of the grace of God. If you will turn over to the seventh chapter of Mark, you will find who knew just how to get a blessing from him. It begins at the twenty-fourth verse: "And from thence he arose and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into an house, and would have no man know it; but he could not be hid." A man that is following Christ you can't hide. "For a certain woman, whose daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of him, and came and fell at his feet." The woman was a Greek, a Syro-Phœnician by nation; and she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter. But Jesus said unto her: "Let the children first be filled; for it is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it unto the dogs." Now he was just going to try her, and he was also going to give an object lesson to his disciples. He was always trying to teach them what grace was. So he just said that to her to put her to the test. And if she had been like some people in Boston, she would have got mad and said: "You call me a Gentile dog, do you? There's a woman down in my street that isn't any better than I am, nor as good, and she calls herself of the seed of Abraham." But, no, "She answered and said unto him, Yes, Lord; yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs." And instead of giving her a crumb he gave her a whole loaf, and said to her: 'For this saying go thy way, the devil is gone out of thy daughter." Ah! she understood how to obtain a blessing. She was willing to be anything if only he would bless her. It is this miserable pride and unbelief that keeps back the blessing. Now, if you will turn over unto the seventh chapter of Luke you will find just what Jesus' idea was about grace: "Now when he had ended all his sayings in the audience of the people he entered into Capernaum, and a certain centurion's servant, who was dear to him, was sick and ready to die. And when he heard of Jesus he sent unto him the elders of the Jews, beseeching him that he would come and heal his servant." I have great admiration for that centurion—he looked after his servant. I wish Christian people would look after their servants now-a-days. "And when they came to Jesus they besought him instantly, saying that he was worthy for whom he should do this." Now, Lord, they said, we want you to go down and heal this centurion's servant,

BECAUSE HE IS WORTHY,

That was the Jew's idea. "He loveth our nation and hath built us a synagogue." The same old story. Oh, yes; he's worthy. He built a synagogue. He gave one thousand dollars to Harvard University—he's worthy. Let him be stuffed full of vanity and pride; still he's worthy. Give him the best seat you can; he's worthy. The Lord was under no obligation to give him a blessing because he was worthy. A great many men are willing to be blessed if they can be blessed on the ground that they are worthy. But if they must take it as beggars, Oh, no! We often hear about worthy men. He only lacks one thing, they say. Why, a dead man only lacks one thing—that's life. A beggar only lacks one thing—that's riches. If a man lacks one thing he lacks everything. But he was going to teach the Jews a lesson, so he started at once. "And when he was not far from the house the centurion sent friends to him, saying unto him, Lord, trouble not thyself; for I am not worthy that thou shouldst enter under my roof; wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee; but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed." There is humility for you. Not only humility, but there is faith. He believed that the word of God gave light. God grant that the men of Boston might believe that to-day. The moment a man gets into that position God can bless him. And "when Jesus heard these things he marveled at him, and turned him about, and said unto the people that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." He was always pleased if he found faith; nothing on earth pleased him like that. And then he said to the centurian, "Your servant is well." He got all he asked. It is only on record that Christ marveled twice. He marveled at the faith of the centurian, and he marveled at the unbelief of the Jews. Now, I want to call your attention to this fact, that we are not saved by works, but by grace. I don't know how it is about Boston, but I have met this remark here (if one has said it to me fifty have said it): I ask them if they are Christians, and they say, "Yes, sir, but not your style." "Oh, yes, I am a Christian, but not one of your sort." As if I had brought in some heresy here. Now, if I don't preach according to the word of God, don't you believe what I say. If we are saved by works, then the Bible is false. Now, I will try and prove that to you by testimony. Let us see what Scripture says, not what I or any other man says. Turn to the second chapter of Ephesians and read the seventh, eighth and ninth verses: "That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness towards us through Jesus Christ. For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." Wherever you find a man who is working for his salvation he is all the time boasting, "I give to the poor; I visit the sick;" and it's I, I, I, all the time, and if he makes a speech thirty minutes long the printers have to go and borrow some I's to fill out the report. Now, if we are saved, we are not saved by boasting or by works. Will you just turn over to Paul's Epistle to Timothy—the second epistle, the first chapter and the ninth verse: "Who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." God don't save a man on account of his own works. But here is a passage that will make it stronger; in the eleventh chapter of Romans and the sixth verse: "And if by grace then is it no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace; otherwise work is no more work." I see some of you looking around; I want you to listen and know how you are saved, if you are saved, and if not how you may be saved to-day. Now, the reasoning is this, if you are saved by grace you cannot be saved by works. The two are distinct and separate. The Lord ain't in partnership with the sinner in saving him. If we are saved at all it must be the sovereign act of God that saves us. The gift of God is eternal life. If I were to say I would give you this Bible freely, and a man comes up the aisle and says, "I would like to take the Bible, but not on your terms;" another

TAKE IT AS A BEGGAR.

Some one has said that it is the ragged beggar who opens the wardrobe of heaven. Do you understand how you are going to be saved, young lady? It is by just stopping working. "Flesh cannot be overcome by flesh." You say you believe in work. So do I. I will work as hard as any of you, but I work from the cross and not towards it. I will work because I am saved, not because I want to be saved. I knew a man who traveled round the world and got to the Garden of Gethsemane and knelt down there and cried to God, but he found God didn't meet him, and then he came back home and God met him—he found he had been making a fool of himself. Don't insult the Almighty by offering him the fruits of the frail body to atone for sin. His grace is freely offered to you.

WHO WILL TAKE THE GIFT TO-DAY?

Do you think God made a mistake in sending Christ into the world? Do you think that the cross would ever have been erected on Calvary if you could have saved yourself? "There is no other name given under heaven whereby men can be saved except Jesus." The harlots and publicans went into the Kingdom of God before those self-righteous Jews. I remember once preaching to a very fashionable congregation, and I asked any of them who wanted to accept of the grace of God to meet me after the service, and they all went out as if they had been struck by a plague. And I felt cast down about it, but as I came out, up behind the furnace there was a man who hadn't any coat on—he had drank it all up—and he was weeping. And I asked him what was the trouble, and he said, "You said to-night there wasn't a man in Chicago but could be saved by the grace of God. My mother has cast me off, my wife has left me, and I have drank up $21,000 in the last few months. I am lost and ruined." Well, my friends, I could stand there and hold up Christ to that man, and he knelt down and cried to God for mercy. Next day I got him some clothes, and when I sailed for Europe he was one of the brightest lights in Chicago. He was the only one in that church that could take hold of the grace of God; the rest didn't want it. People say, "O, if we could only get a rich Boston merchant into the church, what a power he would be!" My friends, don't forget that God can take up a blaspheming Bedford tinker and make him one of the greatest lights of the world. Yes, these harlots shall go into the kingdom of God before these self-righteous Pharisees who are all the time wrapping their robes of self-righteousness about them.

Young man, the grace of God is here. He brings you salvation, and you can take it and live, or reject it and die. "The grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation unto all men." Some one says that it is universal salvation. Well, that is what the Bible says. It is a universal offer. Everybody can be saved, and they will;

BUT SOME WON'T.

Suppose this pulpit was a wrecked vessel, and I knew it was going down, and a life-boat came along and the captain should say to me, "Moody, jump into it," and I won't jump. Then I'm lost. Whose fault is it? If men go to hell they must go over God's salvation. When Chicago was a little city, away out on those western prairies there was a preacher who sent his son to market with a load of grain. And he fell in with gamblers, who got all the money he had for his father's grain, and then they persuaded him to sell the horse and cart, and they got that money from him, too. They stripped him. And he was afraid to go home, so he fled. The father waited, and waited, and at last went in search of him. He found out about his gambling and he knew what it meant. The boy had got a wrong idea of him. He tracked him to the Pacific coast. He followed him there and put a notice in the San Francisco papers that he was going to preach. And he preached that day and told about that boy, and how his heart was breaking for him, and begged if anyone in that congregation ever saw him to let him know. And when the people had passed out he looked up and saw that son coming up the aisle, and the father recognized him, and the boy began to confess to him, but he stopped him and said: "Oh! I'm so glad to see you, I freely forgive you." And that is grace. That is what God has done for you, sinner. He comes to-day and wants you to come back to the throne of grace. He says to you, "Turn to me to-day and I will forgive you freely." O, may God bring back every wandering child of his is the prayer of my heart.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this Slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

TIN ROOFS

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH:

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 16-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M.E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Hayes is Inaugurated.

Hereby we tender to him and to our readers congratulations in view of our present mercies and opportunities.

We also pray that unmindful of party claims, that rising above the precedents left by ungodly rulers, that with an eye single to the glory of God, which always includes a careful solicitude for the best interests of mankind, President Hayes may live and act from day to day. Let us each so far as our influence extends unite in making his administration a truly successful one.

To this end let us as we have opportunity "MAINTAIN GOOD WORKS." The Cynosure is one of them. Pray for it, work for it.

John Leeper and Samuel Patterson of Senecaville, Ohio, send a club of thirteen new subscribers for the Cynosure, and Mr. Leeper writes: "It looks to me as though Mr. Patterson and myself have been instrumental in putting thirteen agencies in the field to work against the powers of darkness."

Sam'l A. Morse, Worcester, Mass., sends $15.00 and six names toward a club. R. B. Dawson, Baxter, Iowa, sends five for a year.

Notices.

THE TENTH NATIONAL CONVENTION of the National Christian Association will be held this year in Dayton, Ohio. The time will be announced.

IMPORTANT, that every reader of the Cynosure should read the Publishers' Department. What can be done before spring's busy season leaves little time for reform work? Work now for subscribers. Sow the seed with willing zeal, and in due time ye shall reap if ye faint not.

—Rev. W. W. Ames has issued another edition of the Moody tract, which he sells at 50 cents per hundred. Address him at Menomonee, Wis.

TO THE ANTI-MASONS OF MICHIGAN.—The Ypsilanti Convention gave me an order on the State Association for $100. I have received from the Association about $40. At the Hastings Convention the amount due me was pledged, and was to be paid as soon as it could be collected. Soon afterward I decided to relinquish my claim, and so informed Secretary Remington.

I now take pleasure in asking you to consider the account settled. This I do joyfully, believing it to be the will of God.

Truly, A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

IOWA AND SECRETISM.—The Iowa State Convention, opposed to secret societies, will meet at Oskaloosa April 24. This place is a stronghold of Masonry, and the writer hopes the churches and societies will be fully represented, and that everybody will come who can come. Let not the enemy laugh at our insignificant numbers. It is desired that all who intend coming will send in their names in due time, so that arrangements can be made for entertainment. Address

R. A. MCAYEAL,
Oskaloosa, Iowa.

—Past Master Ronayne visits Indian this week and next. He is announced to speak and work the degrees at Leesville, on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week, and in Bloomington next week, from the 20th to the 23d.

All friends in Eastern States desiring a series of public Masonic expositions will please address me at No. 104 Bremer street, Chicago, as I am now ready to make my Eastern trip and would like to start without unnecessary delay. Let arrangements be made for three expositions in each town if possible and when writing give the town, county and state in a legible manner. To avoid delay let me say that $20 in each place will be a sufficient remuneration for all expenses. Michigan and Ohio can be visited either before or after my return. I want to hear right away from Conn., N. J., N. Y., Mass. and N. H.

E. RONAYNE.

THE GRANT COUNTY, IND., CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, opposed to secret societies, will (D. V.) hold its annual meeting at Marion, on Saturday, March 17, at 10 o'clock, A. M. Speakers from abroad are expected to be present, and all those who favor or are opposed to our reform are earnestly desired to be present.

GEO. W. CHAMP, Pres.

Topics of the Time.

The straight-forward, statesman-like address of the new executive, from which liberal extracts appear elsewhere, is praised as with a single voice by the conservative and better elements of both parties, North and South. It is largely a repetition of his letter of acceptance, which many prophesied he could never carry out in the face of such opposition as the leaders of the Republican party would undoubtedly make should such friction be introduced into their party machine. The same doubts have been repeated since the 5th of March, until it is seen that Mr. Hayes intends to carry out his ideas of civil service reform and Southern affairs, party or no party. The selection of his cabinet is a certain evidence of his good intention and manful determination. Delegations from all parties find his knowledge of affairs equal to theirs, and not a few opponents are conquered into respect and admiration even, when they find the new President overmastering them in defending his policy. The yeomanry of the country, it is needless to say, are gratified with the promised effort for pacification and release from the all-devouring politician.

The new administration has gained one victory—the new cabinet officers were confirmed on Saturday, were sworn in on Monday, and on Tuesday attacked the grave question of the double headed State governments of Louisiana and South Carolina. When the list was sent to the Senate, on the 6th, the President was pretty plainly snubbed by having his appointments pigeon-holed among the committees, instead of receiving that immediate confirmation uniformly given to a new cabinet. The temper of the Republican leaders was soon seen, when Blaine, Morton, and Simon Cameron opened their budget. The former began his old time march, with war-bugle accompaniment, and made a flat challenge to the policy of the new executive on the Southern issue. His speeches were interpreted as an effort to rally the strong anti-Southern spirit and keep up the fight as he began it in the House last spring with greater expectation of becoming its hero at next Presidential election than last. But though Mr. Blaine is a 'smart" man, a keen politician, a fine speaker, a bold and self-confident leader, and has everything that is complimentary in a public man, he lacks that wisdom and frankness of character that inspires popular confidence. Conklin, of New York, having placed himself among the supporters of Mr. Hayes and the popular tide setting so high in the same direction as to promise to leave this radical opposition high ashore, the last we hear of Mr. Blaine he is hob-nobbing with Evarts and Schurz and Morton and Cameron voted for the Cabinet entire. Had this partisan ring kept up the fight the result would probably have been a new party combining the conservative elements of both the others. Thousands in the South are driven into the Democratic party by the vindictive spirit of the Northern leaders, and genuine civil service reform would rally an enthusiastic majority at the North. But this is for the future; now President Hayes is confident of his ability to carry out his twice-promised intentions and in so much there is hope and satisfaction in all the land.

A few months since, a Chicago Judge received a petition, signed by thousands, asking him to resign an office whose obligations the public believed he had broken, against the peace of all honest men. He was only enraged at the request, and waited for what was sure to come over the public mind—forgetfulness and neglect. The intervening Presidential election and its long doubt were most favorable to Judge McAllister, and when the murderer of Hanford again came before him, a fortnight since, the falling off of public interest was what might be expected. The same Judge, nearly the same lawyers, and a new jury were engaged in the case, which ended with "not guilty" last week, and that ends it before the law. While further protest is useless before a Chicago court, the guilt of Sullivan is generally believed, and he cannot walk the streets a free man until that belief is removed, and simple justice between man and man, as naturally interpreted, is vindicated.

THY KINGDOM COME.

Thy kingdom come.
I heard a seer cry: "The wilderness,
The solitary place,
Shall yet be glad for him, and he shall bless (Thy kingdom come) with his revealed face
The forests; they shall drop their precious gum,
And shed for him their balm; and he shall yield
The grandeur of his speech to charm the field.

Then all the soothed winds shall drop to listen
(Thy kingdom come).
Comforted waters waxen calm shall glisten
With bashful tremblement beneath his smile;
And echo ever the while
Shall take, and in her awful joy repeat
The laughter of his lips—Thy kingdom come;—
And hills that sit apart shall be no longer dumb;
No, they shall shout and shout,
Raining their lovely loyalty along their dewey plain,
And valleys round about.

And all the well-contented land, made sweet
With flowers she opened at his feet,
Shall answer; shout and make the welkin ring,
And tell it to the stars; shout, shout, and sing;
Her cup being full to the brim,
Her poverty made rich with him,

Her yearning satisfied to the utmost sum—
Lift up thy voice, O earth, prepare thy song,
It shall not yet be long;
Lift up, O earth, for he shall come again,
Thy Lord; and he shall reign, and he SHALL REIGN.
Thy kingdom come." —JEAN INGELOW.

WHAT IS FREEMASONRY?—No. 2.

To the W. M., Wardens and Brethren of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, A. F. and A. M.

CHICAGO, Feb. 27, 1877.

BRETHREN:—In proceeding with our proposed investigation of the principles and symbolisms of Freemasonry it is of the utmost importance that we begin at the very beginning. You have each one of you paid large sums of money amounting in the aggregate to at least fifty dollars to be made Master Masons in Keystone Lodge and attaining to this pre-eminent distinction as you suppose "among men and Masons." You have passed through certain forms and initiatory ceremonials which when spoken of collectively we designate as "the secrets of Freemasonry." But how many of you in the lodge really know anything of the esoteric meaning of these ceremonies? You will bear in mind that after being initiated you were handed over to some brother Master Mason (who was himself perhaps but two or three months or so a member of the craft) to be "posted" in what is called the lecture or catechism of the Entered Apprentice degree, and that almost every one of you learned your lesson so as barely to enable you to pass your examination afterwards in open lodge. You were then passed to the degree of a Fellow Craft and again "posted" in the catechism of that degree in order to enable you to make application for the third; but since the night you were raised to "the sublime degree of Master Mason" you will bear witness with me that you have not acquired a single particle of knowledge regarding the mysteries, the principles, the ceremonies or the symbolism of Freemasonry. And this is not only true of Keystone Lodge, but my brethren, you know it is equally true of every lodge in this city. As a general rule Masons manage in some way or other to learn just enough to enable them to pass themselves as Freemasons or to visit a strange lodge should occasion ever require it; but beyond this the nineteen-twentieths of the members know little or nothing of "Ancient Craft Masonry." Hence as above stated it is of the utmost importance that the investigation which we propose to institute in this matter be as thorough and as exhaustive as we can possibly get it, and in order to make it thus we must begin at the beginning.

Permit me then to inquire, What is Freemasonry? You are all members of it; you all have paid large sums of money for the privilege of joining it; you are now paying at least six dollars a year each as dues to support it, besides various other incidental expenses. Some of you have incurred the "major excommunication" for your connection with it; almost every one of you is disappointed in it. And now will you please tell me what it is? Perhaps you have heard some one say what it claims to be, but inasmuch as all of you have paid a pretty high figure for the privilege of having your clothing taken off and a hoodwink put over your eyes in being prepared for initiation, and many of you according to your religious belief have jeopardized your soul's salvation by your connection with it, surely you cannot, you dare not rest satisfied until you have got down to the bottom facts in the case and have ascertained for yourselves beyond the possibility of a doubt what the institution really is with which you have thus connected yourselves.

In view of these facts therefore, let us as accountable beings carefully, calmly and intelligently investigate this matter, and in doing so let us take for our instructors the accredited authors, the acknowledged leaders and the universally admitted mouth-pieces of the craft both in this country and in Europe.

In pursuance of this idea then I will call your attention first of all to a "General History, Cyclopedia and Dictionary of Freemasonry," by Robert Macoy 33 deg., page 147, where I read as follows:

"Freemasonry is a beautiful system of morality veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols." Again on the same page:

"Masonry is an art useful and extensive, which comprehends within its circle every branch of useful knowledge and learning."

"Freemasonry is a science of symbols in which their proper study a search is instituted after truth."

"Freemasonry is an order whose leading star is philanthropy and whose principles inculcate an unceasing devotion to the cause of virtue."

"Freemasonry is an institution founded on eternal reason and truth."

"Freemasonry is an ancient and respectable institution, whose deep basis is the civilization of mankind."

"Masonry is one of the most ancient and perfect institutions that ever was formed for the advancement of happiness and the general good of mankind."—Ibid. pp. 148, 149.

Permit me now to refer you to A. T. C. Pierson's "Traditions of Free masonry," page 7. (Bro. Pierson, you will remember, is the the present Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota and Past G. Master, Past Grand High Priest, Past Grand Captain General of the Gr. Encampment of the U. S. A. and Sov. Gr. Ins. Gen'l of the 33d deg.) He says: "Among the questions and answers in the old rituals were the following: What is Freemasonry? The science of sciences. Why so? Because it comprehends within itself that of all others." Again on page 9: "It was the original religion of man," and still further, on page 14, this remarkable language occurs: "While it embodies all that is valuable in the institutions of the past it embraces within its circle all that is good and true of the present and thus becomes a conservator as well as a depository of religion, science and art."

Now hear what the celebrated Dr. Mackey says on this subject, Mackey's Lexicon page 371, under the word Prayer: "All the ceremonies of our order are prefaced and terminated with prayer, because Masonry is a religious institution." And in Webb's Monitor, with notes by Rob't Morris, page 284, under the word Religion we are informed that "the meeting of a lodge of Masons is strictly a religious ceremony." Again, from "Sickles' General Ahiman Rezon," page 189, we learn that "These three degrees (of Masonry) thus form a perfect and harmonious whole, nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires." On page 298 of Dr. Rob't Macoy's General History, etc., of Freemasonry, to which I have already referred you, the following extraordinary language occurs: "There is that latent in Freemasonry which makes it exactly the institution most needed in this age. But to be an effective agent in elevating and advancing man to a more perfect condition the sense of its mysteries must be better understood by Masons."

From the foregoing authoritative declarations of the leading Masonic writers and teachers of the age we are enabled to ascertain with absolute certainty what Freemasonry claims to be. You perceive it is asserted of it that is "a science," the "science of sciences," a "useful art comprehending every branch of knowledge and learning," "the most ancient and perfect institution that was ever formed for the advancement of happiness and the general good of mankind," a "religious institution," "instituting a search after truth," "the conservator and depository of religion, science and art," and of such inestimable value to the human family that "it cannot be conceived that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires." And being all this, and perhaps much more that I have not space here to enumerate, it is further claimed for it that "it is the institution that is exactly most needed in this age," and that under certain conditions it becomes "an effective agent in elevating and advancing man to a more perfect condition."

And now, my brethren, if Freemasonry be what it is here represented; if the above claims put forth on its behalf be true; if it ameliorates human suffering advances human happiness; and if the sense of its mysteries rightly understood will advance and elevate man to a perfect condition, then either of these two things must be equally true: either the entire Masonic fraternity throughout the world, yourselves included, are the most consummate and the most hypocritical knaves, or else they are the most supremely selfish and the most abandonedly wicked people on the face of the globe.

Just examine this point for a moment. It is claimed for Freemasonry that it will confer the most extraordinary benefits on mankind; that it is far superior in its immediate and general results to any other institution, not even excluding the church of Christ, that was ever organized for the promotion of human happiness and for satisfying our soul's desire, and yet strange to say the very men who put forth these extraordinary claims surround its portals with barriers of such an insurmountable character that at least seventy-five per cent. of the whole human family must of necessity be for all time excluded from any participation whatever in its incalculable and innumerable advantages. The laws of Masonry debar forever from any participation in its benefits not only all women but also all those who are not morally, mentally and physically perfect.—Masonic Law and Usage by Dr. Rob't Morris, P. Gr. Master.

From Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, page 198 to 208 inclusive, we learn that none but stout, hale, hearty young men can be initiated into Freemasonry and not even these unless they are in possession of the four essential requisites of a good moral character, a good suit of clothes, some visible means of support and a considerable sum of money to pay their way through; and yet in the face of all this it is flauntingly represented by the votaries and leaders of the order "that it is exactly the institution that is most needed in this age." My brethren, allow me to ask do you believe that Freemasonry is all that your leaders claim for it? Do you believe that it is older and better than Christianity? Do you believe that it is even one-half as good as the very worst human organization now on earth? You do not. There is not a Jew among you but believes that Judaism is a thousand-fold better than Masonry, and there is not a nominal Christian in Keystone or any other lodge in the country but knows full well that even the most fallible of our human institutions is as far better than Masonry as light is better than darkness or truth than falsehood. What a strange spectacle is here presented to us. Freemasonry will advance and elevate mankind, but mankind are strictly prohibited by Masonic law from availing themselves of its boasted advantages. If Freemasonry be the institution that is "exactly most needed in this age," then by all means let us at once demolish all our churches, chapels, schools, lyceums, colleges, universities and all other educational and religious institutions and let us establish in their stead lodges, chapters, commanderies, councils, consistories and conclaves, with all their innumerable paraphernalia of hoodwinks, drawers, slippers, ropes, mallets, mauls, canvasses, levels, squares, plumbs, compasses, swords, and trowels. When examining these pompous, high-sounding pretentious claims of Freemasonry and comparing them with the bare, hard, matter-of-fact laws of the institution and the usages of the lodge every where, one cannot but see the appropriateness of the Apostle's language as applied to the teachers of the so-called craft: "These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest, to whom the mist of darkness is reserved forever. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity they allure through the lusts of the flesh through much wantonness those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. While they promise them liberty they themselves are the servants of corruption.—2 Peter 2: 17–19.

Pleading the excuse of necessity for the unavoidable length of this communication and promising to return to this same phase of our subject in my next letter. I am in all friendship, fraternally yours,

EDMOND RONAYNE.

—When so much is said about divine grace saving men from sin, and especially from the sin of drink and drunkenness, there ought to be special care taken to give such instruction as will make the use of such language more than a mere form of speech. The Bible in the hands of every one who desires to be saved by grace is just as indispensable as is bread to him who depends on food for sustenance.—United Presbyterian.

Historical: Henry Clay.

In 1844, Henry Clay, the leader of the old Whig party, which furnished the most respectable element of the Republican party, was nominated for the Presidency by the Whigs. If he had been elected, it is possible that the slave question might have been settled without a war; but there were two reasons why he could not be elected. One of these reasons was that he had publicly declared that he "had rather be right than to be President of the United States." This assertion was an evidence of weakness in the eyes of many Democrats and slaveholders, who would hence be disinclined to vote for him. The other reason was that he had left the lodge, and could not therefore be trusted by the Masons.

Mr. Clay, however, was cheated out of his election, very much in such a way as has been attempted at the present day to cheat Mr. Hayes. The trick resorted to in Louisiana in that day was called plaquemining, instead of bulldozing; it was not so barbarous as bulldozing and was probably less Masonic; but the result was similar, only more effective. Plaquemining consisted in casting hundreds of votes for the Democratic candidate, where the locality was hardly entitled to one vote.

It is very much to be regretted that Mr. Clay was not elected to the Presidency; but it could not have been possible then, nor probably could any one be elected since then, either to the Presidency or any other considerable office, who should show himself so independent of the lodge as did Mr. Clay. Yet the language which he used towards the lodge was very moderate indeed; more so than a man of decided character would use at the present day. We know the lodge better now than it was known then; and hence we know how little worthy it is of any reserve towards it, on account of any supposed value that it may have.

Though Mr. Clay withdrew from the lodge, and had no fellowship with it, yet he thought that its objects were charitable and benevolent, and that its obligations did not interfere with his duties to the country and to society; but in this he was altogether too lenient; for surely an institution so puffed up with blasphemous bombast, and so unkind with its barbarous, throat-cutting oaths, so excitive of evil thoughts and so ostentatious with its questionable pittances given back to the poor from contributions of their own money, cannot be charitable or benevolent; and as to interference with one's obligations to his country, the whole course of the war of the rebellion, on both sides, show how mistaken his ideas were on that point.

But we give Mr. Clay's letter, in which he states that he had withdrawn from the lodge. It was printed in the National Intelligencer, published at Washington, D. C., and was called out by a letter from the Anti-masons of Pennsylvania. We would remark, merely, that the Pennsylvania Anti-masons who compelled Mr. Clay to come out at tha time in opposition to the lodge, probably occasioned him the loss of the Presidency; and if, therefore, there are any of the old Whig party in that State which sustained Mr. Clay, they ought now to come forward and assert the Anti-masonic cause in the maintenance of which he fell. Having forced their leader forward to declare his sentiments out of season, they ought now to come forward to declare their own sentiments in season; if indeed it is not already too late to save the Republic. AMERICAN.

Here are the letters:

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ANTI-MASONS WITH MR. CLAY.

Letter to Mr. Clay.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 14, 1843.

DEAR SIR:—A large majority of the Anti-masonic party of Pennsylvania admire your political character and appreciate your public services. They think with you on those great leading measures of national policy which you have long, ably and successfully advocated.

I have been requested by several respectable gentlemen (members of the Anti-masonic party) respectfully to ask you in what relation you stand to the institution of Freemasonry.

I am sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

E. C. REIGART.

Hon. Henry Clay.

Mr. Clay's Answer.

ASHLAND, Nov. 25, 1843.

DEAR SIR:—I have duly received your letter requesting me, at the instance of several respectable gentlemen of the Anti-masonic party in Pennsylvania, to state what are my existing relations to Freemasonry.

I entertain great repugnance to appearing before the public at all, on any subject, and especially upon one which, according to my humble apprehension, is not necessarily connected with the administration of the general government; but the respectful terms in which you have been pleased to address me, and the conscientious motives by which I presume you to be actuated, entitle you to a frank and full answer to the inquiry contained in your letter; and I now have the pleasure of accordingly transmitting such an answer.

I became a Mason in early life, from youthful curiosity and a social disposition. But I never had any taste for, or was much skilled in the mysteries of the order. All the professed objects of the institution as developed to me (and I knew no other) were charitable and benevolent. I never did contract, and never would have contracted, any obligations whatever incompatible with my duty to my country or to society. I have always regarded the constitution and laws of the land as supreme, and my obligations and duties to my country as paramount to all other earthly obligations and duties.

Official evidence of my retirement from the lodge upwards of nineteen years ago has been published; and I have not since been a member of any lodge, nor held any office, place or appointment of any kind in the institution. Nor do I believe that I could, upon my own knowledge or recollection of its rites and ceremonies, obtain admission at this time in any lodge of any degree whatever. I never in my life voted for or supported any man, for any civil or military or other appointment under government, because he was a Mason; nor against any man because he was not a Mason. In 1825 I voted for Mr. Adams as President of the United States, although, as I have understood, he was not a Mason, and against Gen. Andrew Jackson, notwithstanding he was a distinguished member of that order; but it is proper to state that I was not at all influenced by that fact. Among my most determined political opponents in Kentucky are Masons, who now or lately held, according to the newspapers, eminent stations in the lodge.

Such is a faithful account of my relations to Masonry, an institution which has comprised some of the most eminent men of our country, dead and living. I presume that the experience of many men has been, like my own, that as we advance in life we cease to take any interest in attending such institutions.

In the sentiments of love of country, of obedience to its laws, of acknowledgement of their paramount obligation and of devotion to our free institutions, by which all ought to be, and I understand Anti-masons are animated, I most heartily and cordially concur.

With great respect, I am your obedient servant, H. CLAY.

Oath-Bound.

Oath—"A solemn affirmation or declaration made, an appeal to God for the truth of what is affirmed. The appeal to God in an oath implies that the person imprecates his vengeance and renounces his favor if the declaration is false; or, if the declaration is a promise, the person invokes the vengeance of God if he should fail to fulfil it. A false oath is called perjury."—Webster.

The engagements of Masonry, commonly styled obligations, or vows, are of a nature scarcely to be distinguished from the definition of an oath, although the word oath does not occur in its rituals.—Morris' Dic., p. 336.

Obligation.—Morris' Dic., p. 336. "The binding power of a vow, promise, oath, or contract. That which constitutes moral duty, and which renders a person liable to coercion and punishment for neglecting it."—Webster.

Every Mason is under an obligation to obey the laws of the lodge and the Grand Lodge, so far as they are consistent with the ancient landmarks of the institution.

The Masonic obligation is of a nature scercely distinguishable from oaths or vows, although the word oath does not occur in the rituals. "Any act by which a person becomes bound to do something to or for another, or to forbear something."—Webster.

It is "the obligation which makes the Mason," and the difference between one man and another consists simply in the fact that one keeps his obligations better than another. An obligation is an essential part of a degree. There are three parties to every Masonic obligation; first, the candidate; second, the presiding officer who represents the society; and, third, the Omnipresent Deity, represented by a copy of his Word. In encampment Masonry the obligations are termed vows; the same word is used in the charge at initiation into the Master's degree, viz.; "Let no motive make you violate your vows."

Although, in practice, the letter of the Masonic obligations is modernly kept among the esoteric parts of the ritual, yet this was not anciently so, as may be fully seen in the old fragments of Masonic literature extant. Nor, in the nature of Masonry itself, does it appear necessary that it should be so; for there are no engagements found in the obligations but what abundantly appear in the written or exoteric parts of its rituals.

Affirmation.—Morris' Dict., p. 17. "A solemn declaration made under the penalties of perjury, by persons who conscientiously decline taking an oath; which affirmation is, in law, equivalent to testimony given under oath.—Webster.

An affirmation is not esteemed equivalent to an oath in Masonry, however it may be in common law, and is not legitimate in the workings of the lodge. In the examination of witnesses upon Masonic trials, however, an affirmation is admissible.

The quibble sometimes made that, "As an affirming Mason admits the full force of the obligation and penalties of Masonry, he is equally bound with the rest," may be answered, in the same illogical vein: that, "if an affirmation is the same to him as an oath, he need not scruple to take the latter, being willing to assume the former!" But a better argument is found; the Masonic society has no use of persons who, at the very outset, falsify their declarations, made in the ante-room, "that they will cheerfully conform to all the ancient established usages and customs of the fraternity." A candidate thus false to his own declarations presents no foundation upon which the society can build "its future moral and Masonic edifice."

Note.—It clearly appears from these three articles: That Masons are a secret, oath-bound fraternity. The oath, or obligation, is the essence of the system. The taking of the oath is the constituting act. The obligation makes the Mason. Every step or degree is riveted by increased, sworn obligations. Every degree has its obligation. Masonic virtue depends on the exactness of keeping Masonic oaths. That the obligations are taken without previous knowledge of their nature, as they are part of the esoteric of th ritual. No candidate can refuse to take them, having promised a blind compliance in the ante-room. That studious, or intelligent minds can verify their obligations as revealed, by comparison with the incautious and open* statements of their standard authors. That when Masonry was an operative art, before the speculative humbug was invented, there was no need of concealment of their principles and requirements. That in the further investigation of this subject, it will increasingly appear, that the absolute obedience and secrecy of Masonry are hostile to personal liberty, to civil right, to social and religious order. That expositions of Masonry like Morgan's and Ronayne's, correctly give the oaths or obligations, and are corroborated by all Masonic authorities.

J. W. RAYNOR.

*"For there are no engagements found in the obligations but what abundantly appear in the written or exoteric parts of its rituals."

—It has been customary all over the South and West for editors to make reference every once in a while to the "blue-laws of Connecticut." Probably many of them do not know, but it is nevertheless true, that the "blue-laws" so often quoted or referred to were never enacted in Connecticut, but are the fictions of Samuel Peters, a renagade tory from Connecticut, who went over to England at the opening of the Revolution, and published in London a book called the "History of Connecticut." The book abounded in Munchausen narratives. So far from Connecticut, or New England, being behind the age in her legislation, she was really in advance of the mother country in this regard. Yet some men of learning, both in England and America, have been deceived by Samuel Peters' tory fictions.—Religious Telescope.

Reform News.

New England and Reform.

Facts appear in the Cynosure from time to time, showing how lodge-oppressed New England is, and how weak the reform cause is in this section. A few suggestions may be offered to show why that part of the country from which everything good ought to be expected is so sadly delinquent. One reason is that the Masonic lodge in New England has been most shrewdly managed: and although perverting justice in every-day life and in our court; although corrupting morals and undermining Christianity; although grasping an undue share of public offices, and subsidizing the press and the pulpit, yet it has so carefully covered its Masonic work that the suffering victim scarcely realizes the source of the evil. Another reason of comparative indifference is that the Masonic order has seldom resorted to violence, either against recreant members or opposers. Another reason is, that while the West has been blessed by such noble men as Finney, Blanchard and George, whose position as well as real ability enabled them to so speak as to secure public attention, poor New England has not of late years had a single College President, Doctor of Divinity, or other eminent man to assail the almost omnipotent power of the lodge. Another incalculable disadvantage is, that while the West has a number of quite numerous testifying Christian denominations, New England has not one, however small, that apparently dares or cares to testify against the evils of the secret lodge. This sad fact renders the lecture system, that has been so useful in the West, difficult, expensive, and in many cases impossible here. The press and the pulpit are substantially subsidized. Another difficulty in the way of reform has been the conservative temper of New England people. They are slow to move. When once in a rut it is hard to get them out of it. Bro. Stoddard has tried New England, and not inaptly compared the hearts of the people to granite. Granite is hard stone to work, but it hath beauty and durability when well wrought. Our difficulties are immense; but God is able to help us. It is his cause. His providences help his people. Moody's coming to Boston is providential. The railroad strikes open the eyes of business men to the assumptions of the lodge. When the chief of a secret lodge undertakes to control the railroads the owners will not submit. The Cynosure and the Witness are doing a good work. The Christian associations in Connecticut, New Hampshire and Vermont are doing much by book and tract distribution and something by lectures. The tree of reform is firmly rooted in New England, and although the soil is hard, there are sure signs of life and growth. I write these facts that our brethren in more favored localities may not be disheartened by the apparently slow progress of the reform in New England. We have had valuable help from Bro. Stoddard and Bro. Rathbun, and we sorely needed it. Our hearts will be made glad if Bro. Ronayne can speak even but three evenings in one of our principal cities. If we only had the means we would secure his services, not for three days, but three months. That is just what we need; but the gold and the silver are the Lord's, and when he opens the door no power can shut it. We propose to go forward in the name of the Lord, and if we cannot have Bro. Ronayne we will have his book. By the Lord's help we will press the Cynosure, the book, and the tract work, until the church doors are opened to welcome a pure Gospel.

S. C. KIMBALL.

Austin Academy, N. Y.

The Grant Co., Ind., Meetings.

FAIRMOUNT, Ind., Mar. 7, 1877.

DEAR BROTHER:—Though in labors abundant I must take time to tell you something of the progress of the good work that the Lord is doing. From central Iowa to central Indiana, stopping to do some work in Bartlett and Wayne, Ill., I came to find a work ready prepared, arduous and interesting. Thanks to Brother Stoddard, it had been arranged that I should give some twenty-four lectures in this vicinity; and, the time and places appointed, I reached Marion, Grant county, on the morning of February 24th.

I was most kindly received by Dr. Champ, who took me in hand and conveyed me to my different appointments. I preached twice on the 25th, once in the Salem U. B. church, and once in the Christian church in Marion, and lectured six times during the week at as many different places, to usually full audiences and with most careful attention. The severe storm on Saturday night, March 3rd, did not prevent a meeting at Oak Chapel, and on Sabbath, the 4th, I preached to a fair audience and spoke again on secretism to a full house in the evening.

With much difficulty and by a severe effort I reached the Friends' meeting-house in Jonesboro at 11 o'clock on the morning of the 5th, and found a small congregation patiently waiting. I talked an hour or more and gave notice of my evening appointment which was fully attended. The Masons were out in force and were especially abusive. I was informed that I was a liar and scoundrel besides being probably a horse-thief. I had the honor to be classed with Pres. C. G. Finney, who was denounced by a certain Presbyterian Freemason as a liar, and one of the vilest of men. I was sorry to find that several prominent members of the Society of Friends are adhering Freemasons. Some of the disturbance and interruption came from them. May the Lord help that society to purge out the leaven of malice and wickedness.

From Jonesboro I came here, where I spoke twice yesterday to good audiences and with the most respectful attention. My heart cries out, "Oh Lord, revive thy work!" for "Except the Lord build the house, we labor in vain that build it."

Yours in the holy cause,

H. H. HINMAN.

Ronayne in Canada.

WEST MONTROSE, Ont.

At the suggestion of Bro. J. Master Bro. Ronayne was invited to deliver a course of lectures on Masonry in the village of Plattsville the second week in February.

Plattsville is a thriving village in the north part of Oxford county, Ontario, near the line of the Grand Trunk railroad. It has four or five churches, a Masonic lodge, and I know not how many others. It is of the Masonic lodge and Ronayne's lecture that I am going to write. The Saviour's words, "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed and hid that shall not be known," were proven true in Plattsville. The profane had the privilege for once of seeing both the esoteric and exoteric beauties of Masonry, and behold it fills men with utter disgust, makes it a reproach and a byword, so that sensible men will not buy their secrets any more. Even Masons are disgusted. An old Mason said it was "all lies and burlesque," (which is unquestionably true of Masonry). Another one said to me, "O, Masonry has been revealed before," which we also admit, only men do not generally know it and believe it.

But so utterly disgusting and shameful is it when exposed that a great many good people can hardly believe it to be true. They can hardly believe that their neighbors and ministers can go through with such tomfoolery. Masons are in the habit of saying, "Masonry is a fine thing if lived up to. If a man lives up to it he will be a good Christian." I said to a Mason who said this to me recently: "You are like the woman who was asked by a minister what she thought of the doctrine of total depravity: 'O, I think it is a good thing if lived up to.'"

The lectures were not advertised, so the attendance was not large until the last night, and then there were some present who came twenty miles. The town hall was crowded that night four or five hundred persons being present, and although a number had to stand the meeting was kept up with great interest until one o'clock.

A laughable incident occurred on the last night of the meeting. A Mason by the name of Robinson got up during the lecture and began by reproaching Mr. Ronayne as being "a bag of hypocrisy," "an expelled Mason," "just escaped from jail," etc. They had it, he said, by telegraph. But the retorts came quick as you could say "Jack Robinson," and Bro. Ronayne was informed that Mr. Robinson was the Mason who on the first night of the lectures had consented to be Worshipful Master; had taken the chair, with the apron, but when he learned that they were going to have the real thing shirked off. The laughter and cheering that came in at this exposure were tremendous. I think poor Robinson felt like the German, that he would rather be a "little nearer away." Bro. Ronayne finally told him to be still now, as he was going to kill and raise Hiram.

Bro. Ronayne told us that he was made a Mason in Canada, and as he proceeded in his lectures he would explain the difference in some minor matters between American and English Masonry. This showed him to be master of the situation.

This was the first time that the degrees of Masonry were publicly worked in Canada, but different ones said it shall not be the last time.

There is an open door for Bro. Ronayne. May the Lord long spare him and bless him.

In the Carpenter Building.

In order to accommodate the speaker, who could not be present Thursday, the weekly meeting held in the Carpenter Building for the discussion of the character of secret societies, was changed to Tuesday evening, March 6. It was a peculiarly gratifying success, and without exception the largest Anti-masonic meeting yet held there. Nearly every seat in the hall was occupied—quite a number by ladies.

Mr. Ronayne was the lecturer, and his subject, "The Relation of Christianity to Masonry," which was treated in the usual positive, direct and telling way. The grand old truths of the Bible were compared with the sophistical teachings of Masonry in a manner that must have impressed enlightened and impartial minds with the fact that they are antagonistic to each other, and no man can be a consistent Christian and adhere to the lodge. It was evidently too hot for several persons in the audience, for they left the hall during the lecture, looking very much like lashed spaniels, and retreated down stairs, displaying a remarkable ability for kicking up a racket. With this exception, nothing occurred to disturb the meeting. A minister from Hyde Park was present, took notes, and asked the speaker a number of questions, which were promptly answered.

The Crestline Debate and Exposition.

Crestline, Ohio.

The great discussion on secret societies, which was so generally noticed in the papers of this and surrounding towns and cities, came off on Feb. 19th and 20th, between Rev. D. I. Foust, of Cleveland, and Dr. S. P. Covert, of Crestline, on the one side, as challengers, and Edmond Ronayne, of Chicago, and Dr. Edwin Booth, of Crestline, on the other, as the challenged party.

The question was, "Resolved, that secret societies are wrong in principle and detrimental to society and the highest good of man." Mr. Ronayne opened on the affirmative with a clear statement of the principles involved and the baneful effects of secret orders, especially Masonry, on the good of society. He made a clear, beautiful, and telling argument. He was followed by Rev. Foust, who, after advancing some good arguments in a forcible manner, resorted to the old game of misrepresentation and abuse. Mr. Foust was followed by Dr. Booth, who made a clear, candid statement of his views, followed by telling arguments and proofs of the evils of secret orders, etc. Dr. Booth was followed by Dr. S. P. Covert, who held forth for half an hour in one unbroken tirade of personal abuse. Thus ended the first night's discussion.

The same order of discussion was repeated on the second night, save that Mr. Ronayne closed. All agreed, with scarce a dissenting voice, that Messrs. Ronayne and Booth literally annihilated their opponents.

On the following evening, Feb. 21st, Mr. Ronayne worked the third degree of Masonry in presence of a crowded hall of ladies and gentlemen, including more than a score of Masons; and such was the marvellous effect upon all—for all were convinced, beyond doubt, that Mr. Ronayne was well educated in Masonry—that there seemed to ascend a prayer from every heart for the preservation of the life and health of the speaker. The beautiful and scholarly language of Mr. Ronayne, uttered in a true Christian spirit, took away from Masons the sting and mortification of the perfect exposure of their pagan rites and ceremonies, and produced a quiet thankfulness in the hearts of Anti-masons, never before felt here. And to-day, so great is the esteem for Mr. Ronayne in this city by Anti-masons, and some, or, in fact, most of the leading Christian Masons, that a mutual effort is now on foot to secure his services to work the degrees again in Shober's Opera House, the largest hall in the city.

I must mention the fact that G. W. Pierce, owner of Diamond Hall, a first-class Mason and citizen, in the fullest sense, heard all the arguments, witnessed the working, etc., and expressed his belief that Mr. Ronayne was a pure Christian man and a gentleman; and this is one of the plainest proofs of the great work accomplished by Mr. Ronayne, that a leading Mason and citizen, owning the finest hall, in acoustic properties, and the most comfortable, for its size, for both speaker or listener, in the State of Ohio, and who is so very careful of his hall, to offer it again for a like purpose free of charge. How many, in the great day coming, will rise up and bless the name of Edmond Ronayne? Eternity alone will reveal.

Respectfully, Jas. L. Booth.

Bremer County, Iowa.

Perhaps there is no county in the State in which there is so much anti-secrecy sentiment as in Bremer. A year ago last fall they elected the sheriff, and if they were thoroughly organized they could carry the county election in every contest. The county papers, though both under Masonic control, are not entirely closed against the discussion of secretism by correspondents. Indeed, they are between two fires, and one of them is like the sailor, who in view of threatening danger, cried, "Good Lord, good devil," not knowing into whose hands he would fall. We were called to lecture at Waverly. Here we made the acquaintance of brothers Woodford and Smith, to whose exertions and influence the success of the cause in this county is chiefly attributable. They are active, persistent agitators; just such as we must have in every county in every State in the Union, before American principles will prevail.

The lecture was appointed at Lashbrook's Hall, where we met a good audience. It was held with but little disturbance. Here, as an exception to the rule, we were well compensated for our services. The men who have the ability and disposition to help this cause are yet, "like angels visits, few and far between." From Waverly we were taken by Bro. Simon George to Horton, where we lectured to a large congregation in the Freewill Baptist Church. In that community most of the people have been drawn into the meshes of the grange, and it seemed to be our duty to dwell particularly on that form of secrecy. It was bitter medicine for the patrons.—Iowa Freeman.

Another Escape.

Norwich, Conn.

I have reason to thank God and Bro. Conant, of Willimantic, for the Cynosure, because through its teachings I have been made to see "light" in God's light; and, whereas, I was once blind, I now see Masonry as never before.

Not many years since, I bowed at a Masonic altar, assumed the Masonic obligation, was instructed how and where to "search for light." But, as I "traveled," I found the light to be darkness, and its altars were to the "unknown gods," and its obligation in direct opposition to the teaching of the Bible, and not in harmony with a Christian profession. And with these facts before me I bade the order farewell forever, lest the time should come when God would say, "Let him alone, he is joined to his idols."

To-day I am a free man. Free to think; free to act; free to pray, to preach the gospel of Christ, and to expose sin wherever it exists.

A good work is being done in this city through Rev. Bro. Palmer, not only by the distribution of tracts, books, and papers, but also by word of mouth, and the brotherhood are becoming somewhat excited. At a prayer meeting the other day, Bro. Palmer dropped a word or two in reference to Masonry, and no sooner said than a brother in the church rose to his feet and replied by saying, It is about time Bro. Palmer shut up his head about Masonry, and if he did not, a way would be provided. Is this the spirit of Christ? or is it the spirit of Masonry? I am sure that it is not the spirit of Christ, and "if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his," but that it is the spirit of Masonry, or in other words, the spirit of the devil, revealing itself in and through Masonry, I do not question, because it partakes of a "devilish disposition," and those who have received it have, in many instances, followed the example of one of old in that they have taken the life of a brother; that this is true of Masonry is beyond all denial.

In conclusion, let me say, though I am the only representative of our denomination in the State, yet I find a multitude of friends and brethren who have not bowed at the altar of the "unknown god," and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

De Witt Sterry.

The "Worshipful's" Hat.

The question is frequently asked by members of the craft, "Where does the Worshipful Master hang his hat?" and the answer is as frivolously and uniformly given, "On a peg," meaning, of course, on his head. As senseless as this query and reply seem to be, the ceremony and the act have a highly blasphemous signification. The Worshipful Master represents Almighty God, in whom dwells the fulness of the Godhead bodily. Says Morris, in his Dictionary of Freemasonry, page 345: "The seat of the Worshipful Master should, as nearly as may be, represent a throne." Now why should it? I ask. To which I unhesitatingly respond, Simply and for no other reason than that God is continually imaged to our minds as seated upon a throne, dispensing mercy and justice to all things here below.

The Masonic hat is the atrocious substitute for the crown of Almighty God. "The title of Basileus (king)," says Fellows in his Mysteries of Freemasonry, page 136, "given to one of the officers of the celebration of the mysteries, who is decorated with a crown, has doubtless caused the supposition that this character was the representative of civil temporal power, whereas the crown was originally the ensign of divinity. In the remotest antiquity the crown was only given to gods. Leo, the Egyptian, says it was Isis who first wore a crown, and that it consisted of ears of corn (grain) the use whereof she first taught men. In this most authors agree, that the crown originally was rather a religious than a civil ornament; rather one of the pontificalia than the regalia; that it only became common to kings, as the ancient kings were priests as well as princes, and that the modern princes are entitled to it in their ecclesiastical capacity rather than their temporal." Consonant with this idea, says the Grand Master to his successor in office (vide Gray's Mystic Circle, page 142), "I next deliver to you the emblem of that power with which you are now invested. Always make use of it for the good of our benevolent institution. "As Solomon wore a crown as an ensign of royal dignity," observes Pierson in his traditions of Freemasonry, page 289, "so may such a brother (the Master of a lodge) * * * be permitted to wear (a hat) * * * as an evidence of his official superiority over his brethren." "Formerly," says Macoy in his Cyclopedia of Freemasonry, page 388, "Masons wore hats in the lodge as a symbol of freedom and brotherly equality. In English and American lodges it is now exclusively an attribute of the Master's costume.". "In most foreign lodges," observes Oliver in his Historical Landmarks, vol. 1, p. 138, "the Master wears his hat, while the rest of the brethren remain uncovered. This practice was followed by MacKenzie Beverly, Esq., when he held the office of D. P. G. M. (Deputy Provincial Grand Master) for the East Riding of York." But aside from these standard authorities, Duncan in his Masonic Ritual and Monitor, page 8, informs us that "On the evening of a lodge meeting brethren generally get together at an early hour at the lodge room, which has been opened and cleaned out by the Tyler. On arrival of the Master, and the hour of meeting, the Master repairs to his seat in the east, puts on his hat, sash, yoke and apron with gavel in hand, and says: "Brethren will be properly clothed and in order; officers repair to their stations for the purpose of opening," and on page 9 further advises us that "The Master always wears his hat, when presiding as such, but no other officer in the Blue Lodge." In these statements he is confirmed by Fellows in his "Mysteries of Freemasonry," page 262, which work may be very profitably consulted by all who desire to glean further light on Masonry and its infamous mysteries. Few, very few, outsiders attach much importance to the Masonic rites, forms and ceremonies enacted within the lodge room, generally considering them trifling and frivolous, but such opinions are very wide of the truth indeed. All these rites, forms and ceremonies have, on the contrary, a very deep interior significance which the mere ritualistic work of the order but very faintly discloses. Was Masonry thoroughly understood by the outside world, it would arouse energies now dormant in sufficient force to sweep it from the face of the earth in an incredibly short period of time. In its concealment lies its strength and only in its concealment. How many readers of the Cynosure ever imagined the Worshipful Master's hat, to symbolize the atrocious ideas herein shadowed forth? Not many I trow. Ignorance is the bane of the world, and in the matter of Masonry the great cause of the stolid indifference which exists on the part of the public. May God speedily open their eyes, ears and hearts to perceive and understand the iniquities which surround them. Their enlightenment is demanded by the pressing necessities of the hour. Let it be hastened by every just means known to human power and ingenuity. The awakening cannot come too soon.

"What Shall the Harvest Be?" And Who Shall Reap It?

Menomonie, Wis., March 6, 1877.

A very kind neighbor and respectable citizen of this place was buried by the Freemasons. He died declaring his trust in Christ. The funeral was in the Congregationalist church, and we are informed that the pastor, who is no secret society man at all, preached an excellent funeral sermon, and told the Masons that their morality would not save them.

There was a crowded house, and a goodly number of "white aprons," one of them adorning the rotund physique of one of the clergymen of the place. A combination of two brass bands accompanied the procession, with a dirge, and some other pretty lively music. A brass band would be well enough, made up of devout and sober Christian men, with music appropriate to the occasion. But such as devote a large share of their beer-scented breath to enliven the midnight dance, and the Sabbath desecration of the beer-garden carousal, are hardly in place at the burial of a professed Christian on the holy Sabbath.

It is but a few years since Masonry came to be so popular as now, and but few such funerals have as yet taken place in our country towns. But now Masons are so numerous that such occasions are destined to become of frequent occurrence. Whenever the deceased is a church member or church goer, the pastor will be expected to do the preaching from his pulpit in God's house, and then to go to the grave and silently witness the heathenish performances of the lodge, which sets itself up as better than the church, and sends members as such to the celestial lodge on high, and thus to give at least tacit consent to this mingling, or attempt at mingling of Christianity and paganism over the remains of the dead, with pall-bearers representing the saloon business, dram drinking, the boldest skepticism of the age, and the Bible suspended from the shoulders of open infidelity.

It will be strange if good ministers and churches can stand this a great while. By and by, at these white aprons in God's house, they will be constrained to cry out with the psalmist, "O God, the heathen are come up into thy sanctuary!" and to keep a good conscience will be obliged to take a stand, and say to all Masons, "If you wish to be buried as Christians, come out from the lodge, and we will do it for you in the name of Jesus Christ, who is 'the way,' 'the resurrection and the life.' But if you will be buried by the lodge, let them have the whole thing to themselves, in 'Masonic Hall,' but the Christ-denying institution shall not flaunt their regalia in the Christian sanctuary. Take your choice, and run your risk." Let the lines be drawn, and see who is on the Lord's side. The nation is going to heathenism fast enough, without the help of churches and ministers boosting, or looking silently at the drive-wheels.

Works of Mercy and Grace in Chicago.

The occasional visitor or casual observer knows almost nothing of what is going on in this great city. Everywhere are to be seen evidences of wealth and of poverty, of plenty and of want. The home of affluence and the hovel of penury stand in the same row, and their occupants go and come, objects of little concern, save to a small immediate circle. The undercurrents of this great life stream are hid from the busy, restless throng, and can only be known by tracing the little streams back to their hidden springs. One must step aside from the feverish haste of business and professional life to the haunts of the miserable and wretched, if he would know anything, as it is, of the worst. One evening lately in company with a few others I visited one of the free lodging houses of the city. After spending a few moments in conversation with the gentlemanly manager in his office we entered a room where there were from fifty to seventy-five men, wretched and destitute, many of them bearing unmistakable marks of dissipation. A request to be quiet, accompanied with a few words of kindness, secured the attention of nearly, if not every one present. After singing from "Gospel Hymns" all bowed in prayer, and the solemn stillness of that refuge of sin and suffering was broken by words of earnest petition for the saving power and presence of Christ, to which many responded with heartfelt amens from lips accustomed to pronounce the name of God only in jest or blasphemy. Services of song, prayer, confession, counsel and admonition were continued for an hour in which a number of the refugees participated with an earnestness and in some cases an intelligence that gave promise of a better future. Just before the meeting closed one who had listened attentively and who had evidently been singing out of a full heart moved a vote of thanks to those who had visited them and told them of Jesus and his love. The response was unanimous, and no one could doubt its sincerity. On retiring I could but feel that some good had been done to these poor perishing ones, and trust that the "book of record" may show that some precious soul was made alive in Christ.

Bro. William Speakle who was himself but recently converted after sixty years spent in the hard service of Satan, inaugurated this truly Christian work, and to him under God is mainly due results over which every Christian heart will rejoice. May God's blessing be with our brother and his work.

Our Mail.

Frank Heighway, Sevastopol, Ind., writes:

"I talked to a minister a few days ago and he acknowledged that the teachings of the lodge were against the Christian religion, 'But,' says he, 'it would never do for me to preach against it.' The time will come when men will have to show their hands. Our little town has a very strong lodge of Odd-fellows, and I know that two of its members at least are infidels, and another told me that all the salvation that any man needed was taught in the lodge. Salvation without the blood of Christ is worthless, yet I believe many who join the lodge are taught that morality is all that is required, and I am certain that many are led astray. I cannot understand how Christians can enjoy themselves so well when they are yoked together with unbelievers. Let us all stand for Christ and for his Word, and shun the very appearance of evil, and we will see the unfruitful works of darkness vanish from our land."

J. S Rice, Pownal, Me., writes:

"I am doing and intend to do all I can for the reform while God spares my life."

John Torrans, Manistee, Mich., writes:

"We are in the midst of a union revival here The Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal and Baptist churches have united under the lead of Mr. Potter, the revivalist. The Spirit of God is manifestly at work in our midst in the salvation of souls, and I trust he has come to stay. I would ask the prayers of your readers that such may be the case as this is our greatest want here."

Jas. Hervey, New Texas, Pa., writes:

"People are beginning to look into these societies more than they have done. Ronayne's lecture in Pittsburgh has opened the eyes of two or three of my acquaintances so that they can see. I hope he will visit our county again soon and open the eyes of a few more."

C. R. Morsman, Dartford, Wis., writes:

"I voted the American party ticket, and got one more who said he would do so. I gave him a ticket. There were a great many who would have voted that ticket, but for their fear that the Democrats would gain the day."

Laura L. Thompson, De Ruyter, N. Y., writes:

"I have been assured of one young man that was influenced by reading the tracts I left in his way, to shun the lodge."

E Gould, Pillar Point, N. Y., writes:

"Hard times here, and no President yet. I think we had better install Walker anyway."

Mrs. M. Wilson, Marseilles, Ill., writes:

"I like your paper the best of any in print, for it exposes the secret workings of evil and devilry in these dungeons of blood curdling iniquity and blasphemy."

D. B. Heckert, Ogden Center, Mich., writes:

"There is considerable of an anti-masonic stir here. We talk some of running an anti-secret ticket for town officers. We have had three lectures in the United Brethren church, and it is making its mark in the minds of the people. Hold the fort, for Ogden is coming to the front, and we expect to be one of the foremost in the cause of reform. We want equal rights before the law."

W. G. Walters, Leslie, O., writes:

"We cast seven votes in our township (Willshire) for the American party ticket, but saw no returns of them anywhere outside the township."

W. S. Spooner, Hebron, Thayer Co., Neb., writes:

"Threats, bullying and insults are the efficient weapons and arguments used to advance the cause of secrecy in this portion of God's country; but I am thankful, as it is just now doing a good work in arousing the public mind."

Andrew Alpaugh, Yates City, Ill., writes:

"Please send me another bundle of your paper containing 'Masonry at a Glance.' I have calls for it continually."

Mrs. C. G. Reed, now of Girard, O., orders the address of her paper changed, and writes:

"I do not know how to do without my paper, even one week."

J. B. Carman, Maryville, Mo., writes:

"The Masonic question is creating a great excitement here. We had a discussion last night on secret societies. The Masons were out in force, but we gave them a good brush, and the decision of the judges was in our favor."

S. N. Grout, Macon, Neb., writes:

"The tide of secretism has already risen very high. It slushed over on to me more yesterday than ever before. A near neighbor was burying his much lamented wife, who left an infant and four older children. A church meeting was called at the funeral, and after the sermon was the touching ceremony of receiving to fellowship of the church (Congregational) the father, by letter, and three daughters—one about nine years old—by profession; the two infant boys receiving baptism; after which the seal of the covenant was placed upon them—a solemn and deeply impressive scene. But as the deceased was one of the Rebecca sisters the concluding exercises of the burial were handed over to the Odd-fellows and odd-sisters, and then followed ceremonies that might seem adapted to the intelligence of very small children; of putting on a fancy uniform and marching one after another to throw a sprig of evergreen upon the coffin, etc., etc. It would seem that Satan contrived secret societies as a means by which he could avalanche the dark ages with their superstitions upon us, grievously obscuring the precious light of the Gospel. Perhaps I am mistaken, but it seemed to me that much of the serious impression of the preceding religious exercises was thus stolen away. May God speed the day when this power of Satan shall be broken and the beautiful institutions of the Gospel be deemed all sufficient.

"Plowing, harrowing, stalk breaking, and even grain-sowing are familiar scenes during this pleasant month in this part of Nebraska, that despite its newness and numerous obstacles has for two years taken important agricultural premiums over the other counties of the State. Better crops of wheat were raised here last year than ever before, and of excellent quality. Considerable religious interest has been felt at Riverton, in this county. There have been several additions to the church. At one time it seemed that the whole surrounding country would be reached, but sectarian feeling arose, bursting proprieties and compacts, and suddenly killed the interest. Alas! alas! in how many directions there needs to be reform."

James S. McClelland, Oberlin, O., sends for 1,000 supplements and 500 Honeywell's tracts, and writes:

"We propose putting a supplement in every house and into the hands of every student."

"Rev. G. M. Elliott, Selma, Ala., writes:

"We are still laboring to overthrow the evil works of secretism, and prevent its spread among the down-trodden and forlorn of the south. The Cynosure has set many to thinking."

Ferdinand Huber, Mt. Heron, O., writes:

"We are to have a debate in one of our school-houses. The subject is: Resolved, that secret societies ought to be abolished. Please send me such tracts as will best suit the occasion."

We would be glad to hear of such discussions being held in every school-house in the country.

A. Housel, Osslan, Ind., writes:

"I have lived a member of the M. E. church almost forty-six years. I have now left it and joined the U. P. church. I could not live in a church that fellowshiped Masonry, and be fettered and bound. I wanted to give scope to my feelings and pray that God would annihilate Freemasonry and bring it to ruin and desolation. I believe if every one would come out of the church where Freemasons rule it would clean the churches of Freemasonry very quickly. May God raise up the means to bring it to naught."

R. J. Wylie, Rushsylvania, O., writes:

"All that is necessary to extinguish the craft forever is the dissemination of knowledge. We are in the midst of a large number of them. Their deeds of darkness are plainly seen. May God bless and prosper you in your work and labor of your hands, until the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the seas."

R. B. Dawson, Baxter, Iowa, writes:

"The lodge influence is stirring itself here now, but I do not believe that it is satisfied with its progress. The Cynosure, and other literature from your office has done much good here, and, as we believe, has prepared the way for a good lecturer, and we expect Bro. H. H. Hinman with us soon."

D. J. Wilson, West Branch, Ia., writes:

'God speaks of visiting the nation, the city, the people that forget him and disobey his laws. The Jews when in trouble called their leaders or rulers together and put the laws of God on the table and sought to find out what part of the law was broken, then by fasting and prayer repented of their wickedness and put away the abomination. By so doing God returned to help them and not to destroy them. The laws of God were the first in use to establish the laws of the United States upon. Now, would it not be wise, even if it should be humiliating, to call the rulers together and search and compare the present laws with the good old Bible, which was so precious to our rulers one hundred years ago. Surely the American people cannot be ignorant of the fact that as a nation we have strayed far from the first principles of Holy Writ. Will not the rulers of the land be wise, and break in pieces the idolatrous systems practiced all over the land, or will they join in the cry, 'Great is the god of secretism, whose name is legion.' You may in a measure hide the blood of your murdered victims, and the guilty ones you clear and help to escape justice, but you can't escape the notice of a just God, who has promised to visit the nation that turns to idols with swift destruction. Will every city and village stick to their abominations until their doom is destruction? Remember Chicago, and other vicinities which have had their visitation. My prayer is that the people may take warning before it is too late; that they may take warning by Ronayne and many others who have come out from the evils of Masonry, which are shaking this nation to the very center. God bless the reformers who have taken their lives in their hands to carry on this great work."

James Barnett, West Geneva, O., writes:

"I am not one of the constituents of the nation; no part of the constituency of the nation. I am willing to have a connection with a Christian nation."

E H. Gould, Dundee, Ill., writes:

"I like the paper very much. I hardly know how to do without it."

Ebenezer Tucker, Spartansburg, Ind., writes:

"I am an anti-secretist, and have been for fifty years, ever since Morgan was killed I was brought up in Otsego Co., New York, and should like to take your paper. I have never belonged to a secret order of any sort, not even the Sons of Temperance, nor the Union League, though a total abstinence man since 1827, and an abolitionist since 1835."

Wm. H Sanderson, Brandon, Vt., writes:

"I am a seceding Mason, and the lodge has preferred charges against me, and I propose to defend my position, not only at the trial, but everywhere I have the opportunity. Trusting in God, I shall endeavor to speak the truth fearlessly. My trial comes off the 14th of March. I will inform you of the proceedings thereafter."

L D. Gardner, Unionville, Mo., writes:

"Masonry is all the go here, as there are only two real Anti-masons in our town, myself and one other, so we have a warm time of it. Oh! how long will men, and men, too, who profess to be followers of Christ, cherish this dark and villainous institution, and by so doing wound and darken their souls and put a damper on the cause of Christ. We have been members of the M. E church for years, and our house has always been a home for the preachers till this year. The minister came once to see us, but could not stand the Anti-mason. He called the Cynosure a novel, and seceding Masons perjured villians."

J. W. Baldridge, Sr., Cherry Fork, O., writes:

"The great trouble is to get men to see the dangerous tendencies of secret societies in church and state. But I believe in the efficacy of prayer, and sooner or later the prayers of the Christian people of this nation will be heard, and sworn secrecy will fail. The Odd-fellows are making greater inroads upon us in this immediate neighborhood ther any other secret order. The grange is on the decline. They started a new house in Manchester some eighteen months ago, but have been closed up for the last two months. So I think they won't last long."

Samuel A. Pratt, Shrewsbury Mass., writes:

"The good Lord is working in our midst and saving sinners from their sins. We are looking for great things in the way of saving sinners from death and destruction. We believe in the power of truth when spoken in all fullness and sincerity. Let the truth be spoken though the heavens fall."

James Love, Frederick, Ia., writes:

"Secretism has been a growing evil in our country. The gigantic proportions to which it has arrived under its various denominations of Freemasonry, Odd fellowship, etc., are truly alarming, and unless arrested in its onward progress, like a polypus tumor in the system it will never cease to grow, until it has subverted our liberties, civil and religious, and drained the last vestige of moral vitality from the free institutions of our beloved and highly favored country."

A. J. Smith, Cromwell, Ia., writes:

"My prayer is that God may prosper your association in this work of love for the Master and I pray that the good Lord may save our young men from the delusion of Masonry."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1877.

"MEN DO NOT GOVERN THIS WORLD."

The above words were lately uttered by a man who has been more than twenty years in public life in the legislature of his own State and in Congress, and who now is general solicitor of one of our great railroads, with a salary of twelve thousand dollars. "I know," said he, "that men do not govern this world."

Salmon P. Chase, when I first knew him, was a young lawyer in Cincinnati, whose sister's house (Mrs. Colby's) was gutted and the furniture destroyed in the street in front of it, because she allowed a female anti-slavery prayer-meeting in it; one, by the way, which I often addressed. Mr. Chase prosecuted the mob, and was from that time treated as an abolitionist himself, though he had attended none of our meetings and spoken no word in our favor. The only public office he had then held was that of alderman in the city. Every coaxing art and all brutal language were employed by his friends and his enemies to induce him or force him to commit himself against abolition. Neither prevailed with him. In a few years he went from his seat as alderman, voting on curb-stones and sewers, to a seat in the United States Senate; afterward to that of Governor of the State; thence to be Secretary of the Treasury, and finally to be Chief Justice of the mightiest nation on earth. But few years before he died he said to me in his library at Washington, "I have no idea whether I shall be nominated, or if nominated whether I would be elected President of the United States; but, as when you knew me in Cincinnati, I regard the colored population as the wards of the United States, and our treatment of them the key of our national prosperity."

Stephen A. Douglas met and taunted Abraham Lincoln with his failure in public life. He had seen him, he believed, once in Congress, and for fourteen years afterward Mr. Lincoln had disappeared; "done," as Douglas elegantly expressed it. Andrew Johnson and other Freemasons laid, soon after, the corner-stone of Douglas' yet unfinished monument. Lincoln's monument was finished before Booth shot him. Like Washington, he had become the standard by which to test Presidents of the Republic. The newspapers now seize upon and hail every utterance of Rutherford B. Hayes which resemble the sayings of Lincoln.

To-day the lodge, like the slave power in the early days of Douglas and Lincoln, is omnipotent in this country. To-morrow it may be where the slave power now is. Aspiring young men would do well to study the history of the fall of the slave power, and remember that "Men do not govern this world."

A CATHOLIC EXCISION

The members of the secret order known as the "Ancient Order of Hibernians," in Scranton, Pa., were lately astonished at a public notice to leave from Bishop O'Hara, of the Roman Catholic diocese including that part of Pennsylvania. The "Hibernians" have been associated more or less with the notorious "Molly Maguires," with whose murderous character it has not pleased the Masonic lodge to allow any claim of affiliation. The pastoral of Bishop O'Hara, however, includes the whole lodge circle, though especially directed at the mates of the Mollies. While the Romish leaders are firm in meeting the inroads of the lodge, it will yet be perceived that it is for the sake of the Church, and to maintain its integrity that secret orders are put under the ban, and not for the direct war they make upon the honor of Christ himself. Though from motives which we cannot approve, yet the indictment of the lodge in the following extract seems to be well drawn, pointing out those evils which are most evident:

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Before we close our pastoral, we deem it opportune to call your attention to the prevalence of secret societies, and the endeavors of many among you to make new organizations under one pretext or another; sometimes from a motive of patriotism, the amelioration of your fellow-men, mutual protection, philanthropy, and finally for the promotion of the study of literature among young men, all binding themselves solemnly by oath to the strictest secrecy except to their brother members. You of the household of faith know well that you are not at liberty to bind yourself, rashly and blindly, without knowledge, by an oath to such organizations. They are specious schemes, organized by designing men, to premote their own interests, either that they may grow wealthy in the world through the members whom they dupe into their organization, or that they may make them useful tools to promote their own personal advancement. These societies are organized on certain pretended natural virtues. The members waive all obligations which bind them to the civil authority. They feel themselves under no restraint to listen to the voice of the church, the pillar and ground of truth, the mother of all the faithful. We make particular mention of one, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, which has been in existence among you several years. When we were first informed of its existence, we were disposed to regard it as all other secret societies under the ban of the church and forbade the members the benefits of our holy religion.

The address goes on to state that promises of reform were made and submission to the Bishop's authority by change of the constitution and of conduct of the members. These promises were not fulfilled; hence the ban was placed upon the order.

TOWNSHIP LAWS OF IOWA.—We have received from Samuel Holmes, Esq., counsellor at law, Hamburg, Fremont county, Iowa, his neat and concise volume of the Township Laws of Iowa, just issued from the press of Acres, Blackmar & Co., Burlington, Iowa. This book, which does credit to the publishers and binder, is specially designed to aid town officers, as trustees, clerk, constable, collector, assessors, and highway supervisors, within the State of Iowa. No justice of the peace, or grand or petit juror, and no lawyer with a country practice within that State can afford to be without it. Mr. Holmes has, with great industry and thoroughness, drawn together in a small compass the legal skeleton of civilized society in Iowa, from the organization of the township out of "raw prairie," with its first ten cabins, to the registration of voters and conducting an election; and foxes, swifts, wolves and gophers appear in this volume, rendering up their scalps to atone for their mischief; while cattle, hogs, horses and mules have each their share under the net-work of law.

How much better would it be for general readers, young and old, but especially the young, to read up the theory and practice of human society in such a volume than to read the endless flatulent fictions of many circulating libraries. The book can be had at the Iowa book-stores, or by writing to the author or publishers.

—The Evangelical Repository tells us how the "hearty co-operation" of of Masonic ministers with Mr. Moody's evangelical work may become something very different when he is out of sight. At a meeting of the Presbyterian ministers of Philadelphia a Dr. Allen gave his judgment as unfavorable to the Moody meetings. "This," says Dr. Barr, "surprised us, for we knew that he had taken part in his meetings in this city. We quickly remembered, however, that one day during those meetings, and just following a prayer by Dr. Allen, Mr. Moody hit secret societies a very hard whack. Dr. Allen is well known as a prominent Freemason, and we put this and that together, and our wonder ceased." Such outspoken opposition to the late revival has not appeared among the Chicago ministers, although the Methodist pastors decided, at the departure of Mr. Moody, to carry on the work in their own churches instead of participating in a farther union effort. A most serious opposition to Gospel work exists, however, in the practice of several pastors connected with the lodge. Revs. Fallows, Tiffany, Parkhurst, Truesdell, and Ravlin, who was lately chosen as "prelate" of a Chicago Knight Templar commandery, are surely responsible for the stumbling-block of their Masonic affiliation, the evil effects of which the final day only can reveal.

—The General Agent spent the greater portion of last week on the line of the Northwestern Railroad, in Kane and DeKalb counties, pushing on the reform.

—The reports of workers in various quarters will be read with interest this week. The record of the late Central Kansas Association waits another week to appear.

—From a brief note in the last American Freeman, we judge that the Freemasons of Sparta, Ohio, gained little reputation outside their lodge ring for their attempted persecution of Mr. Alexander Needles. A full report is promised of their disgraceful attempt to repay him for his defense of the truth against their institution by dragging him from one court to another, under pretense of punishment for violation of the election law.

—Rev. W. W. Ames, of Menominee, Wis., has a second thousand of the Moody tract printed. The following have been supplied from the first edition: J. F. McKee, Wis.; Alfred Osgood, Ill.; Conrad Stegner, Minn.; Stephen Waite, Mass., and Byron Park, N. Y. In connection with the above distribution, friend Chalfant is doing quite a local work in York county, Pa. He proposes scattering 4,000 of a new tract he has written on the "Court House Ring," which is a brief document, of a style to be of great use in enlisting the attention of thinking men who have not learned of the reform movement. This, he says, with other tracts of his own and others, will make 40,000 pages of Anti-masonic tracts scattered since 1868. A good work. May not only others, but himself, reap bountifully from this sowing.

Religious Intelligence.

—At the last communion the Chicago Presbyterian and Cong. churches received large additional accessions from the revival. It is estimated that the former have received 1,000 members by profession since last November. The city Congregational churches received 66 new members March 4th, and revivals and considerable additions are reported at Evanston, Wheaton, Olney, Turner Junction, Sterling, Dwight, Brimfield and Peru.

—An indication of the thoroughness of the revival in Chicago is the re-establishment of an Elders' Association of the Presbyterian churches, in which the duties and responsibilities of that office are being thoroughly discussed, and the Scriptural warrant for the office carefully studied. The result can but be good to the churches. A like inquiry has arisen among the Methodist churches in regard to the class-leaders, and some of the pastors claim that the office is being mis-used by men who neglect their duty.

—A meeting for Scriptural holiness is regularly held in the Baptist church in Wheaton. At a late meeting the pastor of that church remarking on the Scriptural injunction that all our trust should be in Christ said that was a reason for his leaving the Masonic lodge. He was asked, "In whom do you put your trust?" but was not permitted to reply as his Bible commanded and his heart prompted, "In Christ." The lodge put the reply into his mouth, "In God." It was evidence to him of the un-Christian spirit of the institution.

—The new church property tax law of Maine exempts from taxation church property worth not more than $5,000.

—The revival work at Boston continues with great power, and is spreading into adjacent cities remarkably. Mr. Moody was temporarily indisposed and did not preach one day.

Rev. E. P. Hammond closed his work at Terre Haute, Ind., on the 3d inst., and is now conducting meetings in Syracuse, N. Y. A thousand conversions are reported in the former city.

—Rev. T. B. McCormick, a faithful standard-bearer in Indiana, is preaching at Mechanicsville, and his efforts have been blessed in the spiritual quickening of the church.

News of the Week.

—The new Chicago Postmaster is F. W. Palmer, a former M. C. from Iowa, a salary-grabber and machine politician.——The Ill. Legislature has passed an act that the city and town elections may occur on the same day, the first Tuesday in April, in the case of large cities. —A tenement house on Ludlow street, New York, was burned on Sabbath evening, four children perishing.——A panic took place in St. Francis Xavier Catholic church, New York, on Thursday evening, and part of the audience rushed out, trampling six persons to death.——A passenger engine, drawing the Omaha train towards Chicago, exploded last week at Gault, Ill., killing the engineer and fireman and injuring the station agent so that his recovery is doubtful.——In the burning of large dry goods stores at St. Johns, N. B., last week, eight lives were lost.——Two murders have been lately committed over the billiard table in this city.——President Hayes sent his cabinet nominations to the Senate on Wednesday, as follows: Secretary of State, Wm. M. Evarts, of New York; of the Treasury, John Sherman, of Ohio; of War, G. W. McCrary, of Iowa; of the Navy, R. W. Thompson, of Indiana; of the Interior, Carl Schurz, of Missouri; Postmaster General, D. M. Key, of Tennessee; Attorney General, Charles Devens, of Massachusetts. Considerable opposition was made by the Republican "ring," and the nominations were referred to several committees, but the opposition gave way and all were confirmed on Saturday.——The Herzegovinian insurgents have petitioned the Porte for amnesty and permission to return home.——Russia is yet negotiating with the Powers for Turkish supervision.——It is reported that outrages continue in Bulgaria of an atrocious nature.——A great fire in Yeddo, Japan, in December, destroyed 15,000 houses and two large bridges, with many lives. The government had to distribute food and clothing among the sufferers.——Judge Davis, the new Senator from Illinois, has taken his place among the Republicans in Congress.——It is understood that ex-Secretary Bristow will be appointed to the Supreme Court in place of Judge Davis.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

Gospel Temperance.

At the Friday noon meeting, March 2d, in the Boston Tabernacle, after the opening exercises Mr. Moody said: Can the drunkard be saved? I am going to call out some witnesses who have been saved, to answer this question. A man from Philadelphia, Mr. Anderson, then presented himself and spoke as follows:

My Dear Friends: I don't tell my story to glory in it, but I tell it to glory in the power which Jesus has to save. I was brought up by kind, Christian parents; they taught me the way I should go, but when I was sixteen years of age, in a very large mercantile establishment in Philadelphia, where there were some twenty-one to thirty young men, they tried to persuade me to drink; they could not do it by persuasion, so they did it by ridicule. I could not stand the ridicule, so I fell into the snare the tempter had set before me, and for eleven years I was a respectable drinker, a moderate drinker. At the end of those eleven years I saw where it was leading me to and I joined in the temperance cause. For three years I was in the cause, but I never felt any security in me; I was always trembling for fear I would fall, and I did fall. I was blown up in a boiler explosion, and it was presented to me as a medicine, and right here I want to say there is no earthly use in it as a medicine, but it led me down; I went down faster during the short time since taking it the second time than I did during the whole eleven years. I slipped down so fast I didn't know where I was until about a year afterward, I found myself so besotted, running through the streets of Philadelphia, that when I earned money I could not take a cent of it home for my family. My desire to do so was good enough, but the devil had such a power over me that it was an impossibility for me to do it, and so I wandered for these long years. It kept increasing on me so that almost, and while I was wandering along, both under the influence of liquor and sober, there was always a voice whispering within my soul solemnly, around about me and in my ears, that oftentimes in the streets I would turn around to see if it was some one asking me, and this is what it said, 'Turn ye, turn ye; why will ye die?" It followed me everywhere. I tried to drown it; I tried to get rid of it; my old parents, a father who is now eighty-four years of age, and a mother well up toward eighty years, were praying for me earnestly, and I knew I was breaking their hearts; I knew I was breaking the hearts of my wife and children, but I could not stop it. I tried everything. I signed the pledges; I took all those recipes that were going around as a substitute for rum; they were of no avail for me. I went to magistrates and took oaths, and thought the great respect and regard I had for them would give me a power to overcome this. I tried in every way; I went to Christian friends and asked them, wasn't there some help for me; they told me no, only to sign the pledge.

I HAVE NO FAITH IN THE PLEDGE.

My experience has taught me that there is nothing in the pledge; I tried them and kept on that way. Well, last Thanksgiving Day, a year ago, when Mr. Moody was in Phil-

The Home Circle.

The Family Record.

'Ay, write it down in black and white—
The date, the age, the name;
For home has never seemed so dear
As since our baby came.
No child before was half so sweet,
And never babe so wise;
And John, the neighbors say, indeed,
It has its father's eyes."

"Nay, wife, I'm sure they're like your own;
The rogue's his mother's boy.
How strange that such a tiny form
Can cause such boundless joy!
And you will have him named for me?
Come, think it o'er again;
For 'John' is but a homely name"—
"Nay, do not drop your pen,

"For 'John' shall be his name, my dear;
It is his father's own,
And though a hundred more were given,
I'll call him that alone.
His father's eyes, his father's face,
His father's form, I'm sure;
God grant he have his father's heart,
Life's hardships to endure!"

'Well, there, 'tis written down at last,
The record is complete;
Henceforth we'll lay our loving hearts
Beneath our baby's feet.
Ah, wife, our home's a humble place—
We're humble folks, that's true,
But I'm a king with boundless wealth
In that young rogue and you.

"So, baby, wink and blink, my boy,
Your mother's eyes—"Nay, John,
They are his father's eyes indeed,
That I insist upon!"
"Well, be that as it may, his mouth
Is waiting for a kiss.
He's like you there at least, my dear;
Say, do I judge amiss?"

Mrs. Somers.

Mrs. Wright called on Mrs. Somers Thursday afternoon. In answer to the ring of the bell, a pattering of little feet was heard along the hall, and a sweet little voice piped:

"Oh, won't you be a Christian while you' young? Oh, won't you be a —"

But here the steps halted at the door and after sundry jerkings of the knob, and the aid of Mrs. Wright, it was at length opened.

"Why, dood afternoon Missie Wight. Tum wite in. I'se teepin 'ouse all 'lone."

"Isn't your mother at home, dear?"

"No, nobody isn't 'ome but dess me. Sit down Missie Wight. 'Scuse my di'ty han's. I fought I'd black'e stove, 'tause muver told Bwidget 'is mornin' 'at it needed bwushing awfu'est, and I fought I'd 'spwise her when she tum 'ome."

"And it will be a surprise no doubt," was Mrs. Wright's mental comment as she looked ruefully at the handsome carpet besmeared with great drops of the black-lead, and the hearth rug entirely ruined; not to speak of the spectacle the stove itself presented, or of the delicate white frock, and stockings and slippers of the little midget engaged so zealously in her mistaken labor of love.

"Don't you think it will do now, dear? Wouldn't it be better to dress your dollies?"

"Why, Missie Wight, I dessed my dollies long adoe, Marfa's asleep, and Wosy and Maywie's studyin' 'ere wifmatic"—with a little sigh of relief that at this busy time all the dolls had been attended to. "Oh dea' I's so dweadfu' tiwed. I wish Bwidget would tum to weach me'e washbowl so I tould—Oh dere's muver tummin!" and she cast a rather foreboding glance at her soiled clothes, as her mother entered.

"Oh Mrs. Wright," exclaimed she, "how glad I am to see you; I have just attended a meeting of the Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society, and—why, Myrtle Somers!" she ejaculated in a tone of mingled surprise and anger as her eye fell on the result of the little housekeeper's work. "What in the world have you been doing? Speak quick, child!"—her anger getting quite the better of her—"Oh my! look at this carpet, and your hands and face and clothes! Did I ever see such a thing! You naughty girl, you deserve a good whipping"—as she caught the little one by the shoulder and alternately shook and slapped her—"Where's Bridget?"

"Don vay, sumferes," when she could speak for crying.

"Gone away somewhere, and left you to do as much mischief as possible!" with another vicious shake by the slender shoulder, as if she were to blame for Bridget's nonappearance. "I'll wash your hands and face and then do you go into my bedroom and stay there the rest of the day. Such a young one!" while she wiped the face, not very gently, it must be said, and ended by giving the tender little cheek such a smarting blow that Mrs. Wright involuntarily put forth her hand as if to shield her, while her eyes were dim for a moment, and she longed to clasp that little suffering baby in her arms and press the wounded cheek against her own. It was very weak in her, of course, but she had a little one laid away under the turf, and that makes the strongest woman weak sometimes you know.

"That Bridget gives me a world of trouble, Mrs. Wright, I often wonder if others have as much vexation with their servants. Were it not for so many calls upon my time and attention for benevolent enterprises, I should be tempted to dispense with even one; but as it is, I must bear the affliction, I suppose."

Poor Bridget, faithfully performing a commission assigned her by her mistress that morning, was happily ignorant of the unjust blame attached to her, as she thought—"Oh I do hope that little darlint wou't go into any mischief while I'm gone, for the mistress'll be mad as fury!"

Mrs. Somers proceeded to give an account of the meeting of the society which she had just attended; of which she was the most influential member. But though the recital would have been extremely interesting to her listener at any other time, scarcely a word was heeded now, for from the room where the little Myrtle was sent in solitude—not quite so oppressive perhaps since that was where "Marfa" had been put to sleep, and "Wosy" and "Maywie" were made to "study 'ere wifmatic"—her childish tones could be heard, seeking sympathy from "Marfa" who had been awakened for that purpose no doubt. Between the subdued sobs and cries, came a statement of grievances to the ever open ears of that personage: "I didn't fink 'twas naughty, 'r else I wouldn't have did it. I fought mebby muver'd say I was handy as a pituchion in 'e tole-bin 'e way papa did 'at time I shined his boots so nice wiv 'e bwush an' oil fwom 'e buwoe."

"What a splendid woman Mrs. Somers is," says one lady to another, returning from the society that day, "Her essay on 'the wants of the heathen' was truly admirable, I believe she does more than any other lady member of our church to advance the cause of religion. Always ready and on the lookout for what can be done, and so zealous and faithful."

But did the recording angel write of her that day – faithful?

"For ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Am. Wesleyan.

Meditation.

"O my soul, dignified with God's image, redeemed by Christ's blood, betrothed by faith, enriched by the Spirit, adorned with grace, ranked with angels—love him by whom thou art so much beloved! Be intent on him who is intent on thee; seek him who seeketh thee; love him who loveth thee—whose love anticipates thine, and is its cause! He has all the merit, he is thy reward! He is the vision and the end! Be earnest with the earnest, pure with the pure, holy with the holy! What thou shouldst appear before God, that should God appear to thee. He who is kind, and gentle, and of great compassion, requires the meek, the humble and the compassionate. Love him who drew thee from the lake of misery and from the miry clay. Choose him for thy friend above all friends who, when thou art bereft of all things, can alone remain to thee. In the day of thy burial, when every friend is gone, he will not forsake thee, but will defend thee from devouring foes, lead thee through an unknown region, bring thee to the streets of the heavenly Zion, and place thee with angels in the presence of his Majesty, where thou shalt hear the angelic melody, 'Holy, holy, holy!' There is the chant of gladness, there is the voice of exultation and salvation, of thanksgiving, and praise, and perpetual hallelujahs! There is accumulated bliss, and super-eminent glory."

Doubtful Questions; how Christians may Settle Them.

In religion many matters of minor moment (according to common judgment) are looked at and treated casuistically. That is, questions of doubtful propriety, of which many are coming up constantly to Christians, are resolved by their conscience, according to its notions of equity as learned from reason, the current maxims of religious duty around them, and the conduct of others.

Good people doubt many a time about the doing of this thing as to whether it would be right, or the not doing of some other thing. And these doubtful things are found turning up so often, that some well-meaning Christian people are kept in a doubting and half-condemned state of mind nearly all the time. In this particular they seem to be "all their lifetime subject to bondage."

What can be done, to settle all these questions? Can anything offer a final settlement of them? Can any such settlement of them be reached that doubtful questions will trouble no more? We say, yes. Do you ask "how"?

Get a clean heart! Get a clean heart! Get a clean heart!

Depend upon it, that is the way out of all dubiousness, double-mindedness and perplexity. And there is no other. A clean heart sees rightly because it sees purely. People who profess to be Christians spend their time doubting and discussing mooted things, because the love of sin is near by! Professors of religion are continually catechising and cross-questioning their hearts about the right of doing this thing, and the wrong of doing the other, because evil is at the bottom! The heart is divided. The eye is not single.

The spirit of holiness answers in one breath a thousand questions and resolves the whole army of doubts. A really sanctified Christian is never at a loss to see the God-side of every question. And he is never at a moment's hesitation in taking the God-side of it, and standing there. Stand there he will, though he stand all alone! Said a friend and well-wisher to one of the old reformers, "All the world is against you." "Then (said the noble man) I am against all the world." To such a point of moral isolation every holy Christian must come, at least in purpose. And more than likely before the end of life is reached he will have to stand practically alone upon some separating issue, and in very deed, be "against all the world."

The true deliverance and the only deliverance from wrong-doing in the matter of doubtful things, is simply right-doing. "Do right." This means be consecrated to the doing of that which is right, only. That is the whole of it. Then all doubts vanish, all questions are answered. "But who can thus do right?" No one, but the holy man. "And can he?" Yes—for holiness is rectitude.—Banner of Holiness.

The Children's Letter.

PORTLAND, Mich., Feb. 28, 1877.

DEAR EDITOR:—I have written you two letters before, and you have published them both in the Cynosure, and I will write you another short one if I can. I am only fifteen years of age, but, young as I am, I am determined and willing to do all I can to put down this great evil, Masonry. There are a good many Masons here, and in the country, too. I wish we could have Mr. Ronayne come here and lecture for us. I think there is much need of having a lecturer that has been through the mill himself, and knows all about it from experience. I have lately learned that Mr. D. P. Rathbun is our lecturer, and I wish that we could get him here, and I guess we can. Father got a letter from C. B. Remington, saying that they wanted to labor in this county about two weeks. I hope he will come, for then the Masons can not say he does not know anything about it, only what he has read or heard some one say. When Mr. J. L. Barlow lectured here some one said he had taken 17 degrees, and, I tell you, the Masons looked down for awhile. I think, if it is a good institution, they would want it to be investigated.

Yours for the truth and good of the cause. JAMES W. MARCY.

The Eye of a Needle.

The passage from the New Testament, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God," has perplexed many good men who have read it literally. In oriental cities there are in the large gates small and very low apertures, called "needles' eyes," just as we talk of windows on shipboard as "bulls' eyes." These entrances are too narrow for a camel to pass through in the ordinary manner, or even if loaded. When a loaded camel has to pass through one of these entrances it kneels down, its load is removed, and then it shuffles through on its knees. "Yesterday," writes a lady from Cairo, "I saw a camel go through the eye of a needle—that is, the low arched door of an enclosure. He must kneel, and bow his head, to creep through; and thus the rich man must humble himself."

The Young Skipper's Religion.

"No, sir," said John Bardwell; "my sloop does not take out parties on the Sabbath." The young sailor spoke with emphasis that left no room for an appeal. But his father, who was smoking on the hull of an ancient wreck that was secured to the wharf, quickly interposed.

"Wait a bit, John; you're too hasty! The foul weather has kept us from making a cent all this week; and money needed for the store bill, too. This gentleman's offer seems like a providence, as you call it, coming just when it's wanted. They're a quiet party; seems as if it wouldn't hurt anybody's conscience to give 'em a sail. You could sing 'em your hymns, and spend the day just as proper on water as on land."

"It is against my principles," was the brief reply.

The old man impatiently knocked the ashes from his pipe.

"These new notions o'yourn 'ill drive us all upon the town!"

John walked away, to end the discussion before the stranger, and also to battle with himself. He was sorely tempted. It was hard to withstand his aged father's pleading, and the pressure of circumstances. His business was fishing and taking out pleasure parties in a little sloop that was rocking gracefully a few rods from the wharf. The season had just commenced, his craft was all ready for excursions, the sum that was offered would relieve pressing family needs—was there really any harm in giving this quiet party a Sabbath sail?

Last summer the young shipper would have eagerly sought such an engagement, but now a new spirit governed his actions. During the winter he had publicly confessed Christ. It was no halfway transaction with the earnest man. He meant to carry his religion into his business and this was the burden of his petitions in the little conference meetings. The good people who were stirred and quickened by the young brother's eloquence, little dreamed what a sacrifice he intended to make, for a great part of his business was on the Sabbath.

"Your son cannot be persuaded to carry us out?" asked the stranger, as he watched the erect figure pacing the sands.

"He met with a change last winter, sir," replied the old man in an apologetic tone, "and ever since, he's sot agin Sabbath work. Now, I like a day's rest, myself, but poor folks can't afford to be particular."

"But you often say poor folks can afford to be honest, father," said the son as he approached. "The Sabbath does not belong to us, if we use it we defraud our Maker.

"There, he's gone, and it's all along o' your crazy notions!" cried the father, as the stranger withdrew. "Such a pile of money as he'd gin ye, too! They say he's a wealthy merchant from York State. Them's the kind that don't stand for a dollar, if they're sot on anything. If you'd hearkened to me, you'd been on the right side o' him. We'd had a fat job on't. As it is, nobody 'll patronize such an odd critter as you be, and we'll all come upon the town. She'll be mortgaged," pointing to the sloop, "and my poor old bones 'll lie in a pauper's grave!"

The next Sabbath the sloop rode at anchor in the bay, her clean decks glistening all day under the eyes of the pleasure-loving gentleman. It was a peaceful picture, but there was little peace in the heart of her owner. It seemed as if everything conspired to disturb his spirit; his father foretold evil, his wife looked shabby, little Harry could not go to church for want of shoes; on Monday a bill was due, and nothing to meet it with. John loved neat attire, and tried to be even with the world.

"It's no use to show ourselves," said his father, as they started for the wharf on Monday. "They're all down on ye at the hotel."

The old man's discourse on the folly of his son's "new notions" was interrupted by the wealthy stranger. He wished to secure the young skipper's services for the entire week.

"You're very kind to remember us, after my son's ill behavior!" cried the old fisherman, delightedly rubbing his horny hands.

"Your son was right to stand by his principles," replied the merchant, with a dignity that silenced the worldly parent.

So all the week the tiny craft sailed like a bird over the water, the young skipper at her helm, his rich voice often ringing out his gladness in songs of praise to him who is the rewarder of all who trust in him. The stranger and the young man had many talks together on these trips, and sometimes upon land.

John said little, but that, and his consistent Christian life, won him a warm friend.

The result of this acquaintance is still the theme for garrulous lips in the little sea town. The merchant made him master of a large schooner used in connection with his business. Of this the young skipper finally became half owner, and afterwards a successful man. But as his Sabbath draws near, each week, if possible he makes a harbor, the sails are taken in, and the stately ship, as did the tiny sloop of old, rides quietly at anchor.—Congregationalist.

Puzzle Drawer.

MIDDLETOWN, Vt., Feb. 18, 1877.

DEAR SIR:—I send an answer to one of the enigmas of Feb. 15: Elmond Ronayne." I send another, if you think it worth publishing:

A PRETTY WAY TO TRAIN FUCHIAS.—When a slip has grown six or eight inches high, nip out the top down to the last set of leaves; it will then throw out branches on each side. Let these grow eight or ten inches, then nip them out as before; the tops of each branch when grown to the same height as others, nip out again; then procure a stick the size of your finger, eighteen inches in length; take hoop-skirt wire, twine back and forth alternately, through holes made in the stick equal distances apart; place this firmly in the pot back of the plant, tie the branches to it, and you will have, when in flower, a beautiful and very graceful plant. Having one trained in that way last season, it was the admiration of all who saw it.—Small Fruit Recorder.

Children's Teeth.

Faith Rochester writes the American Agriculturist: I have been looking at my little girl's teeth, and neither she nor I can tell exactly which ones belong to the first and which to the second set. This leads me to regret that I have not kept memoranda of all such matters pertaining to my children's development. I have seen a book advertised especially designed for this purpose, and I think young mothers would do well to provide themselves with one on the first appearance of "a babe in the house." It should be kept private, and every important physical change noted, with its date. Facts of this kind are sometimes of great service to the family physician, when called upon to prescribe for a member of the family. Parents often try to remember just when some accident happened, or some childish sickness, which proves to have far reaching and unforeseen results. It is interesting to observe the dental changes of a child. The coming of each little tooth in the first set is a great event in the family, but to the child itself, the process of second teething is deeply interesting. Here is a little girl by my side who feels more pride over the vacant place among the front teeth of her lower jaw than over any other feature of her face. She is sure now that she is growing like other children, and she watches every day for the coming of her first "second tooth." Her sister, who never had any difficulty at all about getting her first set of teeth, used to complain, a year ago, of great uneasiness in her jaws when the new double teeth were pressing through. You know probably, that the first set of teeth has only eight double teeth (or molars), and the child gets one more of these grinding teeth on each side of each jaw, or four new molars, when it gets its second teeth. The "wisdom teeth" come later in life, and sometimes with considerable pain. Some dentists and physicians think it a matter of great importance that children should have a plenty of bone-forming food all through the growing years, and investigation has convinced them that children fed on a plain diet, consisting largely of milk, oatmeal or graham, with lean beef (if any meat), and vegetables and fruit, and little or no cake and sweet-meats, have better teeth—less trouble with the teeth every way—than children who eat considerable molasses, sugar, cake, and candy.

I saw a good dentist removing tartar from a lady's teeth after having filled several cavities. He used simple pumice-stone, which he said was the basis of many tooth powders. This he applied with a small pine stick, so scouring the teeth. Afterward I treated the teeth of two little girls in the same manner. Their teeth had been neglected until they had a dark yellowish border next the gums. Simple washing with a toothbrush would not remove this, but after one scouring with the pumice-stone they were easily kept clean by the daily use of a toothbrush. Well kept teeth do not need "scouring," and powders of all kinds should be cautiously used. Children should be taught to take care of their teeth, to keep them clean, and to avoid all abuse of these useful members.

He who does nothing is in a fair way to do mischief. An idle lad makes a needy man, and a miserable one, too.

The Presidency.

The great interest of the whole nation centers now about the executive chair, from which an incumbent of eight years arises to make way for the new administration whose plans, reforms and advisers are matters of the deepest interest to the whole country. The inaugural address of President Hayes on Monday, March 5th, was a frank and manly speech which has given the country a new inspiration of hope for the restoration of peace, harmony and an era of good government, when office-seeking, tax-eating politicians shall retire and their ring rule cease. The salient points of the address are herewith given:

THE INAUGURAL.

The permanent pacification of the country upon such principles and by such measures as will secure the complete protection of all its citizens in the free enjoyment of all their constitutional rights is now the one subject in our public affairs which all thoughtful and patriotic citizens regard as of supreme importance. Many of the calamitous effects of the tremendous revolution which has passed over the Southern States still remain. The immeasurable benefits which will surely follow sooner or later the hearty and generous acceptance of the legitimate results of that revolution have not yet been realized. Difficult and embarrassing questions meet us at the threshold of this subject. The people of those States are still impoverished, and the inestimable blessings of wise, honest and peaceful local self-government is not fully enjoyed. Whatever difference of opinion may exist as to the cause of this condition of things, the fact is clear that in the progress of events the time has come when such government is the imperative necessity required by all the varied interests, public and private, of those States. But it must not be forgotten that only a local government which recognizes and maintains inviolate the rights of all is a true self-government. With respect to the two distinct races, whose peculiar relations to each other have brought upon us the deplorable complications and perplexities which exist in those States, it must be a government which guards the interests of both races carefully and equally. It must be a government which submits loyally and heartily to the constitution and the laws of the nation and the laws of the States themselves, accepting and obeying faithfully the whole constitution as it is. Resting upon this sure and substantial foundation, the superstructure of beneficent local governments can be built up, and not otherwise. * * The evils which afflict the Southern States can only be removed or remedied by the united and harmonious efforts of both races, actuated by motives of mutual sympathy and regard, and while in duty bound and fully determined to protect the rights of all by every constitutional means at the disposal of my administration, I am sincerely anxious to use every legitimate influence in favor of honest and efficient local self-government as the true resource of those States for the promotion of the contentment and prosperity of their citizens. * * Universal suffrage should rest upon universal education. To this end liberal and permanent provision should be made for the support of free schools by the State governments, and if need be supplemented by legitimate aid from National authority. Let me assure my countrymen of the Southern States that it is my earnest desire to regard and promote their truest interests, the interests of the white and of the colored people, both and equally, and put forth my best efforts in behalf of a civil policy which will forever wipe out in political affairs the color line and the distinction between North and South, to the end that we may have not merely a united North or a united South, but a united country.

I ask the attention of the public to the paramount necessity of reform in our civil service—a reform not merely as to certain abuses and practices of so-called official patronage, which have come to have the sanction of usage in the several departments of our government, but a change in the system of appointment itself; a reform that shall be thorough, radical and complete—a return to the principles and practices of the founders of the government. * * The fact that both the great political parties of the country in declaring their principles prior to the election, gave a prominent place to the subject of reform of our civil service, recognizing and strongly urging its necessity in terms almost identical in their specific import with those I have here employed, must be accepted as a conclusive argument in behalf of these measures. It must be regarded as the expression of the united voice and will of the whole country upon this subject, and both political parties are virtually pledged to give it their unreserved support. The President of the United States, of necessity, owes his election to office to the suffrage, and the zealous labors of a political party, the members of which cherish with ardor, and regard as of essential importance the principles of their party organization; but he should strive to be always mindful of the fact that he serves his party best who serves the country best. In furtherance of the reform we seek and in other important respects a change of great importance, I recommend an amendment to the Constitution prescribing a term of six years for the Presidential office and forbidding a re-election. * *

I may be permitted to repeat here the statement made in my letter of acceptance, that in my judgment the feeling of uncertainty inseperable from an irredeemable paper currency, with its fluctuations of values, is one of the greatest obstacles to a return to prosperous times. The only safe paper currency is one which rests upon a coin basis, and is at all times and promptly convertible into coin. * *

The policy inaugurated by my honored predecessor President Grant, of submitting to arbitration grave questions in dispute between ourselves and foreign powers, points to a new and incomparably the best instrumentality for the preservation of peace, and will, as I believe, become a beneficent example of the course to be pursued in similar emergencies by other nations. * *

Looking for the guidance of that divine hand by which the destinies of nations and individuals are shaped, I call upon you, Senators, Representatives, Judges, fellow-citizens here and everywhere, to unite with me in an earnest effort to secure to our country the blessing not only of material prosperity, but of justice, peace and union—a union depending not upon the constraint of force, but upon the loving devotion of a free people; that all things may be so ordered and settled upon the best and surest foundations; that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us for all generations.

THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

Created for an extraordinary emergency it is not to be supposed that the Commission has settled any principles that will stand as constitutional doctrine. The strict partyism of its votes preclude any such idea and it must be regarded only as a crude device made necessary by an exigency that ought never again to occur. Before another general election our laws relating to it should be thoroughly revised. The work of the Commission is thus summed up:

Four cases were submitted to the tribunal, those of Florida Louisiana, Oregon and South Carolina. In the first of these the canvassing officers of the State declared certain persons to be chosen as Presidential Electors, but in so doing they threw out certain returns of votes, deciding them to have been illegally cast or returned. These persons received a certificate of their election from the Governor, and voted for President and Vice-President on the day appointed by law. The courts of the State decided that the canvassing officers had transcended their authority and that the Electors were not legally chosen, but this occurred after their votes had been cast. The Commission says that their votes must be counted, because there is no power to go back of the certificate of the Governor, based on the determination of the canvassing officers, to inquire into the appointment of Electors. This is the most important principle established, and is, we believe, in accordance with the spirit and intent of the Constitution. It was adhered to in the other cases, and was virtually decisive of them all.

In the Louisiana case, in addition to deciding that the certificate of the Governor, based on the determination of the returning officers, was conclusive, the Commission pronounced the Returning Board a legally constituted body, the law under which it acted constitutional, and its action not vitiated by the existence of a vacancy. This would not appear, according to the principles laid down by the tribunal itself to be within its authority to determine, or to be essential to the validity of the vote. In the Oregon case the Governor's certificate was decided to be of no effect, because it was not based upon the determination of the legal canvassing officer of the State. The result of the election duly certified by the canvassing officer was to be regarded rather than the certificate of the Governor which did not correspond with that result. In the South Carolina case there was no new question. The lack of a registration law and the presence of military forces in the State were something that could not be inquired into. The votes presented by the State as ascertained by its proper authorities must be counted.

THE EX-PRESIDENT.

The following from reviews of his administration will be read with interest:

In nothing was General Grant more distinguished as a military man than his unerring judgment in selecting the agents for carrying out his plans, and in nothing has he more frequently failed as a civil magistrate than in his appointments in office. But the cause is not far to seek. The difference was, that in one case he selected men for a special service which he thoroughly understood, and on account of qualities whose value he appreciated, while in the other he was seeking to fill places whose requirements he did not comprehend, calling for faculties and acquirements of which he knew little or nothing. There is no reason to suppose that he had any wish but to appoint competent men, and probably when the loudest outcry was made at his bad selections, he was at a loss to know why, and attributed it to some incomprehensible whim of the public. Many of his appointments have been good, and doubtless were made when their fitness had been fully impressed on his mind. A peculiarity that has been the ground of much censure has been his preference for personal friends and associates. But this was natural enough. Learned statesmen, like Sumner and Schurz, he could neither understand nor sympathize with. Neither his tastes nor his training placed him on their level and their conscious superiority in civil matters was not calculated to put him at ease in their company. He probably disliked them, and saw no reason why he should take them as counsellors. There were men whom he knew and understood, and in whom he felt that he could repose his confidence, and from such he preferred to select his advisers and supporters. He wished them to share the honors which it was in his power to distribute, and he felt that he had a right to exercise his personal choice. The higher responsibility which he owed to the nation and to the people who had imposed upon him a grave and important trust, as well as an honor and a reward, he did not fully comprehend. Moreover, he did not appreciate that subtle power which is known as public opinion. His experience had not been such as to lead him to study it, or teach him to gauge its demands or foresee its censure. This lack of appreciation of the demands of the country and want of sensitiveness to the action of the popular will explain most of General Grant's mistakes, and are sufficient to acquit him of all intentional or deliberate dereliction of duty. They explain why he often appointed men to positions for which they were poorly fitted and favored his own personal and political friends in the distribution of patronage. Together with his strong personal feeling they afford an explanation of his resolute adherence to men whom the public condemned and called upon him to discard.—Boston Globe.

The New York Evening Post has not been classed among the friends of President Grant, but it says of him: "The President has lived frankly in the general eye. His biographer will have no secret faults to expose, no underhand political schemes to describe. The President has taken the whole people into his confidence, even in respect to his most annoying blunders. We believe that when party passion has abated this confidence will be repaid with a generous popular regard."

A civil guest will no more talk all, than eat up all the feast.—Herbert.

adelphia, on that morning I started out; I made up my mind and told my wife I would not touch a drop of liquor under any consideration whatever, that I would come home at noon sober so I could take her and the children out. I didn't go the route I first intended, but before I knew where I was I was drinking, and I got intoxicated before 12 o'clock. I went home in that condition, I had a mouthful of dinner, laid myself down on the lounge for three hours, I got up and started out again to see a relative; I talked with him for two or three hours and started to go to my home, but I was turned in another direction, I was turned up toward the center of the city. I didn't know what turned me at that time; didn't know what I was going up town for, and the first thing I knew I was drinking again. I got into a saloon down at Seventh and Arch streets, in Philadelphia, and met a couple of friends there and took three drinks with them inside of fifteen minutes at least, making about NINE DRINKS I HAD IN THAT HOUR AND A HALF.

I started from there to go home, and when I was three-quarters of a mile away from where the meetings were being held a voice whispered within me, 'Go out to the Moody meeting." I said it was no use of going there, for they would be coming out; it was 9 o'clock at that time. I walked to the street where I should have turned down home. When I got to the corner a voice told me to go out to the young men's meeting. I went to go home but I was unable to do so. I got to the corner of the street where I ought to turn off to my home, and there I had another struggle, but thanks be to God, his power was the mightiest, and led me to the young mens' meeting. The meeting was filled and I was standing in a crowd in the center. The chairman of the meeting asked was there any soul that desired to be saved, would they rise? I heard then the voice telling me it was my last call. It was my last chance, and drunk and all as I was I went to the front. Two parties came and sat down on each side of me. They were praying all the time for some men that had risen. They got hold of me and got talking to me. The leader got up and asked again for any one who desired to be saved to rise. I attempted to rise, but

THESE TWO MEN PULLED ME DOWN, and when he got up and extended the invitation again, they pulled me down again. I felt that if I did not get up I would not receive the blessing, and so I did get up when they were off their guard. I again asked the Lord God to remove the cursed appetite for drink. I had been praying to him from selfish motives only to take the appetite for drink away from me, but not that he would pardon me of my sins, and now I wanted to give myself, body, soul, appetite and all, to him, that he might receive me. So after the meeting was over they got around me, a number of the ministers and workers. It was after 10 o'clock, and they said it would be best for me to go home, and if I would pledge myself to pray for one hour they would pray each and every one in his own home for me. But, thank God, there was a brother there, one who spoke to you a few short weeks ago and told my story, and he said: "You know not what you are doing; I have been there; strike the iron while it is hot." He asked me if I would get down there and pray, and I did so with them. While they were praying I cried unto the Lord. He heard and answered me and sobered me up before I got off my knees.

THANKS BE TO GOD, HE TOOK THE APPETITE AWAY

then. I expected that the next morning I would be laid on a bed of sickness from this continued course of drink, for you might say I was drinking every day for three long years. I was so much under the power of it that three or four days of the week I would have to drink from thirty to forty drinks of whisky. So you may imagine how low I got. But thanks be to God, no man can get so low but what Jesus can reach him. He has taken that appetite away from me. I know it as surely as I know that I am standing here. Old things have passed away and all things have become as new. My dear friends, I have never been bothered about my appetite since. As often as I have addressed the Lord he has helped me out of my trials and troubles. He has fed me and clothed me and kept me and my family when I did not have a cent. I have gone from my home and left my family in the hands of Jesus, and he has kept them. I can point out eighty men that were as low as I was—some of them lower. Oh, may God bless you here this morning. Give yourselves to him and he will remove your appetites from you as he has mine from me.

The Gospel in Boston.

From a private letter we are permitted to publish the following interesting facts in relation to the great work now going on in Boston:

Mr. Moody's sermons I suppose are much the same as he preached in Chicago. The meetings are largely attended, and often crowded. Large numbers of these people are from the country, and many come a long distance. I do not mean to imply that Boston and vicinity are not interested in the meetings, for I believe nearly all of our evangelical churches and people are in hearty sympathy with Mr. Moody. The inquiry meetings are well attended and the signs are said to be very encouraging. There are doubtless many conversions. The most important and interesting features showing the progress of the glorious revival cannot be known.

The Gospel light is blazing so brightly in Boston this winter through Mr. Moody and Rev. Joseph Cook, that the preachers of darkness are obliged to be very busy, in order to convince men that black is white and that white is black.

Mr. Cook is doing a grand work through his Monday noon lectures in Tremont Temple. A much larger building than that great hall would be needed to fully accommodate the crowds who come every Monday to hear these wonderful lectures. The audiences are said to be the finest in thought and scholarship ever gathered continuously in Boston. Many hear from the lips of Mr. Cook the deepest truths of Christianity and the great foundation principles of life proclaimed in the most original and masterful manner, who could not be persuaded to enter a church where such truths are uttered, or even Mr. Moody's Tabernacle. Many who would hardly think Mr. Moody worth noticing are aroused to criticise and examine this unusual "preacher of righteousness," who has not only faith in the Bible as the word of God, but ability and learning enough to enable him to prove that the laws of Nature and the revelations of science are in full sympathy with the revelation of God in his written word. And to show from these known laws without appealing to the Bible, the necessity of the atonement, the doctrine of future rewards and punishments, etc. Taking these worshipers of Nature upon their own ground, he proves that in order to be consistent with themselves and truly scientific they must not be afraid of the inevitable results of the laws which they themselves confess to be "without variableness neither shadow of turning." If skeptics are not converted through Mr. Cook he will have done a great work in the strengthening of Christians. His power, as with all great speakers of truth, lies not only in his words, but in his intense personal earnestness, making evident to all who hear that the truths he utters have entered deeply into his own soul. Mr. Cook has preached once for Mr. Moody, and is to preach every Monday evening in the Tabernacle for four weeks.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

TRUE MASONIC CHART; OR, HIEROGLYPHIC MONITOR.
BY JEREMY L. CROSS, Grand Lecturer.

With a Memoir and Portrait of the Author, Containing all the Emblems explained in the Degrees of entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason. Designed and arranged agreeably to the Lectures.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have prononnced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8-page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M.E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1876 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

History of The Abduction and Murder Cap't. Wm. Morgan.

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS, in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

Publishers Department.

A general opinion that better times for money are coming prevails. The Cynosure cash book for the first ten days of March this year gives a much more encouraging report than the same ten days last year. This shows that some friends are hard at work. We have assurances from others that they will do their part. One friend writes: "I have tried and tried and tried, and I WILL YET TRY MORE." Last year was a hard one on the Cynosure, cash receipts, and occasionally a friend has said, Cut down the size of the paper; give your readers only eight, ten, or twelve pages, instead of sixteen. Others say, If the Cynosure can keep afloat through the present stringency, we think she will swing nicely soon. This we believe is true. The prospect is encouraging for a much better year than the last one.

We desire, in price as well as in all other respects, to make the Cynosure, the paper for the masses, and for this reason we intend to keep our low club rates all through this year.

Clubs of ten, old or new subscriptions, the money to be sent at one time, $15.

In those localities where the Spring and Summer are not good times for canvassing, we hope our friends will be scattering tracts, Cynosures, encouraging debates and discussions preparing for a harvest of new subscriptions in the fall.

The ignorance which prevails concerning the evils of secret societies is great and alarming. Conscientious people, old and young, in high and low positions, educated and ignorant, do not understand the evils of secret societies, and look upon those who oppose them as enemies of the public good. Even as Ahab looked upon Elijah as an enemy.

Let us patiently, lovingly, and wisely educate our neighbors by our example and by other means. Let us seek to build up the kingdom of Christ as we tear down pernicious counterfeits of it.

W. K. Morley, Brush Creek, Iowa, sends a club of twelve for a year, and writes: "I intend to keep trying."

Samuel A. Morse, Worcester, Mass., was credited last week, but it should have been Samuel Pratt. Jason C. Bartholomew and Abel T. Curtis together have secured a club of nine subscriptions for a year and one for six months. Mr. Bartholomew, who will be seventy-one years of age the tenth of next May, writes: "Bro. Curtis, of Shueyville, helped get up this club. * * We will try for another club. We are determined to fight this battle in Church or State as long as we live."

P. Nicklas, Chambersburg, Pa., sends a club of ten for a year, and two for six months each.

Who will send in clubs of five or ten next week?

Cyrus Clingman, Danville, O., writes: "I will try and raise a club for the Cynosure." Earnest words are received from others. God has given us a great work.

'And blessed, thrice blessed the diligent few Who finish the labor He's given them to do."

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK,

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. Or

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

TIN ROOFS

our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

Notices.

THE TENTH NATIONAL CONVENTION of the National Christian Association will be held this year in Dayton, Ohio. The time will be announced.

IMPORTANT, that every reader of the Cynosure should read the Publishers' Department. What can be done before spring's busy season leaves little time for reform work? Work now for subscribers. Sow the seed with willing zeal, and in due time ye shall reap if ye faint not.

IOWA AND SECRETISM.—The Iowa State Convention, opposed to secret societies, will meet at Oskaloosa April 24. This place is a stronghold of Masonry, and the writer hopes the churches and societies will be fully represented, and that everybody will come who can come. Let not the enemy laugh at our insignificant numbers. It is desired that all who intend coming will send in their names in due time, so that arrangements can be made for entertainment. Address

R. A. MCAYEAL,
Oskaloosa, Iowa.

REV. JAMES L. ANDRUSS, late of Jamestown, N. Y., now of Oberlin, O., will respond to calls to lecture.

REFORMERS OF MICHIGAN, ATTENTION!

There is to be a quarterly meeting of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies to be held in Howell, Livingston county, April 24th and 25th, commencing at 2 P. M. Tuesday, the 24th. All reformers are expected to be in attendance. Preparations are being made to accommodate all with a home who are from a distance. By order of COMMITTEE.

CALIFORNIA—ANNUAL MEETING.

An annual meeting of the committee and friends of the anti-secrecy cause in California will be held, Providence permitting, in Sacramento, commencing Tuesday, April 10th, at 1 P. M., at Central Hall, south side of K street. As quite a number of the friends are determined, by the grace of God, to engage a lecturer this year, and liberally subscribe to the lecture fund, and as we are now in correspondence with parties east, and may make the engagements by that time, it is important that as many of the friends, and especially of the committee, as can possibly come, be present to help make the needed arrangements, &c. Those who cannot come, please write to the friends assembled there. Address the same to Rev. A. Musselman, Sacramento, Cal. By order of the Chairman.

PHIL. BECK, Secretary.

Topics of the Time.

"He serves his party best who serves his country best," and "No change except for cause, and no appointment except for merit," are brief, comprehensive rules that have a wonderful effect on the crowd of office-seekers in Washington. At one of the earliest cabinet meetings Evarts and Schurz were appointed a committee to draft rules governing appointments, with the understanding that one rule should provide that the recommendations of members of Congress shall not be considered; the benefit of their judgment may be used if necessary, and this seems to be the extent of their responsibility. Postmaster General Key, who was a rebel officer, seems thoroughly committed to the President's policy, and has taken his nearest advisers from the Republican ranks. The other day a South Carolina gentleman came in with strong recommendations and a stronger speech for an important post office, now held by a colored man. The Secretary heard him patiently, found the office administered efficiently, and told the applicant that only United States troops or a direct order from the President could turn him out. Many appointments, especially in the foreign department, will be delayed until the Southern question is settled, and that more care may be taken in selecting capable men.

The Senate confirmed three appointments last week which are noticeable both for their importance and the men chosen. They were Frederick W. Seward to be Assistant Secretary of State; J. N. Tyner, First Assistant P. M. General, and Frederick Douglass, U. S. Marshall of the District of Columbia. The first named held the same position under his illustrious father, and was severely wounded when the assassin Surratt attempted his life as part of the plot to which Lincoln was a victim. He inherits greatly the abilities and integrity of his sire. Tyner was promoted from the office to which he now returns when P. M. General Jewell was so unexpectedly deposed last summer by President Grant. Mr. Douglass will have a very important post, and President Hayes held to his appointment against great opposition from members of the Senate. This recognition of the abilities of Mr. Douglass and of the race of which he is the foremost representative indicates the policy of the new administration.

President Hayes' Southern policy is not yet clearly defined. It is said that the United States troops now guarding Governor Chamberlain in Columbia, and Governor Packard in New Orleans, will be withdrawn to their barracks, and for the present there will be complete non-intervention and non-recognition of either of the governments in these capitals. As the Senate has decided to lay over this question until next winter or an extra session of Congress, the administration will be unhindered in its measures of reform. It is not understood, however, that these measures will less faithfully protect the freedmen and white Republicans at the South if they show little respect for party names.

Between "Prof." A. S. Bell, of Boston, and "Prof." Elisha Gray, of Chicago, there seems to be a dispute about the discovery of the telephone, an instrument for transmitting sounds by telegraph. We believe the latter has by right the honor, but both are equally skillful in bringing the wonderful power of the telegraph before the public. Mr. Gray calls together a Chicago audience and allows them to converse with persons in Milwaukee and listen to music played in that city, and the other evening he dismissed them to the sweetly audible strains of "Home, Sweet Home," coming all the way by wire from Detroit. It is a special wonder that the tones of the human voice are so accurately transmitted as to be plainly recognized by acquaintances. What facilities we may yet have for correspondence with friends who dare conjecture!

—A New York dentist, in whose chair a lad died a few days since, under anæsthetics, is proved to have been drunk. The companion of the deceased noticed the doctor's intoxication and he warned his friend not to trust him. Who shall write the ruin rum has wrought? A woman was arrested in the same city after a week's spree. When she became sober, she said that her little girl of six was at home uncared for. The poor little thing was found nearly dead. No food, not even water, had passed its lips, but its left hand had been sucked out of shape during the process of starvation. All that was left of the child was a gibbering idiot.—Ex.

MASONRY — HOW LITTLE UNDERSTOOD!

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

We often hear the declaration that the religion of Masonry is deistical. That it is a system of worship of the true God, with the name of Christ omitted and himself as a Mediator ignored. That it is a system which professes to carry men to heaven without the intervention of Christ, without the means of Divine grace, and so on and so forth. Now nothing is further from a clear understanding of Masonic lodge religion than this, and the fact of the prevalence of these ideas only proves what a feeble expose of the true esotery of the Masonic systems are the rituals of Morgan, Bernard, Allyn, Richardson, Duncan, Ronayne and others. These men have given a true exposition of the ceremonies as they actually occur in the lodge, but the ritual does not lay bare the blasphemy of these ceremonies, nor dare it do so. How frequently have we seen writers in the Cynosure and other papers, quote the term "Acacian," and the exact words of its definition, as given by Mackey in his Lexicon of Freemasonry, page 16, without catching the true significance of his language and ideas. The following is the quotation alluded to:

"Acacian—A term derived from akakia, 'innocence,' and signifying a Mason, who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, IS FREE FROM SIN. First used, I believe, by Hutchinson."

Now, I ask, what is the true meaning of these words? What makes the Mason free from sin by living conformably to the Masonic obligations and the precepts therein inculcated? Manifestly because those obligations are the law of the God of Masonry and obedience to God's law of course carries with it freedom from sin, but it may be asked, Who is the God of Masonry that reveals to the Mason this law? The ceremonies show that the God by whom he is invested with this knowledge is the three principal officers who constitute and rule the lodge and none other! For evidence whereof by Masonic authority consult my pamphlets entitled, "Every Freemason a Blasphemer," and "How to Defeat Masonic Scoundrelism within the Courthouse," wherein you will find ample proof of this fact. But to continue upon the religion of Masonry, I quote from

"Freemasonry does not profess to interfere with the religious opinions of its members. It asks only for a declaration of that simple and universal faith in which men of all nations and all sects agree—the belief in God and in his superintending providence. Beyond this it does not venture, but leaves the minds of its disciples on other and sectarian points, perfectly untrammeled. This is the only religious qualification required of a candidate, but this is most strictly demanded. The religion then of Masonry is pure theism, on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions; but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry."

This paragraph is frequently quoted by Anti-masonic writers without being understood by them. The reason Masonry requires a belief in God and in his superintending providence as a prerequisite qualification on the part of her initiates for admission into the order, is because the theory of her lodge government is that of a Godhead wielding and directing the affairs and destinies of her membership; though in that Godhead, in so far as the worship, law and ceremonies of the lodge are concerned she recognizes no Over-ruling or Divine Power save that of the triumvirate of officers who constitute and rule the lodge as heretofore stated. And, in respect to her initiates, composed as they are of Moslems, pagans, Jews, professed Christians, deists and the odds and ends of every religion, true and false, in the world, it is not material to her, whether the God professed by them be the true or a false God. Any God at all will answer her purposes equally well. Her universal religion, which is comprised within the terms of her obligations, tolerates and recognizes all the Gods of equal standing with each other, she considering that whatever kind of God her initiates may individually recognize, the conscience of one is as firmly bound as that of another; for, in so far as the government, objects and designs of her institution are concerned her triumvirate of officers as a Godhead, replaces the individual or private Gods of all her initiates, be they of whatever character they may, on entrance into the lodge, such Gods being all tiled out and left at the threshold or door of the lodge. The Masonic Godhead rules over the membership in love and fear in all that concerns Masonry, in the same manner and to the same extent, as their individual or private Gods may, or are presumed to do, in all other affairs incident to life. But recurring to the language of Dr. Mackey we will limitedly investigate what he declares the religion of Masonry to be. He says in direct and positive terms that it is pure theism.

Now to get at the exact import of this word, let us turn to Webster. We find it thus defined by him: "The belief or acknowledgment of the existence of a God, as opposed to atheism. Theism differs from deism; for, although deism implies a belief in the existence of a God, yet it signifies, in modern usage, a denial of revelation, which theism does not."

So by Dr. Mackey's information we learn, that although the word deism which implies "a belief in the existence of a God" and which would seem to fill the measure of Masonry's requirements, yet it does not define the religion of the institution, but that theism does; and by Webster we learn that the word theism, in taking cognizance of a God, includes within its meaning what the word deism excludes and denies, to wit: "A revelation from God." So by uniting Mackey and Webster we are led to conclude that the religion of Masonry embraces within itself a recognition of a God and his revelation. Now as all the revelations of a God in the possession of mankind in the outer world, are rigorously excluded from the lodge, it follows that the God of the lodge must of necessity make a revelation for himself, and this he does when he administers the obligations of the institution to the candidate at the altar. The obligations of the institution, then, are the revelations of the God of Masonry to his initiates. Is this not evident? It must be so, for the revelations of a God embody his will, law and commands. And there is no law in Masonry but what is publicly proclaimed and acknowledged save the obligations of the institution which as a law are alone revealed at the altar. And how are these obligations revealed? There can be but one answer and that is, upon the Holy Bible. And why upon the Holy Bible? Simply and for no other nor better reason than that it is the symbol of these obligations! That this is so, we quote from Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, page 60, as follows: "The Bible is used among Masons as the SYMBOL OF THE WILL OF GOD, however it may be expressed." A symbol, mind you, and nothing more, and expressed however it may be.

MASONRY SUPERHUMAN.

BY REV. J. B. SLIGHT.

It is beyond the power of man, or human skill, to invent an institution that all men can participate in without interference with some of their views of religion and political economy. Yet Masonry claims to be an institution of that kind, and if that claim be just, then with propriety may they sing "Masonry Divine." There are hundreds of religious creeds in the world, and a vast number of national politics among the many kingdoms, empires, dominions and nations, all varying; some as widely differing as the sunbeams at noonday and the darkness of midnight. Yet Masonry proposes to initiate its candidates into its sublime mysteries, without any conflict with religion or politics, no matter what their religious or political principles may be. Hence an Arab with the wild barbarous nature, peculiar to his race, is just fitted for the institution, and it is fitted to him. The Hindoo with pagan mythology has just the religion suited to the lodge, and the lodge is suitable for his religion. The Ethiopian may find a genial home among the brotherhood, with all the Mohammedan religion he can bring in with him. The Jew, filled with Judaism, and hatred against Christ, has the promise that nothing shall be introduced in the lodge that will interfere with his religion. The American Christian knocks for admittance and the assurance is given him that the obligation he is to take shall not affect his religious nor his political principles; yet he is sworn to confide more in a hater of Jesus than in a Christian brother or even his own wife. He is required to "Promise and swear that I will always hail, and ever conceal and never reveal, any part or parts, art or arts, point or points of the sacred arts and mysteries of Ancient Freemasonry, which I have received or may hereafter be instructed in, to any person or persons in the known world, except it be to a true and lawful brother Mason." A brother Mason whether pagan, Mohammedan or Jew, must be his confidential friend, in preference to all others in the known world; no interference, however, with his religion. And when he reaches the seventh degree, of this, so-called, divine temple, he is sworn to "Aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty; and espouse his cause, so far as to extricate him from the same, if in my power, whether he be right or wrong." This is an oath, binding that Christian to espouse the cause of one guilty of high crime; and yet the assurance is given that nothing shall conflict with his religion. An institution that can harmonize in one common brotherhood all shades and degrees of character and principles as Masonry professes to do must be superhuman, for nothing short of divine wisdom and power can so subdue the passions of men as to bring them into a state of true unity and brotherly love. But is it true that all who enter the lodge find nothing there to interfere with their religion? Perhaps it may suit the pagan quite well, for many of the forms and silly, low, contemptible ceremonies are better adapted to heathen mythology than to civilization and human decency. The Jew may in some particulars be pretty well suited, especially when Christ is set at naught. But how can the Christian endure the thought of "Counting the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing?"

The Christian man who attempts to enter the lodge with the assurance given him that there shall be nothing there to affect his religion, is insulted, deceived and swindled; therefore, Masonry is a lie and a cheat.

OUGHT WE TO SECEDE?

E. W. WHEELER.

MR. EDITOR:—As expected, my article of January 25th has called forth a reply which opens the way for the thought had in mind when I wrote. Without attempting a formal answer I will state a few facts upon which I base the idea of "vantage ground" upon which our objector builds so many assumptions.

I write in the interest of no sect; for I hold that there is not one that can be called "the church," neither strictly speaking a church, but each may be considered a sort of vestibule to the one church of Christ, of which it is said, "Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular." And "that there should be no schism in the body, but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." 1 Cor. 12: 28, and the 25th and 26th verses.

It may be assumed from this position that some of the partition walls should be removed, or that the whole building should be open to the center, but this by no means invalidates the argument; for truth never contradicts itself. It may shake the foundation of human organizations and bring the towering domes of sectarian pride to the dust, but the church of Christ will still stand, based upon "the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Eph. 2: 20.

But we leave this point to be resumed hereafter, if the Lord will, and now introduce your readers to upon the "vantage ground" of M. E. Methodism in which the writer was engaged a few months since while attending a ministerial association of St. Lawrence District, W. N. Y. Conference, held at Canton, St. Lawrence county, N. Y.

Before this the enemy had tried to dislodge him; and failing in this to cripple him; and, strangely, some of his friends advised him to leave, saying, "It is no place to war a good warfare." But, not liking to turn his back to the foe, nor caring to weaken his strength by flight, he still holds his position, expecting that there are more battles to follow and greater victories to be won.

We are assembled in the M. E. church, a congregation of ministers and people, some of whom are Masons, with at least one Anti-mason. The chairman and secretary are Masons, while near by sits a minister who is a Royal Arch Mason. At length the writer is called upon to read his essay upon the theme assigned, viz., "Our Rule on Diversions." It reads: "The taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." (See General Rules Methodist Discipline.) Among other things he claimed that this rule forbade Masonry, and more especially because Masonry shuts the name of the Lord Jesus from the lodge, even cutting that sacred name from the Scriptures which it profanely uses at its altars. He gave the Bible view of the mystic order, Ez. viii., and testified that in this order we have a striking illustration of modern Freemasonry. He declared that if Masonry is not only bad but very bad, then there can be no such thing as bad; falsehood and even murder cease to be crimes; conscience becomes a fiction of the brain no longer to be heeded, and moral principle is only the result of a morbid fancy.

The reading was followed by remarks, all in harmony with the essay, but the question of Masonry was untouched, until at length a brother arose desiring to know something about this part of the essay also. He had attended a Masonic funeral not long before and had noticed that the name of the Lord Jesus was not used in the service. "Now," said he, "why strain at a gnat and swallow a camel?" This brought the Royal Arch Mason to his feet, who said that the writer had no right to introduce that question in the essay, and the chairman endorsed him. "But," continued he, "I can relieve the brother's mind. Masons do recognize the Lord Jesus."

As he took his seat I arose, but the chairman declared all further discussion out of order. But on appealing to the Association I was voted a hearing. Stepping forward and holding Sickel's Monitor in my hand I said, "I know what I am talking about. I suppose Bro. W. [the Royal Arch Mason] does. He ought to." Then holding the book open before them all I continued: "I hold in my hand Sickel's Monitor, an open book which all may read. In this book is the charge given at the opening of the Royal Arch degree of Masonry. It is taken from 2 Thess. 3: 6–16. In this lesson the name of the Lord Jesus Christ occurs twice, but in the charge it is left out in each case. Now let Bro. T. [the chairman] take this book and another brother the Bible and let them read and compare and see whether I state the truth or not." This was declined, and I continued: "As to the shutting of the name of the Lord Jesus out of the lodge, I once thought this a 'Wesleyan humbug' until a Masonic paper fell into my hands in which the question was asked by a correspondent: 'Is it lawful to use the name of Jesus Christ in the lodge in prayer?' The answer was given by one high in authority, the name is forgotten, but this is the answer: 'I had supposed this question settled long ago. It is well known that Masonry admits the Christian, the Jew and the Gentile, but no brother is allowed to introduce anything sectarian or anything that will wound the feelings of another. To use the name of Jesus Christ in the lodge even in prayer, is sectarian, and if a Jew were present it would wound his feelings. Therefore, to use the name of Jesus Christ in the lodge is Anti-masonic.'" I added, "Further, I could quickly open the lodge here and show the ridiculous position of these brethren who are Masons, but I have respect for their feelings and will not unless pressed to it. Neither do I care to discuss this question at length, but if it is desired, can do so at any length needful."

To these remarks there was no reply, further than an apology from "the brother of high degree" for having spoken at all in defense of Masonry. He lost his "jewel," but more than that, and what is of real value to all, he lost the confidence of some very worthy men. I know whereof I affirm and write it with regret.

The immediate results were very apparent, as a few illustrations will show. Just after the scene a brother standing near me asked: "Is Bro. T. a Mason?" I answered, "he is." "Well," said he, "he'll get no more of my support." Again, thinking it possible that Bro. W. who claimed that Masons did recognize the name of Jesus Christ, was not until then aware that this name was left out of the Scripture noticed, I suggested this thought to the brother, when, under evident excitement he said, "Yes, he did know it." Again, the brother with whom I was stopping who until now seemed quite indifferent upon the question on meeting me directly after the meeting closed said, "It is awful," referring no doubt to the spirit manifested by the Mason brethren and the evident prevarication of a brother of "high degree." The family with which I was stopping were very kind to me all through, but on leaving the brother gave to me a very substantial token of further kindness in a five dollar bill.

Masonic Oaths not Binding.

REV. A. D. FREEMAN.

Because untrue in every particular and savagely impious. The first statement in the Entered Apprentice's oath, is not true, as follows: "Of my own free will and accord," which refers to and is based on the following question put to the candidate in the preparation room: "Do you sincerely declare upon your honor, before these gentlemen, unbiased by friends, uninfluenced by unworthy motives, etc., you freely offer yourself a candidate, etc." Now these two statements can in no case be true. "Unbiased by friends," can not be true; for some one or more persons who are regarded as friends, in whom confidence is reposed, must in some way have commended the order or no person would give his money and time to it. Much of this commendation may be and is done by the public displays of regalia and gaudy trappings at their great gatherings at festivals and other convocations. The kind that can be caught by these flashy displays are as essential to the order as any. Then it is said to be "benevolent," "religious," "secures friends," "helps among strangers," "benefit every where." These, whether given publicly or privately, are the means employed to bias men in its favor. So that it cannot be true that he is "unbiased." He therefore starts on his journey through or in the order with a false oath and travels on this line as far as he goes.

Then second, he swears that the lodge is "dedicated to God." This cannot be true because based on falsehood, cruelty and blasphemy: Its oaths are false, penalties savage cruelty, and prayer ("so help me, God, etc.,") blasphemous.

Then third he swears that the lodge is "Held forth to the holy order of St. John," making him the head and patron of the order, and so dating back the institution near nineteen hundred years, whereas it is a little short, at this writing, of one hundred and sixty years old, having first existed in June, 1717. So his oath is opposed to the fact and therefore false.

And now comes, fourthly, the oath of secrecy: "I will always hail, forever conceal, and never reveal," etc., which is directly in opposition to him who is "the WAY, the TRUTH, the LIFE;" who says, "Whatsoever is spoken in the ear in the closet shall be revealed upon the housetop;" and when uttering it (being omniscient), his eye swept through all coming time and detected every thought and word spoken. They each and all swear that they will "forever conceal and never reveal," and so swear against Christ's testimony and prophecy, for both are in his statement. Hence they swear that his testimony is untrue and his prophecy shall fail.

Then the penalty: "No less than to have my throat cut across and tongue torn out by the roots." Then also the impudent and blasphemous prayer, "So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same." Due performance of what? Why these false and profane oaths and imprecated savage and worse than savage penalties. Can an obligation made up of false and profane oaths, backed by such infernal penalties, to the support of which God's aid is blasphemously invoked, be binding? No! all truth says "NO." The Spirit of truth says "NO!" Universal common sense and universal truth-telling conscience say "NO!"

It seems to me that the foregoing facts and considerations should break every fetter and chain that binds the conscience of every candid mind which desires to be free from the bonds of secretism; for it is plain that the oath and penalty above considered are directly opposed to God and the Christian religion.

Civil Service Reform.

Aside from the Southern question the Civil Service Reform marked out by President Hayes will be by far the greatest battle he must fight, if indeed it prove not to be the most severe. An article in Blackwood's Magazine by an English gentleman for some time resident in this country is very suggestive on this point in the following extracts:

Withal, though its provisions have been perverted and violated, the Constitution is still spoken of with respect and apparent veneration. In this, perhaps, is an element of safety. If it be still alive, the American Constitution has shown itself of wonderful vitality. It is hard to believe that any other could have survived the perversions, mutilations and infringements to which it has been subjected. Let any one fancy the political and social condition of Great Britain if, upon every change of government, every civil employe, from the highest officers of state to the last exciseman, were taxed to provide a fund for the expenses of the party, and then were made to fight the political battle of their leaders under penalty of losing their subsistence. Add to this the questionable blessings of universal suffrage, throw in some twenty per cent. of negro and foreign votes, and then imagine how long it would be before the utter annihilation of every beneficent provision which has been introduced into the British Constitution from the time of Stephen Langton and John Lackland to the days of Victoria. Looking to the operation of the American Constitution before its spirit became so exceedingly perverted, it seems, nevertheless that a few vigorous measures of reform might do much toward re-establishing it in its purity. The first glaring evil to be eradicated is confessedly the vicious system of "rotation in office." As it is the most obnoxious and most prominent, so it may be the most difficult to be got rid of. The President who does it will need the support of the great body of the nation and to be able to thrust the professional politicians of the American type aside. Much, however, will depend upon his personal character, and especially upon his persistence in carrying his intentions into effect. Gen. Grant could have readily exercised sufficient influence, had he been so inclined, on his first accession to the Presidency. Indeed, something was heard of his intention to reform the civil service; but if he ever commenced, he did not, as in his military operations, "keep pegging away," and nothing came of it. Indeed, it is said that he now believes it to be impracticable. It may prove to be so, if future presidents surround themselves with similar characters to those who have infested the White House for the last few years.

Nevertheless it is the first thing to be done. The necessity is known and felt. Hardly a respectable man in the nation approves of the system. Even those most greedy in pursuit of place denounce it, as suffering drunkards do the evil of intoxication. In theory it is easy to commence the reform. There is no necessity for a complicated scheme of new organization — no absolute need of competitive examinations. Nothing is at first required but to draw the line in each department, distinguishing the offices involving purely administrative duties from those whose incumbents must be associated with matters of government policy. Let it be established that the holders of the former retain their situations during efficiency. Disfranchise each one of such officials, and make it penal for them to contribute money or active assistance to forward political purposes of any party whatever, and the first great measure of reform is accomplished.

The public patronage being thus in great part disposed of, the hordes of small venal politicians must disappear. There will be nothing to support them. The contributions of the office-holders to the political purse being cut off, will extinguish a source of corruption on the one side. The opposition having but small chance of reimbursing themselves from the spoils of office, should they succeed to power, will not find it profitable to subscribe to another. Other reforms will readily follow. A change in the method of electing the President; a provision for a legal solution in case of a disputed contest involving such a dangerous deadlock as now exists; a provision for the immediate responsibility of cabinet ministers to Congress, and especially the elevation of the Presidential office above that of a mere party paymaster, all suggest themselves as of the highest importance. It would be interesting, perhaps, to consider the manner in which they should be introduced; but at present it is useless. We must all await the great initiative measure of reform in American government, the withdrawal of the enormous quadrennial bid for votes in the Presidential elections. On every occasion of considering the magnitude of this openly offered bribe, surprise that its injurious effects have hitherto been kept within any limits whatever is intensified into amazement.

Government appointments, carrying salaries in the aggregate value of many millions of dollars annually, have in greater or less degree been put up every four years for half a century, to be scrambled after by needy partisans and idlers. For the last thirty years the whole amount has been periodically offered in the market. The effect has been continually to debase the national character; to produce numberless instances of detected disgraceful frauds of immense magnitude on national, state and municipal treasuries, and probably many more which have never been exposed; to embitter private animosities; to array one section of the country against the other; to incite and continue the most stupendous civil war known to history; to subjugate and inflict years of misery on the fairest portion of the land, and now has brought about such a condition of affairs that it is yet questionable whether the deadly struggle is not to be renewed in greater intensity than before.

A writer in the Lutherische Herald relates the experience of a Lutheran pastor in Charleston, South Carolina, with the Odd fellows. Finding the gathering of an English congregation in that city slow work, he was advised to connect himself with that secret order, and assured that this step would insure his success. Not being acquainted with the fraternity and supposing that this would be an easy method to accomplish his end, he applied for membership, was received, and in due time was elected chaplain. He began a prayer in the name of Jesus, but was stopped at the very first sentence and informed that the lodge does not pray in Jesus' name. In answer to his question on the subject, he was told that such prayers could not be tolerated, upon which he stated that, under such circumstances he could not pray at all, took his hat and departed. If only all professing Christians had sufficient faith and charity to come out from among those who want to pray in some other name than that of our only Mediator!—Lutheran Standard.

Reform News.

Anniversary of Iowa State Christian Association.

To the Christian Churches of Iowa and Christians and Reformers Everywhere.

Brethren and Friends:—On the last Tuesday of April next at seven P. M. the Christian Association of Iowa will meet in regular annual convention at Oskaloosa, Iowa, to remain in session until Thursday evening.

This Association has been organized to combat various growing evils — evils dangerous alike to church and state. It aims its power especially at secretism, intemperance and the violation of Christian institutions. To discuss the grave issues connected with these questions and to secure a more thorough organization of earnest men and women in their efforts to oppose and overthrow these monster evils is the object of the coming convention. It is at once seen that interests the most weighty and vital are involved.

Secretism, especially oath-bound, by its silly, barbarous rites, false religion, clannishness and favoritism is sapping piety and vitality from the churches, and so corrupting the body politic as to hinder effectual reform and in many instances thwart justice.

Intemperance is not only striking down the young men of our land, ruining homes and poisoning society in a general way, as it has been doing for generations, but in order to more effectually carry on its work of ruin and death, it has organized and is led by men of position and backed by immense sums of money. The Personal Liberty League of Iowa is such an organization and is sustained by a special fund of $250,000 in its determined and powerful efforts to break down our temperance law and abrogate the Sabbath.

This is a movement in which various Christian denominations are engaged, and in which Christians of every name, and all reformers should heartily join. Let each auxiliary society, church and community send at least three delegates. Also every college and academy should especially be represented. Let every one interested in this reform be present.

Able speakers from our own and other States will address the convention. A committee will provide for the accommodation of delegates.

Michigan Reform Work.

Our State Lecturer, D. P. Rathbun, arrived February 20th, and the next day we started on our mission work, leaving Fenton for the Free Methodist church north-east of Fenton some seven miles, where we were to have our first lecture.

Here we expected a full house, as the Free Methodists have quite a class; but were disappointed as far as they were concerned. Their pastor went about three miles from there and held meeting that evening and all his church followed him, except our old and tried friend, Mr. Hoit, through whose influence the church building was secured for us to speak in, and a Mrs. Gundry. But Mrs. Gundry felt terribly because we were going to have the church; seemed to think we were going to desecrate their house by having an anti-secret lecture there; said their house was not built for lectures but to worship in, free from Masonry, and that B. T. Roberts, their General Agent, instructed them to that effect, and that if Mr. Rathbun was what he ought to be he would go back to his preaching again and not be around making disturbances. Can this be Free Methodism? Bro. Hoit says if it is he shall go bask to his old church, the Wesleyans, who are true to their profession. But despite all opposition we did dedicate this Free Methodist church by giving a lecture against Masonry in it, having some twenty or more to listen, and I hope good was done in this vicinity.

Thursday evening we spoke in the Baptist church of Mundy. Here is where Elder J. L. Barlow is stationed as pastor. Here we had a full house. Bro. Barlow opened the meeting and read his last poem, "The Masonic Minister's Lament," after which D. P. Rathbun gave his lecture on the Religion of Masonry, closing by giving a brief sketch of his life since leaving the order and his experience in exposing Masonry, which worked up the feelings of the audience very much, all apparently sympathizing with the speaker. No lecturer has been better received here. all wanting him to come again.

From Mundy we went to Burton, giving two lectures there, which were well attended and much interest manifested. At the close, Rathbun invited any that were Masons present, if they could, to disprove any statement he had made; when an old gentleman by the name of Roberts arose and said he had been a Mason for over forty years and he knew the Masons as an order never published any books, proving his statement by saying "that all Masons had to swear that they would not write, print, stamp, stain, cut, carve, mark or engrave anything pertaining to Masonry," thus disclaiming everything published by the craft, thereby showing how ignorant he is on the subject of Masonry.

From Burton we went to Ortonville where we had the pleasure of seeing the officers of the Masonic lodge of that place "properly installed," their "goose yokes" put on, etc., after which a lecture was delivered by the Grand Chaplain of this State, proving that it was true that they did not pray in Christ's name in the lodge, and gave as a reason that Christ's name could not be found in the Lord's prayer; but that at the burial of their friends sometimes they did pray in the name of the Lion of the tribe of Judah. This installation and Masonic address was given in the Baptist church. I applied for this church for Rathbun to lecture in but was refused; but having a church meeting immediately after my application they recanted. So on the next evening after the installation Rathbun gave his lecture against the order, and it was a telling affair, for it must have convinced all present of the Christlessness of the institution as well as of its anti-republican tendency. From here we go to Goodrich.

Before closing let me say the great call for Rathbun is to hold revival meetings; everywhere we have yet been the question is asked, Can you stay with us and hold meetings, and I am surprised that any church should want Rathbun and yet close their doors against anti-secret lectures. The work of reform is progressing here in Michigan and I trust that our friends will soon be awake to the cause, and that we shall soon hear from various parties asking for lectures.

Chicago Christian Association.

This association met in regular monthly session in Carpenter Hall, 221 West Madison street, Tuesday evening, the 13th inst. In the absence of the President (Rev. J. W. Bain), Mr. C. R. Hagerty presided. Prayer was offered by Rev. E. S. Cook, after which the Secretary read the record of the previous meeting. The record was corrected and approved. The Treasurer, Mr. J. B. Blank, then presented a report, which showed a small balance on hand. Accepted. A report from the Committee on Reading Room was called for, and Mr. Thos. Hodge, a member of said Committee, responded. He announced the reading room as an accomplished fact, open every day, Sabbath excepted, from 8 A. M. till 9 P. M., and in charge of a reliable and competent young man, who is always ready to answer inquiries and attend to the wants of visitors. Mr. H., in the course of his remarks, made some valuable and practicable suggestions, which, acted upon, will, no doubt, further the interests of this important branch of the Association's work. The report was ac-

Persons to serve on the following standing Committees, provided for in our constitution, were selected, as follows. On "Committee for laboring with professing Christians who adhere to the lodge, which shall endeavor to enlighten them and lead them to separate themselves from the unfruitful works of darkness"—Mr. Thos. Hodge, Rev. Wm. E. Holyoke, Rev. A. M. Wait, Mr. R. Stratton, and Rev. J. P. Stoddard. Committee on lectures and public meetings—Messrs. Edmond Ronayne, J. B. Blank and A. G. Laird. The Secretary read a number of communications from various quarters relative to reading matter for reading room, which, upon motion, was referred to the Reading Room Committee. After passing a resolution inviting Mr. Ronayne to give a public exposition of Masonry in the hall Tuesday evening, March 20th, the meeting adjourned.

CENTRAL KANSAS CONVENTION.

STERLING, Rice County,
March 3, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure.

Although a little late, I will submit a few items to you concerning the proceedings at the "Central Kansas Anti-Secret Association," which convened at Good Will, near Sterling, Rice County, Kan., Feb. 9th and 10th, 1877.

The President, Rev. G. W. Keller, was in the chair, and there were fifty-two members in attendance, yet we very much wanted to have more from a distance.

Rev. H. T. Besse, President of the "Kansas State Anti-Secret Association," was present, to the satisfaction of all. He delivered an address on Secrecy and the evils arising from it. Rev. G. W. Keller delivered an address on the "Oaths of Masonry and Obligations of Kindred Orders." Rev. R. W. Parks spoke on the General Phases of Secrecy.

We also had a kind of social "experience" meeting, at which about a score of "seceders" from different secret orders made short speeches, four or five Odd-fellows among the number, and quite a number spoke that had not had experience in these orders. There were two delegates appointed to attend the next regular meeting of the State Association—H. T. Dunlap and G. W. Keller.

The following resolutions were reported and adopted:

Whereas, Many are uninformed of the evils of organized secrecy, and, believing that the circulation of literature on the subject is one of the best means of imparting information; and,

Whereas, Many are not sufficiently interested to pay for such literature; therefore,

Resolved, That we will raise a fund for the gratuitous distribution of anti-secret literature to such as will read the same, and that the Vice Presidents have the supervision of the matter.

Resolved, 2nd, That each Vice President be requested to report the roll of members secured at each regular meeting, and the Corresponding Secretary be requested to notify those absent of the fact.

Whereas, There is but one political party recognized in this county, and that very corrupt; therefore,

Resolved, That we put in the field an anti-secret, anti-whisky ticket for the fall campaign in Rice County, Kan.

Resolved, That we invite Edmond Ronayne to attend our Association in September next, and that the Corresponding Secretary be requested to correspond with him and with friends of the cause in other parts of the State, to arrange for a series of meetings at different points in the State.

Resolved, That we hail the Christian Cyuosure as very important in the dissemination of truth and light upon the dark orders; and,

Resolved, That we seek to extend its circulation.

Whereas, There is in contemplation the publication of a paper in this State in the interest of anti-secretism, to be edited Sexton and Kiggins, Topeka;

Resolved, That this Association is in favor of the movement and will seek its immediate circulation.

Taken altogether, the friends of the cause think it a success. There was much other business transacted that we will not ask room for in your paper. The place of the next meeting is Sterling, Rice County, Kan.

WM. L. HINSHAW, Secretary.

A MAJORITY FOR THE TRUTH.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

On my way home from the Convention at Sandy Lake, Pa., I met a man in Franklin, Pa., who was glad to hear of the reform and wanted light. I sent him some papers, and at his request, I went, the 4th of March, to visit him, and lectured that evening on secret societies in a school house secured by him for that purpose.

The evening was rainy, so that not a large crowd was out. At the close I gave opportunity to reply. An old man arose and claimed never to have belonged to any secret order, but classed Masonry with church organizations; said they were all institutions of men, and were all wrong. An Odd-fellow arose and showed the gilt edge of his order by its boasted charity, but would not deny anything I had said concerning Odd-fellowship. One Odd-fellow said to me he took the first degree, but promised God, if he would forgive him for that, he would never enter the lodge any more. They tendered me a vote of thanks, about 45 in favor and only 4 or 5 opposed, truly a majority in favor of the truth, and the reform has a foothold in Hendersonville, Mercer County, Pa. I am yours in the good work. A. J. WEAVER

FROM KOSCIUSKO CO., INDIANA.

SEVASTOPOL, Ind.,
March 8, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I thought I would write a line or two and try and encourage all workers in this great reform. I feel encouraged myself. Some months ago I commenced working against secretism in a weak way, when there was not a man in the township, that I knew of, who was outspoken against the lodge. Now there are several who oppose it and are not afraid to let it be known. I am right in the midst of Odd-fellows and grangers. Sometimes they make it a little warm for me, but I find great consolation in knowing that "they that be with us are more than they that be with them."

I feel certain that the exposition of Odd-fellowship is correct from the following circumstance: I was trying to speak on the subject not long since; in the course of my remarks I read a part of the obligation in the second degree. After I got through I gave an opportunity of replying. A leading member of the lodge in Sevastopol came forward and said he would like to read the balance of that obligation; that it was not treating them fairly to only read a part of it. Here was conclusive evidence that the exposition is correct, and that given by an adhering member.

What we want to do is to take a decided stand in this matter. If we believe the lodge is wrong in its teaching let us say so and stand firm. I believe the best way is to work on those who do not belong to any order but are thinking about joining one. If we can persuade men not to join them they will be discouraged, and some will leave them because they do not increase. Let us take courage and renew our efforts and be in earnest and we will see the giant tremble. Yours in earnest. FRANK HEIGHWAY.

THE WORK AT HARMON.

HARMON, Lee Co., Ill.

Eight years ago this present winter Rev. Francis Smith, the pastor of Harmon church, wrote for me to come and assist him in a protracted meeting. I came at the time appointed accompanied by my daughter. The Lord was with us in great power during the meeting and a number were converted. The people were drawing stone for the foundation of a new Wesleyan church. When they were ready to lay the corner stone I was requested by the pastor to make an address, and arrange the afternoon exercises to suit myself. I gave an address against secretism. The people of God were blessed, but the Baal worshipers were offended, of course.

Now some timid Christians tell us that we must not preach against secret societies in a protracted meeting; it will injure a revival because it will get up an excitement. All such reasoning is false; this I know from several years' experience. Our corner-stone exercises were in the midst of our protracted meeting. That evening after preaching sinners came forward as usual and there was no interruption in the work because lodge worship had been exposed and denounced.

Rev. H. R. Will was the next pastor after Bro. Smith and he kept the subject before the people by giving some telling lectures against secret societies. During the last four years my residence has been here, and I have lectured occasionally as necessity required.

This winter, the last of February, Rev. Philo Elzea, came here to lecture for us. He gave us four lectures, thorouhgly exposing the evils and evil influence of all secret societies. His arguments were strong, deep, and convincing. Bro. Elzea is a very forcible speaker. The consequences of our continuous lectures against secrecy are these: We have no Masonic or Odd-fellow lodge in our village; nor even a Good Templar's lodge. Will the Lord bless and protect the lives of all those dear brethren who are preaching a whole Gospel regardless of consequences.

MRS. H. E. HAYDEN.

—Bro. Hinman is still in Indiana. He writes, on the 15th. that when his appointments are all filled he will have spoken more than thirty times. The weather has been bad and roads worse, but no meeting had failed. He could bless the Lord and take courage at the results already manifest.

Correspondence.

THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The following from the pen of Dr. J. A. Bingham, who has been associated with reform work for more than forty years, and who did more to save the "Western Book and Tract Society" from financial ruin than any other one man when the pro-slavery minions North and South determined its utter extinction, will be read with interest. It bears the marks of experience and mature thought, and although not intended for the public I trust the doctor will remember that he belongs to the Master and his best thoughts to the public and so exercise his accustomed generosity.

J. P. STODDARD.

"Your editorial statement of Publishing House labors is refreshing as giving assurance of triumphant results. The new accessions to the subscription list are hardly less encouraging. A large circulation of that organ of truth is indispensable to the dethronement of the lodge power in the land. Our work is imperative. The public mind must be enlightened. The literature must do this. The Cynosure and the Publishing House are the instruments to effect it. The pulpits (with few exceptions) are silent, and will remain so until the world so far reforms itself as to be ready for their utterances. The tract societies, the Sunall day school associations and almost religious publishing houses and periodicals fail to see the duty of bearing testimony against Satan's great embodiment of anti-Christ. Hence the great work of publishing the literature iudispensable to save the church and nation from destruction is thrown upon the National Christian Association. Will you do it? Can you do it? Not without means. Can the means be had? A few more Carpenters and a few more Leutys would furnish the funds. But there are thousands of others who by contributing less sums could readily furnish the six or seven thousand dollars required to complete the $50,000 aimed for. * * * I trust that twenty thousand copies of the Cynosure will be in circulation before the next anniversary."

Who says amen to this?

"Come Out from among Them."

Woodson, Ill., March 7, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Through the providence of God I can state to the readers of your paper, that by the preaching of our evangelist of the M. E. church, Bro. Pellet has conducted a series of meetings at Murrayville in the M. E. church, and some six or eight have left the Masonic lodge of Murrayville. They saw it was the work of darkness; not of God, but of Satan. They loved God more than Satan, and so separated themselves from the work of the devil. Some of these brethren are S. Fanning, and White, and B. W. Gunn. Those three men are professors of the blessing of sanctification, and through the preaching of Bro. Pellet they could not stay in the lodge. I trust that all our ministers will soon see that Masonry is a greater curse to our nation than slavery ever was. I can say for one that in the late rebellion I saw the bad effects of Masonry in the South.

Must Give up All.

Ridge, O.

Editor Cynosure:

There has been a general outpouring of God's Spirit this past fall and winter upon the people in general almost throughout this vast country, and thousands have been happily converted to Christ and are now able to rejoice in hope of eternal life beyond the grave. Hundreds have been added to the different orthodox churches in my knowledge close around us; many of whom I am well acquainted with, and many were as bright conversions as ever I saw. Although a portion were Freemasons who joined, I did not see them converted, neither do I know whether one of them was converted or no, but must say that I have seen one of my nearest neighbors who is a Mason, seeking at the altar at different times, but he has failed to receive the forgiveness of his sins. In an experience of thirty-four years I have never seen or known an adhering Mason converted, but think that if they all would withdraw from that system of iniquity it would be as easy for them to come to Christ as for others. Unless all is laid upon the altar it is useless to approach a sin-pardoning God.

When we look at the maneuvering of the different secret organizations now in the land we may justly conclude that they are "the sum of all villainies," and are of that nature that "loveth and maketh a lie," and as an old Odd-fellow and a preacher said to me, when I asked him what difference there was between Odd-fellows and Freemasons, he answered, "hair of the same dog." I think the same. When we read the manual of one we are very apt to think of the others, even down to the grange.

I am battling with the monster alone, scattering the precious seed as fast as I can, to some effect it is to be hoped. I cast a few of Bro. Woodward's lists in the highway, and a well-known Master Mason found them and gave me two or three of them, with bitter curses, and said that he had written to Cincinnati as though he would take an agency for the pamphlet and get one himself. He told me to get all I could. He claimed that the Anti's were doing the Masons in Chicago a good thing; that they were burned out, and now the Anti's were buying their literature and helped them to rebuild their lodge again. Any way, you know, to dodge the issue and cover up their supposed hidden mysteries. "Masonry at a Glance," was shown to a newly-made Mason a few days ago, and asked if that was true. His answer was: "I will not tell you whether it is true or false." He kept his jewel pretty well. But an old preacher, while setting in conversation with myself and others, said that "he had taken one degree." To try him I pulled out a copy of the oath, and handed him to read. He read it, and handed it back, and exclaimed, "That man is a perjured man;" as good as to say that it was true.

An Unevangelical Evangelist.

Elkhart, Ind., Mar. 12, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Allow me to say that there was a Mr. Brown here from the West somewhere, an evangelist, who went around a great ways to say some bad things about a good cause. In one of his Bible readings here he said that Odd-fellows and Freemason societies are doing some good as well as churches and ought to have credit for it as well. He said in a certain place, I forget where, there was a woman who would not attend his services because he (Mr. Brown) was a Freemason, and went on to ridicule people for having such notions about Freemasonry, and said there was a paper published in Chicago called, he believed, Cynosure, or something like it that would make any man crazy to read it, etc.

For a man to profess to be an evangelist and yet talking up his creed I think he has not as much of the Spirit as he ought to have and too much of the flesh.

John Guipe.

Not the Idea.

I see in the Cynosure frequently a suggestion that somebody start up a new church, excluding from it all persons who are members of a secret society. Now, Mr. Editor, why should the world be burdened with another anti-secrecy church, seeing there are some half dozen already? Cannot all find a congenial home in these churches? Will some one give to the world the reasons why we should have another church organization?

W. S. Titus.

Note.—Brother Titus has mistaken the views of the writer in the Cynosure. We do not recollect of any advocacy of a new church organization. The name "United Churches of Christ" suggested by the worthy Adam Crooks before his death was simply to designate a mutual alliance of the testifying churches, something like the "Prayer Alliance" of churches of the Northwest formed at the Moody Convention here last November.

Why are Criminals Pardoned?

What Freemasonry is for, is for the people to know. They will inquire before long, and will have an answer. If Freemasony is to bulldoze the people, and escape punishment, they will assuredly ascertain it.

The question at the heading of this article arises from reading a "List of the pardons granted by the last six governors [of New York] in each of their terms of office," on the suspicion that Freemasonry is the reason why criminals are pardoned. The list is from the New York Evening Post:

Morgan, 1st term, 184; 2d term, 187. Seymour, 297. Fenton, 1st term, 343; 2d term, 289. Hoffman, 1st term, 235; 2d term, 269. Dix, 144. Tilden, 242.

"The constitution of this State [New York] vests the pardoning power absolutely in the governor, and hence he cannot be controlled in its exercise by any legislative restriction." From this entire absence of restraint upon the governors of New York in the exercise of the pardoning power, they are open to solicitations for the executive clemency, grounded utterly in wrong. They may be Freemasons or may not, yet, by the constitution they are open to a foul approach upon the subject of pardons from the Masonic order. If they are Freemasons then the Masonic sign before them must be all-sufficient to command an act from them condemned on every principle of patriotism and law. If they are not Freemasons, then a reminder given them of the votes that may hang on their decision when asked for a pardon, must command away their conscience and manhood in an act that only makes public life a smell, on account of its corruption.

But what had Freemasonry to do with the pardons in the foregoing list? It contains two thousand one hundred and ninety. They are of men proven criminals in the courts of their country and sentenced according to the fealty of sworn judges at law.

It is not stated here that Freemasonry explains these pardons. It is affirmed that the people will yet ask their public servants, and will not take subterfuge from them for an answer, "Why have you set these criminals free?"

It is not to be forgotten that in the gubernatorial line, the six governors here alluded to, are successors to Governor DeWitt Clinton, of whom it is on record that a communication from him to the lodge during the Morgan trials in New York, set forth that if the Masons concerned in the murder of Morgan were convicted, he would pardon them.

While on this subject, it is in place to say, the papers report that General Grant has pardoned the last of the whisky ring criminals. If Freemasonry is not at the bottom of these pardons what shall we say to the administration of the law by the courts of this country?

Lodge Learning.

York, Pa.

We presume no reader of the Cynosure was surprised to hear of a Masonic treasurer going off with other peoples' money. A man who receives a Masonic education and learns to admire all the dark-lantern doings of the fraternity; that dresses George Washington up in fancy toggery,—people cannot be too careful how they confide in those who love secrecy, craftiness, hypocrisy, and all the Masonic virtues.

Not long ago a treasurer of one of the Masonic orders of this place

"Folded up his tent, like the the Arab,
And silently stole away," taking about $150 belonging to some foolish men, who have only a few grips and passwords to comfort them in their distress.

Now, as many other sly rogues are no doubt getting ready to decamp, we advise every secret society dupe to pay no more fees or dues to such fellows; for to do so is to tempt the vicious to crime. A better plan will be to assert your manhood. Become free and independent in fact. Renounce and expose all the secret swindlers, who grow rich by selling foolish gew-gaws and moonshine at an enormous price.

Our Mail.

Jehiel Claflin, East Westmoreland, N. H., writes:

"In Morgan's time I often gave great offence because I preached against Freemasonry and charged it with the murder of Morgan. The Masons here peremptorily deny that there is any oath whatever in Freemasonry. They assert that if a man is a real, true Mason, it is sufficient to save him, thus plainly and boldly denying the declaration of God's Word."

J. Macauley, Pittsfield, Ill., writes:

"We are all well pleased with the Cynosure."

"Wm. Townsend, West Branch, Iowa, writes:

"The Masons here are about starting a lodge, and I want to enlighten the young people on the subject, if possible, before they get the cable-tow around their necks."

Should not all these people have "Freemasonry at a Glance?"

F. M. Waldron, Cascade, Minn., writes:

"I gave a lecture on Masonry at the school-house at Pleasant Prairie, Feb. 26, to nearly a full house. I showed them through the first three degrees according to Mr. Ronayne. There were two Masons present. One of them confessed it was the truth, but said that Masonry was not a religion, but a moral institution. He said that their chaplain, Rev. Mr. Remington, of Rochester, prays in the name of Christ in the lodge. Most of the people gladly received what I said as the truth. * * * Publish nothing but the truth, but the whole truth, and let the devil rage and people imagine vain things."

Milton Hawley, Humboldt, Kan., writes:

'Our cause is brightning up here. We are looking forward to the time when we shall be able to have some lectures here. The little we have done seems to be working."

A friend near Elgin, Ill., writes:

'Be encouraged. The reform is progressing. As in Elijah's day, the reserved force still exists, though in obscurity, and under popular proscription; yet it is of God, and is mighty and will prevail. I am trying in a quiet and unassuming manner to be a rebuke to the works of darkness, manifesting sympathy towards those usually well disposed, who have through ignorance and indiscretion been insidiously drawn into the coils of secret societies. May disenthrallment speedily come."

G. D. Galluk, Genoa, O., writes:

"I wish some one of the lecturers would call here and give one lecture, if no more. It would open the eyes of some men who do not belong to any of the secret orders."

J. A. Gibson, Brownington, Vt., writes:

"The cause is of God and must succeed whether we do or not."

Eld. Isaac Jackson, Harrison, Me., writes:

"The grangers are much in the way of reform. If you say anything against the Masons they take it up and go with the Masons. I have been out on a tour of one week. I obtained one subscriber for three months. Two others gave some encouragement of taking it when I come around again. I delivered one lecture, and had good liberty, a good congregation, and good attention. The place was South Baldwin, Maine. One other place is open for a lecture, after a while I shall attend to it."

D. Alter, Fairfield, Ia., writes:

"I have great reason to thank the Lord and take courage, for the light is spreading from your excellent paper to the pulling down of the secret combinations of sin and Satan so prevalent in our day."

Philester Lee, Lebanon, Oregon, writes:

"Non-masons to whom I show Ronayne's Freemasonry at a Glance, express great surprise, and remark, 'That is too thin. I can't believe that.' I tell how they can learn the grips and passwords, and try them on strangers, who, if they are Masons, will return the compliment. After they have tried it they say Ronayne is correct."

Rev. A. D. Carter, Deersville, Ohio, writes:

"There were three votes cast for the American ticket in Franklin township. The lodge has been waning here for the last four years. May it grow beautifully less."

J. W. Hamilton, Whigville, O., writes:

"The Cynosure is a sheet that is very much needed in these days of evil. May it speak in no uncertain sound against the image of the beast."

Thos. Kingenerth, Battle Creek, Mich., sends seventeen dollars to help in different departments of this reform work, and writes:

"I am very glad to read that the work of reform is going forward in some places I am trying to do something."

Jasen C. Bartholomew, Eli, Iowa, in explanation of his letter published in 'Our Mail," Jan. 18, writes:

"I located the U. B church wrong. Instead of North Liberty I should have said North Bend. North Liberty is in North Bend. It is called the church at the Corners, some three or four miles from North Liberty. Please correct."

Adna Lull, Greeley, Ia., writes:

"I have taken the Cynosure for four years, and hope, if I live, I shall take it four years longer. I have given away and lent more than nine-tenths of the whole of them. People seem to be very glad to read them."

Rev. C. T. Hussong, Ascension, Ind., writes:

"I am holding a meeting in our own community. We are having a glorious revival. I belong to the United Brethren church. It stands opposed to Masonry, and I pray God that it ever may."

LESSON XIII.—APRIL 1, 1877.—THE OIL INCREASED.

SCRIPTURE.—2 Kings iv. 1-7

GOLDEN TEXT.—"And God is able to make all grace abound toward you."—2 Cor. 9: 8.

1. Now there cried a certain woman of the wives of the sons of the prophets unto Elisha, saying, Thy servant my husband is dead; and thou knowest that thy servant did fear the Lord: and the creditor is is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.

2. And Elisha said unto her, What shall I do for thee? tell me, what hast thou in the house? And she said, Thy handmaid hath not any thing in the house save a pot of oil.

3. Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbors, even empty vessels; borrow not a few.

4. And when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

5. So she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her; and she poured out.

6. And it came to pass, when the vessels were full, that she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her. There is not a vessel more. And the oil stayed.

7. Then she came and told the man of God. And he said, Go, sell the oil, and pay thy debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest

The circumstances under which a Hebrew might be reduced to servitude were: 1. Poverty; 2. the commission of theft; 3. the exercise of parental authority. In the first case, a man who had mortgaged his property and was unable to support his family, might sell himself to another Hebrew, with a view both to obtain maintenance, and perchance a surplus sufficient to redeem his property. The servitude of a Hebrew might be terminated in ways: 1. By the satisfaction or remission of all claims against him; 2. by the recurrence of the year of jubilee—Lev. xxv 40; and 3. The expiration of six years from the time that his servitude commenced. Ex. xxi. 2; Deut. xv. 12.—Smith.

Every Freemason a Blasphemer.

As proved by the Highest Masonic Authority.

By J. H. H. Woodward.

By quotations from a score of masonic works of unquestioned authority, the fact of the blasphemous ceremonies and teachings of Freemasonry are so clearly demonstrated as to make it evident that every initiate is of necessity a blasphemer.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1877.

TEN THOUSAND.—The weekly report of our workers for the paper on the 16th page shows more and more encouragement for the 10,000 subscribers by May. The long-looked for revival of business is at hand. Let it include the subscription list of the Cynosure. This is practical work—the leaven of truth permeating, particle by particle the whole lump. Let it never stop while one secret lodge remains.

"STEADY, THERE! STEADY!"

This is the order of the captain to the helmsman at the wheel below, when the steamer is on her course. The course of the anti-secret reform is toward a cleansed communion table and jury-box. Forty-five years ago, the United States, north of Mason and Dixon's line, were almost literally flooded with testimonies against the lodge, but the churches and court houses were left open to unrepentant Masons; and the lodge, like the harlot which she is, has walked back into more than her lost power without answer or reply, in face of, over, and trampling under her feet the recorded testimonies of churches, theological seminaries, associations, presbyteries, synods, conventions and legislatures.

Now when some brave, believing soul, like Mr. Moody, dares to utter a guarded condemnation of the lodge, while brothering and using lodge-men as helps in his meetings, the cry is raised upon some toil-worn veteran of our cause, though he may meek and Christian and gentlemanly: "Why can't you be wise like Mr. Moody? He does not get mobbed or insulted. Why not push the reform as he does?" Or, "Why not do as our good and faithful pastor does? He has preached one whole sermon against the lodge, as the antagonist of the church; and has several times alluded to it in his prayers. If you could be as wise as these noble brethren, you would not all the time be getting us into hot water."

Nothing could be more cruel, weak and unjust than such criminations of God's faithful prophets, who have prophesied in sack cloth until it is safe for others to echo their testimonies while dressed in purple and fine linen.

Yet such things must be. Christ's disciples were all the time importuning him to make religion easy and popular; to set up a worldly kingdom and make them prime ministers in it. Why not? Were not his doctrines simple truth, and popular with the masses? Did not the "common people hear him gladly?" and follow him in swarming multitudes? "Surely a little discretion and kind common sense will put Christianity in the ascendant." So thought poor Peter, and he "took him (Christ) and began to rebuke him." (Mark viii. 32.) But Jesus rebuked Peter, or the "Satan" who influenced him, and then uttered those memorable words: "Ye shall be hated of all men." "He that will save his life" (much more his reputation) "shall lose it." "Whosoever forsaketh not all he hath cannot be my disciple."

Yet there are many things unpopular besides the truth, and we must not throw on Christ the blame of our own rashness, want of sense and crabbedness of temper. Mr. Lathrop, of California, wrote me the other day that he "had not madded but two Masons yet." It reminded me how the seventy returned with joy, saying, "Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." And it is doubtless true, that "when a man's ways please the Lord," sooner or later "He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."

Still the man who hopes that Freemasons can be put away from the communion table, out of the jury-box, and away from the ballot-box, even, without somebody's enduring bitter scoffing and reviling has very inadequate ideas of men and reforms.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF THE FOOT-BOARD.

When the secret organization of locomotive engineers ordered a strike on the Boston and Maine railroad February 12, they reckoned on certain victory. Their order extends all over the country, with a membership of 13,000, including a majority of the best men in the business. They had the prestige of success in half a dozen strikes within a year. But a new agency was met in Massachusetts, and they were defeated and the strike broken up. This agency was the State Railroad Commission (Messrs. Charles F. Adams, Jr., Albert D. Briggs and Francis M. Johnson), who investigated the case, and placed it within the compass of the State laws, requiring railroad companies, under heavy penalties, to carry on their legitimate business. The strikers thus appeared as preventing the roads from complying with law. The commissioners further reported that from the arbitrary action of the order, with all its attendant losses, dangers and inconveniences, "the community has no protection whatever' if the principle of the strikers is justified. Their able report shows the same spirit of selfishness that pervades the whole family of secret orders; the same subservience to despotic rule; the same violent spirit toward any opposing interest. From this long report we venture to make an extract, which will be interesting as a sketch of the order and its character. To the whole traveling public such facts are important:

In point of fact, however, the numerous witnesses among the engineers who gave their evidence at the hearing wholly failed to agree in assigning the cause of the strike to any one ground, whether wages or anything else. Some said they struck because the others did. Others gave as a reason the belief that the wages were to be yet further reduced, or that promotions were not to be made, or that the twenty-five cents a day contingent on good behavior was to be stopped. One party acknowledged that the pay had nothing to do with his action, that he struck because he wanted to, and because he had heard that Superintendent Furber was hostile to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

It scarcely needs to be said, also, that a railroad strike is not like other strikes. Those are simple questions between employer and employed, involving outside interests in only a slight degree. A railroad strike, however, almost necessarily entails an incalculable amount of loss and inconvenience on wholly innocent third parties. It can only be looked upon as an extreme measure - one not lightly to be entered upon and for trivial motives by any body of men. The very essence of such a strike in fact is that it inflicts such a degree of injury, loss and inconvenience, not on the parties to it, but on the public, that it cannot last. The community is throttled that a corporation may be subdued. From a public point of view nothing can justify the recourse to such a remedy save the existence of grievances of the most indisputable character. That so respectable, intelligent and reliable a set of men, therefore, as the Boston and Maine engineers—picked men in every sense of the word—in receipt of large and regular wages, sure of their situations and with families dependent upon them, should, in times like the present, and without the slightest sense of personal ill-will to their employers, quit at a moment's notice a service in which some of them had passed thirty years, to engage in a railroad strike for which they could assign no adequate ground, is a fact which demands an explanation. To those listening to the evidence given in this investigation and observing the men, that explanation was obvious and impressed itself at once on all the members of this Board. It was made apparent from the statements of Mr. Arthur in regard to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and the part that organization, as such, had taken in several recent similar strikes elsewhere.

According to his statements, which are undoubtedly correct, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, dating its organization from 1863, was originally intended to be a society of a social and charitable character, having for its object the improvement of locomotive engineers as a body. In this work it has certainly been very successful. It has inculcated principles of sobriety and fidelity among that important class, and has accomplished a very great work in providing for their sick and destitute. It has also grown rapidly, until it now includes among its members a very great majority of the best locomotive engineers of the country, and possesses a large amount of accumulated funds. It is in some respects a secret society, made up of divisions having headquarters in all the principal cities of the country, the whole bound together by a central organization of salaried officers, who reside at Cleveland, Ohio. More recently the Brotherhood has made itself, as Mr. Arthur freely stated, somewhat unfortunately notorious by its active participation in and support of several railroad strikes. These have almost uniformly been successful through the great strength, resources and esprit de corps of the association, and more especially from the fact that it has not scrupled recently to use as a weapon the position its individual members hold as trusted agents in the work of modern distribution. Its strikes have always been marked by the same characteristics and modus operandi. The corporations between whom and whose employes the difficulty has arisen have declined to accept the offered mediation of the recognized head of the Brotherhood. A strike has thereupon been authorized by it. Without this permission a strike is impossible for if it is attempted the organization at once exerts itself to fill the places and to break the strike down. The permission to strike, on the other hand, carries with it the assurance that the large resources of the Brotherhood shall be devoted to securing success to the movement, and all those engaged will at once pass from the service of the corporation to that of the Brotherhood, which undertakes to provide for them until the railroad corporation succumbs; or in case it holds out successfully, until the strikers can secure other situations. In every instance, regardless of the season of the year or the public convenience, the strike takes place at a fixed hour and all trains are abandoned by their engineers wherever they may then happen to be. So far as the organization is concerned, a state of warfare, within the letter of the law, between it and the railroad corporation—the "enemy," as Mr. Arthur termed it in his evidence—then ensues. The single object of its members is to paralyze its opponent, to stop the whole movement of trade and traffic on its lines, and to compel its submission. That they may the more surely and quickly succeed in doing this they wholly ignore the rights and interests of the public; they consider, as was openly stated at the meeting, that the responsibility for every consequence rests upon the corporation from its refusal to yield. Every means, short of open violence, is in practice regarded as legitimate to prevent others from taking the places of those who have struck.

The rapid manner in which these strikes, so conducted, have of late followed one upon another, and their uniform success under Mr. Arthur's lead, it was apparent throughout the hearing, had inspired both himself and the members of the Brotherhood with an absolute faith in themselves and their organization. They no longer believe that any corporation could stand out against them, or that another strike meant anything but a new triumph. The Commissioners can entertain no doubt that it was this sentiment among them which led to the otherwise inexplicable action of the Boston and Maine engineers on the 12th inst. It was little better than a wanton exhibition of power.

—Secretary Stoddard went to Wisconsin last Friday, expecting to be gone a week or more. He will speak in Footville, Fond du Lac, and possibly at other points.

—The State, county, and other conventions now meeting or preparing to do so should not forget the appointment of delegations to the National Convention at Dayton, which will probably be held in June, some time after the 12th. Friends should be forecasting and arranging visits or business journeys so as to take in this important meeting.

—It is reported that a temperance sanitary colony has been organized in Fresno county, Cal. The members pledge themselves to preserve the sanitary condition of the colony by maintaining the purity of the air, to sell or make no intoxicating liquors, and to belong to no secret organization. That is surely a long step toward a normal condition of society which can maintain such principles; with true Bible piety added, what more could be asked here below.

—The Cleveland Leader notices the suicide of Samuel H. Austin, of Toledo, Ohio, on the 10th inst., without any assignable cause; says he was Master of Sanford L. Collins' Lodge No. 396 Free and Accepted Masons of Toledo, an officer of Toledo Commandery No. 7 Knights Templar, and a member of Ohio Sovereign Grand Consistory No. 32 degree Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. A correspondent suggests that this complication of lodges may be an explanation of the suicide, such, however, as Freemasons are unwilling to accept.

—Though the First Church in Oberlin has for a generation been "as a city set on a hill," and has overcome great and strong enemies of the Cross "through the word of their testimony," a recent case shows the necessity of perpetual vigilance against the assaults of the lodge which would spy out and destroy the liberty testifying believers have in Jesus. The church, before or about the time of the first convention at Aurora, in 1867, adopted a rule against the admission of acting Masons. One such lately asked to join in the face of that rule, an open attack on the testimony of the church. The application was put off, but next week was renewed, with a promise to leave the Oberlin Lodge and have nothing more to do with it, though not agreeing with the position of the church, and unwilling to give up his oath. On this promise he was received by vote of a majority. This action is a grief to many faithful brethren in Oberlin, colleagues and pioneers with the great President Finney in this reform.

News of the Week.

—Another murder for a wife's sake took place here last Wednesday afternoon. The victim, S. S. Jones, editor and proprietor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal, a Spiritualist paper, was shot by a "lecturer on psychology, phrenology," etc., named Pike, the alleged reason being criminal intimacy with Mrs. Pike. All the parties were Spiritualists, and, though Jones combatted the free-love doctrines of Mrs. Woodhull, it is claimed by the papers and those who knew him that his theories and practice disagreed. The Coroner's Jury ordered the imprisonment of Pike without bail.

—It has been decided by the Cabinet that an extra session of Congress will be necessary. The session will probably be called for the 15th of May. This is because the Democratic majority in the House defeated any appropriation for the War Department. The appointment of some 2,000 officials will need confirming then also.

—Ex-Postmaster General Tyner has consented to go back to his old position as First Assistant Postmaster General. The object of the Postmaster General is to have the general appointments in control of a Republican and man of experience.

—The Republicans of the Pennsylvania Legislature have obeyed their old "boss" unanimously and nominated J. Donald Cameron to succeed his father in the United States Senate.

—The "Permanent Exhibition" is to be opened shortly in Philadelphia in the main building of the Centennial show. It is expected to be a sort of Crystal Palace, to which pilgrimages will be made from all quarters to see the wonders of industry and art. It must be added, with sincere regret, that the rule for Sabbath closing adopted for the great exhibition will be disregarded by the managers of this. Few Christian people will patronize such a display.

—The President and his advisers are overwhelmed by applicants for office. They will remove few and appoint none until assured of personal fitness. The husband of Mrs. Hayes' favorite cousin had to give up his chance for an office the other day because of his relationship.—Great objection was manifested in the Senate last week to confirming the nomination of Fred Douglass as Marshall of the District. He was confirmed, however.

The publishers of the Metropolitan Pulpit, New York, announce that they have now in press the first number of a new monthly, to be called the Complete Preacher. In this serial, sermons are to be published in full. The first number is to contain sermons by the following eminent clergymen: Theodore Christlieb, D. D., Professor of the University of Bonn, Germany—the manuscript, forwarded by Dr. Christlieb, is translated for this publication by Dr. Wedekind, New York; Right Rev. Archbishop Tait and Charles S. Spurgeon, England; John Hall, D. D., New York; J. P. Newman, D. D. Washington, and John A. Broadus, D. D.. LL. D., Professor in the Baptist Theological Seminary, Greenville, S. C. These were stenographically reported for the Complete Preacher. This is a valuable publication for all who love good sermons. The price of this monthly is $2 per year; 25 cents single issue.

Will those whose time is out in March who have not renewed, do so promptly?

The Home Circle.

What She Could.

In a quiet and darkened chamber,
Shut out from the happy sky,
And the pleasures that make it so sweet to live,
And make it so hard to die,
Lay one with her meek eyes heavy,
And her hands on her heart astrain,
Because she could do no more than bear
Her burden of hopeless pain.

On the pillow of sleepless childhood,
Harrassed with the wearing day,
A mother emptied her tired arms,
And dropped on her knees to pray.
A sob to her lips kept rising,
That her strength had only sufficed
For the needs of home, when all the while
She had wanted to work for Christ

At her seams through the long, long summer,
One sat with a drooping head,
And sighed as she thought of her fresh, young life,
Just slipping away for bread.
But the tear that dropped on her needle,
Held in it a prayer—"Ah, who,
Dear Lord, hath labored so little for thee,
And there is so much to do?"

"They perish for lack of knowledge;"
'Twas a maiden heard the call;
And the sacredest things the soul holds dear
She freely renounced them all,
To sit with the dusky Hindoo,
In her sad zezena's gloom,
And tell her the story of Bethlehem,
The manger, the cross, the tomb.

And yet unto each, as she suffers
In patience, and prayer, and trust—
As she ministers, lavishing life and love,
Or toils for her daily crust,
Or lays her soul on the altar—
Alike will the Saviour say,
"She hath done what she could;" and the spikenard scent
Shall never dissolve away!

No Particular Work for Jesus.

Have you any particular work for Jesus? What! None? Surely you are mistaking the fact. The truth is that he has given to every man his work, and you are not an exception.

Are you not a servant of his? No. Then this accounts for your mistake. He has bought you with his own blood, and that after having created and sustained you by his own power, and you belong to him by every right of ownership; but you have failed to acknowledge it to him and to yourself. You belong to him, but you hold yourself as your own. What right have you to do that? Have you any other right than that of possession?—the robber's right. Will your claim stand when he cometh to judge the world?

But are you a servant of his? Yes. And yet you have no particular work for him? What are you doing then? Nothing but your own work? Your own work, and yet you yourself are not your own. Ah! I see you are holding your every-day work as your own. You are thinking of religious work as work for the Lord, and of daily work as for yourself.

Here is your mistake, and a very sad one it is, too. You really rob God without knowing it, and you rob yourself, too. It would be true to the Lord, and a glory to his name if you should live in everything every day of your life as not your own but the Lord's; then you would do all things, whether you eat or drink, or whatever you do, to the glory of God. And it would enrich you, too, in every way, and would bring into your daily life a dignity, a calmness, a peace, a joy, a divine glory, which now it lacks so entirely.

"'Tis he appoints our daily lot,
And he does all things well."

Yes, and if we receive the appointment of our daily work as from his hand, and for his glory, and do it as unto him, we shall no longer be in the false position of acknowledging in word that we are not our own, while yet living as if we were our own, and saying we have no particular work for Jesus.

What then shall you do? Begin aright at once. Accept the fact that he has appointed you your daily lot, and do it well; that you belong to him in fact in your daily lot, and that the lot which he has appointed you is his work given you to do for him. Do this and you will no longer think or say that you have no particular work to do for Jesus. You will have a particular work for him, and it will be a very precious one, too, both to yourself and to him, and you will find yourself blessed in it as you never yet dreamed you could be in anything this side of the kingdom of heaven.

Keeping books is very dry work. One whom I knew found it so, and longed to get out of it. At last his work became an awful drudgery. He was doing it for himself, and this weighed him down. The only relief was that he had his mother and sister to support. They, however, were to him only like the ball and chain of the prisoner, holding him from escape to something better.

The book-keeper, however, was told he might turn over a new leaf, and begin keeping books as unto the Lord. who had given it him to do, not for himself, but as his particular work for Jesus, and he did so. Then his drudgery was immediatly turned into love-service, and the dry work became full of the sweetness of contentment, gratitude, and delight.

Plowing in rocky, rooty soil is no easy work. And if the horses are restive, and break harness and plow, again and again, it is provoking as well as hard. A small farmer on a rough farm, well known to me, found this to be true. His patience was not equal to it, and his temper broke worse than harness or plow.

A change came, however, while he was in the middle of his worst field. He gave himself up to Jesus as quite too difficult for himself to control; and gave up also his horses, harness, plow and field—all up and all over into the hands of Jesus as his own, and began work as a farmer for Jesus.

He had not the least pre-conception of the difference this transfer would make. Really it made himself, and his horses, harness, and plow—yes, and his farm, too, with all its rocks and roots—over anew; all the old ill-temper, impatience, and complaining of his lot passed away, and all things became new. He sang as he followed the plow as if his lot had been that of an angel, and praised God for roots and rocks, and all other provocations, as the very things that served to make manifest the greatness of his power in keeping those who believe. And his heart was full of thanksgiving for the particular work in the particular spot, given him by the Lord as his own particular work for Jesus.—Rev. W. E. Boardman, in Times of Refreshing.

The Old Hundredth.

This unique psalm tune first appeared in John Calvin's "French Psalter," published at Geneva, in 1548, as the "proper tune" to the 134th Psalm. Guilleaume Franc was musical editor of this work. He was a master in music, and yet all that will be found in ordinary musical history regarding him is that he was an 'obscure musician of Strasbourg, of the sixteenth century." The Church owes him not a few of her finest melodies. A melody in Luther's great psalter, published from 1524 to 1560, seems to have suggested the ideas of this inimitable chorale. One of Luther's hymns of eight unequal lines, which was set to a melody of the Moravian or Waldensian early church, contains the elements of the Old Hundredth. But these are reset and remodeled by Franc, who left Strasbourg, and became "canteur," or precentor, to Theodore Beza, at Lausanne. He subsquently settled and died at Geneva, leaving as his imperishable monument the music of the "French Psalter." The music was afterward adapted to the Hundredth Psalm, in the first "English Psalter" ever published, edited by John Calvin, and printed for the use of the congregation of English-speaking refugees at Geneva, in 1556, of which, at that time, John Knox was minister. The musical editor of the Psalter was Claude Goudimel, of Rome, who suffered martyrdom at Lyons, at the time of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, because he had set the English psalms to music. This Geneva-English Psalter was reprinted in 1563-4 by "John Day, over the pump in Aldgate," and Andrew Hart, in Edinburgh, and laid the foundation of the psalmody of the Protestant churches of the world. The words of this psalter contained first thirty-seven psalms, written by Sternhold and Hopkins, the remainder being written by ten of the refugees at Geneva. William Keith, from Aberdeen, wrote the "Hundredth Psalm." This psalter, words and music, was for some time universally used by the Protestant churches of England and Scotland. When Oliver Cromwell got the Westminster General Assembly of Divines to prepare a new version of the psalms in common meter, for the use of the churches, the Parliament sanctioned it, the English church at once adopted it, but the Scottish people rebelled, on the ground that they had already a better psalter of their own. Cromwell had to come to a compromise with the hardy Scots. (The only other compromise he ever made was with Cameron of Lochiel, when he and his army got bewildered in the wilds of Lochabar.) This compromise was, that in Scotland a number of their favorite psalms from the old psalter might be published as second editions. This was done, and the music is thus called "old"—the Old First, Old Forty-fourth, Old Hundredth, Old Hundred and Thirty-fourth, Old Hundred and Thirty-seventh, etc.—Boston Transcript.

To Whom Shall We Go?

Jesus Christ is the Lord Treasurer of heaven and earth, as Joseph in Egypt; if any one would have corn they must goe to Joseph for it; if they came to Pharaoh but for a peck or a gallon, presently he sent them to Joseph. So the Lord sends all that would have any drop of mercy to his Sonne; if ye will not goe to my Sonne, yee shall not have one drop, yee shall dye in your sinnes. No salvation but onely by believing in his name; he hath all the seven spirits of God; no spirit of grace at all can be had but onely by him; he was the rock that Moses must stand on, that the glory of God's goodness might passe before him.—Old Author.

Punctuality.

Few things are so important in life as a just estimate of the value of time. Every thing in a course of education should promote its attainment. It will be learned or unlearned, practically, every day. If a teacher is in his place at the minute; if he has every scholar in his place; if he has all the instruments and apparatus ready, down to the chalk, the pointer. and the blackboard wiper; if he goes steadily on, without interval or hesitation; if he excludes all other topics but the one before him; if he uses his time up to the last drop—such a one is teaching the true value of time as no sermon can teach it.

Nothing is more incumbent on teachers than perfect punctuality. To be late one minute is to lose five. To lose a lesson is to unsettle a week. Children are ready enough to "run for luck." They count upon a teacher's failures and turn them into claims. At the same time none are so severe, in their construction of uncertainty in teachers. as those who take advantage of it. It is with children as with servants—none are such task-masters.

Great minds, like Heaven, are pleased in doing good, though the ungrateful subjects of their favors are barren in return —Rowe.

Books of the Old Testament.

If our young readers will commit the following little poem to memory it will enable them to recollect the order in which the books of the Old Testament stand, and this they will find of great advantage to them in after life:

The Great Jehovah speaks to us
In Genesis and Exodus;
Leviticus and Numbers, see,
Followed by Deuteronomy.
Joshua and Judges sway the land,
Ruth gleans a sheaf with trembling hand,
Samuel and numerous kings appear,
Whose Chronicles we wondering hear.
Ezra and Nehemiah, now,
Esther the beauteous mourner show;
Job speaks in sighs, David in Psalms,
The Proverbs teach to scatter alms;
Ecclesiastes then comes on,
And the sweet Song of Solomon;
Isaiah, Jeremiah then,
With Lamentations, takes his pen;
Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea's lyres,
Swell Joel, Amos, Obadiah's—
Next Jonah, Micah, Nahum come,
And lofty Habakkuk finds room;
While Zephaniah, Haggai calls,
Wrapt Zechariah builds the walls—
And Malachi, with garments rent,
Concludes the ancient Testament.—[Ex.

Letter from John Ruskin to Girls.

Not long since, John Ruskin, the famous English art critic and author, received a letter from a little girl. The following is an extract from his reply:

"The first order is always, in whatever you do, endeavor to please Christ (and He is quite easily pleased if you try), but, in attempting this, you will instantly find yourself likely to displease many of your friends or relations; hence, the second order is that, in whatever you do, you consider what is kind and dutiful to them also; and that you hold it for a sure rule that no manner of disobedience to your parents, or of disrespect and presumption toward your friends can be pleasing to God. You must, therefore, be doubly submissive; first, in your own will and purpose, to the law of Christ; then, in the carrying out of your purpose, to the pleasure and orders of the persons whom he has given you for superiors. And you are not to submit to them sullenly, but joyfully and heartily, keeping, nevertheless, your own purpose clear, so soon as it becomes proper for you to carry it out. Under these conditions, here are a few orders to begin with:

Keep absolute calm of temper under all chances, receiving everything that is provoking or disagreeable to you as coming directly from Christ's hand! and the more it is like to provoke you, thank him for it the more: as a young soldier would his general for trusting him with a hard place to hold on the rampart. And remember it does not in the least matter what happens to you, whether a clumsy school-fellow tears your dress, or a shrewd one laughs at you, or the governess doesn't understand you. The one thing needful is that none of these things should vex you. For your mind, at this time of your youth, is crystallizing like sugar-candy, and the least jar to it flaws the crystal, and that permanently.

A little girl who was sent to the pasture to drive home the cow fell and was severely scratched and bruised. On returning home, she was asked if she cried when she fell. "Why, no," she replied, "what would have been the use? There was nobody to hear me."

How Indians Cure Meat and Dress Skins.

When her lord has killed a buffalo the woman's work begins. She has to skin it, the meat to secure, and all to pack upon ponies or mules and carry to camp, where the meat must be cured. This is done by cutting it into thin sheets and hanging it over poles in the hot sunshine, where it is soon dried thoroughly; then it is packed fresh in packages of about one hundred pounds each, and enclosed in a nice folding sack of thick buffalo skin, prepared especially for the purpose. This is not dressed down thin after being fleshed, but well tanned and of the full thickness of the skin; the hair side nicely ornamented with paint, for the outside of the sack. This is cut out like a huge envelope, so that the ends and sides will fold over whatever is put in them, and secured by strong buckskin strings. By being thick it retains its form, and is very useful for carrying other things besides meat and tallow. After the meat is taken care of the skin must be looked after. Those taken in the warm season are mostly dressed for lodges. They are first staked on a smooth spot of ground, and water put upon them, when they are ready for fleshing. This consists in removing the flesh with an instrument made of a straight bar of iron, about a foot in length, flattened at one end and filed to an edge. This being grasped in the hand and a succession of quick blows given, the work slowly proceeds. The skin is then dried, after which the hair is removed in a dry state, and the skin reduced to the proper thickness by dressing down on the hair side. This is done with an instrument made by firmly tying a flat piece of steel, filed to a beveled edge at one end, and with the corners rounded, to a large prong of a deer's horn. This is so trimmed, in connection with the body of the horn, as to form an elbow, and is used a little as a carpenter uses his adze. This work is usually done in the cool of the morning. The brains of the animal, having been properly taken care of for the purpose, are now soaked and squeezed by the hand until reduced to a paste, and applied to both sides of the skin, which is afterward worked and rubbed until flexible. The preparation of robes is from winter skins, and differs from the foregoing only in being dressed down on the flesh side, so as to leave the wool and hair upon the robe, and is more thoroughly worked, and scoured by means of a sharp-gritted stone.—Battey.

The Loaf of Bread.

In a time of famine, a rich man allowed twenty of the poorest children in town to come to his house, and said to them: "In this basket there is a loaf of bread for each of you; take it, and come again at the same hour every day till God sends better times."

The children pounced upon the basket, struggled and fought over the bread, because each wished to have the largest and best loaf; and then they went away without a word of thanks to their friend.

But Francesca, a little girl, meanly though neatly dressed, stood at a distance, and gratefully took the loaf that was left in the basket, which was the smallest; then she kissed the good man's hand, and went quietly home.

The next day the children were just as naughty and ill-behaved, and this time there was left for poor Francesca a loaf that was hardly half as large as the others. But when she reached home, and her mother cut the bread, there fell out a number of new pieces of silver. The mother was frightened and said: "Take back the money this moment; for it is certainly in the bread by mistake."

Francesca took it back. But the kind man said: "It is no mistake my good child; I had the money baked in the smallest loaf in order to reward you. Be always as contented and yielding as you now are. He who is contented with the smallest loaf, rather than quarrel for the largest, will receive abundant blessings."—Children's Prize.

Mr. Editor:—In the Christian Cynosure of Jan. 18, 1877, there was one verse of poetry with the vowels missing, and I don't think any one has sent an answer to it yet. Sister and I have supplied the missing vowels. Please tell us if we are right:

Do not stand idly waiting
For some great work to do:
Improve each passing moment,
For the moments may be few.
Go and toil in any vineyard;
Do not fear to do or dare;
If you want a field of labor,
You can find it anywhere.

ANSWER TO VERSE IN MARCH 1, 1877.

Neath a spacious top light
An artist was eating his supper one night;
Not a star nor a cloud in the sky to be seen,
Though the window above was perfectly clean;
So clear was the light, and polished so bright,
That plainly were viewed by the lamp's brilliant light,
The artist, his wife, and the child of their love,
The table and dishes all mirrored above.
Oh, mamma, I see God way up in the sky,
And he is eating his supper of bread and mince pie;
He looks like papa, his eyes are so blue,
And, mamma, his wife looks exactly like you.
A nice little girl I see,
And she is laughing at me;
She holds in her hand a cup full of water;
I wonder, mama, if it's God's little daughter.

We all love your paper, and pa has been turned out of the M. E. church because he does not believe in secret societies.

Dear Mr. Editor:—I will send you a puzzle which, if you think worth while, please publish. I also send an answer to Carrie Moon's enigma. It is my pa's name, "S. P. Poole." He takes your paper, and likes it very much.

I am composed of nine letters.
My first is in peg but not in nail,
My second in zebra but not in horse,
My third is in rise but not in fall,
My fourth is in peach but not in plum,
My fifth is in rat but not in mouse,
My sixth is in cape but not in hood,
My seventh is in house but not in barn,
My eighth is in wagon but not in gig,
My ninth is in keep but not in give.
My whole is productive of more light than the "old handmaid" desires.

God bless your paper. Your little friend,

A Short Sermon

On the Duty of Christians in Relation to the Houses they Live in.

BY THOMAS FILER.

Text: "He that provideth not (a comfortable dwelling) for his own household hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

The Christian's home being the grand primary temple where the great first principles of our holy religion must be taught, in order to save the world, no one can doubt that it is one of the first duties of every Christian house-holder to see to it that his or her home is a little paradise, so far as it is in their power to make it so. But this is far from being the case with a large majority of the houses of both Christians and infidels in this enlightened land.

But it may be said that our Christian forefathers lived in much worse houses than we do. Were they therefore sinners above all men? By no means. They probably lived up to the light they had, and were therefore excusable. But this is our condemnation, that light is come into the world on this subject, and we disregard it.

The Patriarch Abraham, King David, and many other excellent men of ancient times, did many things, the which if we should do them we should make ourselves as bad as a Mormon, and worse than an infidel. Some of our very remote ancestors were not ashamed to go entirely naked, and I suppose dwelt in the open air, without any house. But who will pretend that it would be proper for us to do so?

Who then can be saved? I answer, "With men it is impossible, but with God all things are possible." "The times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent."

Fullersburg, Ill.

How to Run a Hard Coal Stove.—There is a lamentable amount of ignorance displayed in the management of coal stoves, and the result is an unnecessary waste of fuel and an uneven supply of heat. The principal mistake is made in the manner of replenishing, and the Miners' Journal offers the following advice on the subject: Furnaces or grates should be fed with a little coal at a time, and often; but, servants, to save time and trouble, put on a great deal at once, the first result being that almost all the heat is absorbed by the newly put on coal, which does not give out heat until it has become red hot. Hence, for a while the room is cold, but when it becomes fairly aglow the heat is insufferable. The time to replenish a coal fire is as soon as the coals begin to show ashes on their surface; then put on merely enough to show a layer of black coal covering the red. This will soon kindle, and, as there is not much of it, an excess of heat will not be given out. Many also put out the fire by stirring the grate as soon as fresh coal is put on, thus leaving all heat in the ashes when it should be sent to the new supply of coal. The time to stir the fire is just when the new coal laid on is pretty well kindled. This method of managing a coal fire is troublesome, but it saves fuel, gives a uniform heat, and prevents the discomforts of alternation of heat and cold above referred to.—Ex.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

FAITH, THE SOURCE OF FAITHFULNESS.

SERMON BY REV. JOSEPH COOK.

The readers of the Cynosure have become somewhat familiar with the name of this great preacher through the letters of Rev. H. T. Cheever and others descriptive of his Boston lectures. He has been aiding Mr. Moody heartily, preaching in the Tabernacle frequently on Monday evenings. The following discourse delivered March 12th, from the Boston Globe, is a specimen of his convincing logic and eloquence:

"At midday, O King, I saw on the way a great light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them that journeyed with me, and when we were all fallen to the earth I heard a voice speaking unto me and saying, I am Jesus, and I send thee to the Gentiles to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, an inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me."

The topic to-night is "Faith, the source of faithfulness." The text is, "Sanctified by faith," in the eighteenth verse of the twenty-sixth chapter of Acts. Who are faithful? Those who have faith. What is faith? That which makes a man faithful. These majestic words are our Lord's own, and when faith is discussed we ought to take the intonations which came to Paul out of a light bright above the brightness of the noon, for there is not in the Scripture any more majestic proclamation as to the nature and the necessity of faith than this passage constituting Paul as a teacher of the globe in religion. After hearing this message from the unseen holy, "I," says Paul, "was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, but taught first those at Jerusalem and then those elsewhere, repentance, faith and the sanctification which is the result of both." We must never forget that our Lord had many things to say to his disciples after he left the world, and that this supreme proclamation of the necessity of faith made to Paul when his apostleship began, is a proclamation equally for you and me here in Boston to-night. Many of us have a kind of faith that doesn't sanctify us. To-night I wish to be very elementary, and therefore I must speak from human example, in order that, drawing nigh in the daylight, we may not be dazzled by the glory of the atonement until we are bewildered, as many a philosopher has been in Boston and elsewhere.

ALCOTT'S DISCIPLINE.

I propose to take a Boston school, that of a great philosopher whose name ought always to be mentioned with that of Emerson—I have done so already, once at Concord, in his presence—Professor Alcott, who has had some of the subtlest thoughts that ever were put before New England. Once, on the slope of Beacon Hill yonder, he had a school of children, and it was his theory that the child brings into the world a nature comparatively pure. He wanted to let that nature have its course so far as it was wise. He looked with reverence on the outfit that comes into the world with us. It wrought earnestness into the warp and woof at this school. What did he do under the impulse of that earnestness? He made a rule that whenever a child violated the regulations of the school the master should take the chastisement instead of inflicting punishment on the child. Bronson Alcott told me this himself, and said that one regulation almost Christianized the school. "I remember," said he, "a rude boy who had violated some proper regulation, and was brought before me for punishment. I extended my own hand; I put into his hands a ruler and told him to strike. The boy was apparently moved from head to foot. The very innermost fibers of his nature seemed to be taken hold of by this new kind of discipline. His face began to have in it struggling emotions, and a new sort of light appeared to begin the instant he saw my extended hand and heard my command to give me chastisement." This is not a story out of the newspapers. It does not come from Greece. It is not a thing to be guessed at. It is a fact; it is actual history in Boston. That is the way human nature is made here in New England; here on Beacon Hill. And my impression is that human nature is just the same everywhere. If Bronson Alcott had done that with a Greek boy the effect would have been the same. It would have been the same with a Brahmin boy, a negro boy, or an Esquimaux boy. Alcott saw everything in the boy begin to be woven by a different set of shuttles the moment he got his eye on that condescension of authority. Now, will you be so kind, my most restless and unbelieving friends, as to take a little arc of the moral law revealed to you in the example and extend it through the whole circumference of the circle? You say that law is a unit everywhere. You say that physical law is the same here and among the stars. You say that if you know what gravitation is here you know what it is in the North Star. Now, if physical law is the same thing everywhere,

MORAL LAW IS THE SAME THING EVERYWHERE,

and you, standing on the atom we call earth, can take a little arc of the physical law and estimate what that law is everywhere. You may take a little arc of the moral law and estimate what that is everywhere, and you are just as scientific in the last act as in the first. So our Lord assumes in his parables that the moral law is the same everywhere. Now it is not enough for me to say that this boy would have been affected just as he was if he had been a Greek or an Italian or an Esquimaux boy. I think he would have been affected just as he was if he had been a lost angel. Any free being anywhere in the universe would have been affected in just that way. I cannot think that the moral law is so very different in other worlds, that I have not the right to draw an inference as to what it is from its operation here by extending the circumference of it from any arc I can accurately measure. Now, I say that was a natural operation of the boy's mind when he saw the master extend his hand for chastisement; it was natural for him to be moved as he could not be in any other way. Moved to what? Moved to shame, in view of his own transgression; moved to reverence of and love for the master; moved to loyalty to that rule which he had broken. Bronson Alcott told me that the boy struck his hand once. This was here in Boston, positively, there is no doubt about it. People say that all illustrations of the atonement are imagination, taken out of some doubtful corner of the newspapers; but, if you please, this occurred in Boston among the philosophers, and to a Concord philosopher. I have tears sometimes, and sometimes groans for that style of unrest which will not believe the deep instincts of the soul, which draws down upon itself God's supreme curse of blindness, because it will not use the light it has, which, by sinning against the light, loses all the light it possesses. Now, I say that we all know that it is natural for human nature looking on the chastisement of a ruler for the punishment of the subject to feel two things: first, that the violation of the law is not excused, that there is no letting down of the dignity of the law at all; and secondly, that there could not be brought to bear upon the rebellious subject any motive so likely to win him to loyalty as does that substitution of the ruler for the punishment of the subject. There is not anything known to philosophy, or imagination, or to human experience that takes hold of the soul like that. That is fact. It is just as much a fact as anything about geological strata. And it is just as hard a fact, and will bear the microscope and the scalpel just as well. We are made so that that sight which Bronson Alcott saw takes hold of us. I am not asking now whether an atonement has ever been made, but I do say that if one has been made on that principle, then that is what we want, for that is what will take hold of us as nothing else can. That is what is to be held up above all philosophy; that is what is to be placed over Beacon Hill and the North End. That is what is to be told over and over, in all ways, until men gazing on that spectacle are transformed by the gaze into loyalty—into glad allegiance to their Saviour as their King. My friends, I am not ashamed of the power of that natural law which lies behind what we call

THE PRINCIPLE OF THE ATONEMENT.

I am not ashamed of the cross of Christ, for it is, as we look on it in all the rays that proceed out of it, a part of the nature of things, and it takes hold of us according to natural law, transforming us as we gaze upon it into entire loyalty to him who has taken chastisement in place of our punishment. But somebody says that Christianity teaches that in the atonement an innocent being must be punished, and that personal demerit is transferred from one being to another. Please be clear about that. I put it to you as a matter of plain common sense. Was Professor Alcott in that case guilty of anything? Was he in a strict sense made to suffer the punishment? Was the personal demerit of that pupil transferred to Bronson Alcott? You have been told for fifty years in this city that Christianity as comprehended by those who teach it here, is demoralizing, because it teaches that an innocent being was punished, and that it is unscientific because it teaches that personal demerit was transferred from the sinner to an innocent being, and transferrence of personal demerit is an impossibility in the nature of things. Was the demerit of this boy transferred to Bronson Alcott? Not at all. Was Bronson Alcott in any sense punished? Not at all. What did happen? The master of that school substituted his voluntary, sacrificial chastisement for the punishment due to that pupil. What happened then? After that substitution could you ask that that pupil be punished again? Suppose the boy, after going back to his seat, had been called up again and punished, would the school have said that was right? But still the boy's demerit has not been transferred; the master is not to blame, there cannot be any transferrence of personal demerit from that boy to that master, but that master can pay the debt that boy owed to the school. Isn't that clear, straightforward reasoning? And when some of these long-eared infidels endeavor to bring on you a mist on this thing, just make a distinction between chastisement and punishment, between the impossibility of transferring personal demerit and the perfectly plain possibility of having the obligation to pay the penalty of a violated law transferred. Guilt, in the sense of its being transferred to another, cannot be removed. But Boston says that evangelical Christianity teaches that you can. This is one of the most ghastly of all misconceptions. Hundreds and thousands in our educated circles have not been taught what clear thought is about religion. Bronson Alcott's experiment illustrates two things. That boy goes back to his seat of the school. How? By his good works? No. Without good works? No. You say it is a mystery that people preach when they say a man is not saved by good works and yet not saved without them. That boy has violated the law, he has seen his master's substituted chastisement for his punishment, and he goes back to his seat at peace, and you cannot demand from him another payment of the debt; but would that payment be of any value if the boy were to lose loyalty to that master? If you can suppose that the boy would disregard that supreme exhibition and fall into his old ways, do you think that he could quote the substituted chastisement as a ground of peace? It is not in natural law that he could, and it is not in Christianity that he could. It is not taught anywhere in the Bible that he could. It is not taught anywhere in the Bible that men can be saved except by loyalty to God as our King as well as our Saviour. You say that the Bible says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and be saved." But to believe and believe in or on are two very different things. Many a statement of a bad man I can believe, but there is not a bad man that I can believe in. I believe Congress when it puts forth a public statement, but I don't believe in Congress—at least not in all the members of it. There is an immense difference between believing and believing in. Saving faith means the glad acceptance of Christ as our prophet, priest and king.

AT PEACE WITH THE LAW

For a last thought, let me point out the difference between faith and belief. Two sets of soldiers, one Federal and one Confederate, hear the news of Lee's surrender. They may both believe it. But there is no virtue or vice whatever in their merely believing the fact. But the Federal soldiers hear it, believe it and are glad. The Confederate soldiers believe it and are sorry. The virtue and the vice are in the attitude of the heart. We all hear that Christ is our Saviour and our Lord. But we are not all glad. I should give as a set definition of saving faith, the conviction of the intellect that God in Christ is, and the affectionate choice of the heart that he should be both our Saviour and our Lord. The first half of that definition is mere belief, the whole of it is faith. The whole of it, without the last two words, would be nothing but a mere sentimentality, it would not be enough to save the heart.

Let us close then, my friends, by gazing once more on the clearness of these stupendous truths that lie behind for the subject. In Russia a gentleman was driving in his sleigh with his wife and children, when one of them started and said, "What is it I hear? It is not the wind in the trees." It grows more distinct and fiercer. The father listened and found it was two great packs of wolves, and then said to his little ones, "You must say your prayers and fall asleep." They said their prayers but they didn't go to sleep. They were five miles distant from a place of safety. Holding the reins with a steady hand, and driving at a fearful speed, the father catches the gleam of their eyes as they come eagerly and hungrily on, and shoots down many of their number. But the death of their mates only infuriated the rest. On still they came, panting for blood, and their number was so great that it was evident death must be close at hand unless some unexpected rescue came. At last, when they were close upon the sleigh, the father gave his servant the order to cut through the traces and let one of the horses go. And he did it, and one horse fell back, and for a time the wolves were left behind. But soon they were heard again in hot pursuit, and once more they were about to leap on the sleigh, when the master gave his servant orders to cut the other traces and let the other horse go. It was quickly done, and the second horse fell behind and was killed. They were nearing a place of safety now, and the sleigh kept on its course—it was all down hill. But before they could reach shelter the wolves were upon them again. Nevertheless they reached it, but when they came to look around they found their servant, who had been in the family all his life, was gone. At the very spot where the danger had been greatest he had given his own life; and there, next day, they found a few bits of human clothing and a few bones to tell of his fate, while his blood stained the snow all around. All that was left of him they gathered together, and over these few remains they erected a monument, and on the monument put these words: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man should lay down his life for his friend." All the world is such a monument.

Rev. Mr. Cook and Mr. Moody have both recently called attention to the great national duties, as well as grief and suffering that this country has twice been apparently prepared for in a preceding religious awakening. The great revival under Whitefield and Edwards, in 1740, preceded the Revolutionary struggle, and that of 1857 preceded our civil war. Is God leading us up to other scenes like those through this spiritual awakening and purifying? It is a solemn question. Let us give it solemn attention. Whatever may be in store for us, whether war, or famine, or pestilence, only God's saving presence can enable us to meet it safely. Let us seek that presence, and then, whatever comes, whether it be prosperity and blessing, or the reverse, all will be well.—Morning Star.

REVIVAL IN YORKVILLE, WIS.

Editor Cynosure:—

DEAR SIR:—The special meetings which are being held in the B. C. church here are well attended, and much good has already been accomplished. The Holy Spirit has been poured out upon the church and congregation, and quite a number of young people have given their hearts unto the Lord. We have had some blessed meetings. There has not been any wild-fire, rant, or noise, but we have an abiding, clear, satisfactory evidence of the presence and power of God with us. He is moving by his spirit upon the hearts of a great many. I hope they will soon come to Christ, and by trusting in him be saved from sin. There is a great work to be done here. Very few in this place have been converted here during the last decade. Special prayer has been offered, and great anxiety has, and still is being felt, on behalf of the young. I believe we shall have, by the blessing of God, a great revival here.

Yours, truly, W. R. ROACH.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Christian Convention in Boston, in connection with Mr. Moody's work, was held last week, with large delegations from all over New England and New York city. It is said that Moody and Sankey will remain in Boston until June. Several cities are trying to get them next, Hartford, New Haven, Amherst, Mass., Montreal and San Francisco among the number.

The ninth biennial Sabbath (First day) School Conference of the Friends will be held in Plainfield, Ind., during the coming autumn.

—Pan-Presbyterianism is to hold its first general meeting in Edinburgh in July, and if all the branches of the family tree are represented it will overshadow all previous assemblies. Among those expected to go from the United States are Drs. Adams, Crosby, Schaff, Dickson, McCosh, Van Dyke, Eells, Moses Hoge, Stuart Robinson, J. B. Alger, Messrs. Wm. E. Dodge, Stanley Matthews, Judge Olds and others.

—Miss Smiley, who assisted Mr. Moody for a time in Boston in a supplementary woman's meeting has been holding daily Bible readings in this city for the past fortnight, while Miss Willard, formerly at the head of the women's temperance work here, has taken up the work in Boston.

—Major Whittle's work continues in this city with unabated success. He leads the noon prayer meeting in Farwell Hall and preaches or holds a Bible reading in one of the churches in the evening.

—The activity of Christians here seems rather to increase than otherwise. New fields are opened and entered in the name of Christ. A continued work of grace is being carried on at the Bethel Home, under the superintendence of Benjamin Frankland, a Friend, and the free lodging house work has attracted other helpers beside the old Yorkshireman who first began to tell the story of the Cross to these miserably poor after he had broken his few loaves of bakers' bread among them.

—The Reformed Presbyterian Congregation of Pittsburg (Rev. Dr. Milligan's), lately held an unusually interesting meeting. This congregation has taken from twelve to 18 of the Chinamen in the city as pupils, instructing them in the rudiments of English literature, and in the doctrines of the Christian faith. They are attentive and diligent students, and make rapid progress. Not long ago five of these students returned to their native land, able to read the Bible intelligently and believers in its truths. February 12 is the first day of the Chinese year, and as a testimonial of their gratitude to the congregation, especially to the ladies, their teachers, they prepared a handsome banquet and invited all to partake of it in the lecture-room. There, with Chinese and English songs, and social intercourse they passed the evening, exhibiting at least one means of doing good and reaching the heathen element lying at our doors, but so soon certainly to return to its native land.- Ex.

—The revival at Asbury University, Greencastle, Ind. has been the means of adding two hundred students to the church.

—The Advance reports over 2,000 additions to the Congregational churches of the country at the communion service, March 4.

—Week after week the Religious Telescope publishes brief reports of revivals in the United Brethren churches, filling three or four columns weekly. The last number notices a good work in Ligonier, Ind., with 71 accessions; at Warrington, where Rev. Halleck Floyd assisted, the additions were 109; at Money Creek chapel, Ill., Rev. M. Ambrose assisted, and there were 16 conversions. Rev. D. B. Keller reports a dedication at Ransom, O., which desperate Masonic influences attempted to break up, but without avail; the fine brick church was consecrated and the debt cleared off. At Walla Walla, Mission, there have been many conversions, but Masonic opposition is active to prevent union with a testifying church.

OBITUARY.

REV. RICHARD HORTON, author of the "Image of the Beast," a work of high standing in our reform literature is dead. The following from the Wesleyan is the only notice we have received:

Rev. Richard Horton, the gifted preacher, the pure patriot, the faithful author, the President of the Central Ohio Conference is dead. He had during the past year, been reanointed in the holy work of the ministry, with the mysterious and mighty unction of the Holy Spirit. Coming home from unusual labors in a revival meeting, where a great victory for Christ had been gained, he announced to his family that God had given him "an honorable discharge," and in a short time his failing strength gave entirely out, when in great tranquility he passed within the portals of a pure and perfect peace.

There never was such a really good, substantial, satisfactory, and rapid selling Sewing Machine offered so low as the "NEW FAMILY SHUTTLE," at $30. It surpasses expectations, and fulfills all the requirements of every Family as a helper. It will do every description of work—fine or coarse—that any machine, at any price, ever did, or can do; equally as rapid, correct, smooth, neat, and strong. Has all the late improvements, is easy to learn and manage, is serviceable, don't wear out, always ready, and never out of order. Agents make money rapidly, supplying the great demand for this the Cheapest Machine in the World. Territory free. Address, A. CATELY & Co., Cor. Broadway and Eighth St., New York.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK.

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M.E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year 1876 were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

FREEMASONRY EXPOSED,

by CAP'T. WILLIAM MORGAN.

THE GENUINE OLD MORGAN BOOK:—republished with engravings showing the Lodge Room, Dress of candidates, Signs, Due Guards, Grips, Etc.

This revelation is so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. Thousands have testified to the correctness of the revelation and this book therefore sells very rapidly.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

THE ANTI-MASON'S SCRAP BOOK, CONSISTING OF 21 CYNOSURE TRACTS.

In this book are the views of more than a Score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of Secret Societies.

The dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized Secrecy is here shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public.

Lecturers and others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.

Publishers' Department.

The last week has been an encouraging one. A friend residing in Indiana sends twenty dollars to be expended in sending the Cynosure to different persons for three months each.

P. Bacon, Weatogue, Ct., sends a club of 33 subscribers for six months and one for three months and writes:

"Through the help of earnest Christian friends at Putnam, I am enabled to send you a list of 32 names from Putnam, Windham Co., Ct., and two from Pomfret, Ct. I do believe that these papers in connection with the prayers that are being offered will accomplish great results."

Wm. Kiteley, Sharon, Wis., sends a club of one for one year and five for six months.

D. B. Heckert, Ogden Center, Mich., sends a club of five for a year and one for three months.

L. Monteith, Martin, Mich., writes: "As soon as I get time I will take a trip out and try to get up a club for the Cynosure. I hope to get five and if possible ten names."

Rev. F. Fisher, Mt. Pleasant, Pa., writes: "I will send other names soon."

Remember a list of ten thousand subscribers is our aim for the Cynosure this year, and this object can only be accomplished by persevering and earnest efforts.

Let us be thankful for the work of the past week, and take courage for the future.

Who will send in a club next week? How many will send in one new subscriber? Every one helps the subscription list and the reform.

—The statistics of the Congregational Churches of the United States, as given in the Quarterly, show a net increase of 12,345 members in 1876; the increase of churches is 71, which is above the average yearly increase for 19 years. The increase of members is the greatest ever reported. The total of members is 350,658; of ministers, 3,333; of churches, 3,509. Of the ministers, only 1,783 are settled pastors; the others are acting pastors or supplies. The whole amount contributed for the support of foreign missions in 1876 was $456,862; for home missions, $383,632.

Bright little four-year-old Lulu was very much afraid in the dark, and for that reason had great dread of bed-time. Complaining of this to a friend one day, she was told that if she would remember always that darkness and light are alike to God, she would no longer be afraid. The next morning, upon entering the breakfast room, the little one exclaimed: "Well, Mrs. ——, I was 'fraid again last night!" "Why, how was that?" asked the lady, "did you not remember what I told you?" "Oh, yes," replied Lulu; "I 'membered it, but the 'fraid is in me, and can't be got out of me."

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

Discontinuances.

Unless we receive orders to stop the paper sooner, we continue the Cynosure a full month after the time expires. Those wishing their paper discontinued are requested to notify us AT THE TIME THEIR SUBSCRIPTIONS EXPIRE.

ADDRESS all letters with subscriptions or orders for books, tracts, and donations to the tract fund, to Ezra A. Cook & Co., No. 13 Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Renewals.

The date at which subscriptions expire, is with each subscriber's name on the address label.

Please send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if the date is changed to correspond soon; if not, or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

IOWA AND SECRETISM.—The Iowa State Convention, opposed to secret societies, will meet at Oskaloosa April 24. This place is a stronghold of Masonry, and the writer hopes the churches and societies will be fully represented, and that everybody will come who can come. Let not the enemy laugh at our insignificant numbers. It is desired that all who intend coming will send in their names in due time, so that arrangements can be made for entertainment. Address

R. A. McAYEAL,
Oskaloosa, Iowa.

REFORMERS OF MICHIGAN, ATTENTION!

There is to be a quarterly meeting of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies to be held in Howell, Livingston county, April 24th and 25th, commencing at 2 P. M. Tuesday, the 24th. All reformers are expected to be in attendance. Preparations are being made to accommodate all with a home who are from a distance. By order of COMMITTEE.

CALIFORNIA—ANNUAL MEETING.

An annual meeting of the committee and friends of the anti secrecy cause in California will be held, Providence permitting, in Sacramento, commencing Tuesday, April 10th, at 1 P. M., at Central Hall, south side of K street. As quite a number of the friends are determined, by the grace of God, to engage a lecturer this year, and liberally subscribe to the lecture fund, and as we are now in correspondence with parties east, and may make the engagements by that time, it is important that as many of the friends, and especially of the committee, as can possibly come, be present to help make the needed arrangements, &c. Those who cannot come, please write to the friends assembled there. Address the same to Rev. A. Musselman, Sacramento, Cal. By order of the Chairman.

PHIL. BECK, Secretary.

Thus far, Mr. Ronayne has heard from N. Gay. of Batavia, and J. B. Nessell, of Ellington, N. Y.; J. A. Conant, of Willimantic, Conn; E F. Morgan, of Middletown, Vt.; John Glen, of Dover, N. J.; A. J. McFarlnad, of Stanton, Pa., and from A. D. Carter, of Deersville, Ohio. As he is going again to Ontario in a short time, and as he proposes to proceed thence through New York State eastward, he would like to hear from other localities, and that definite arrangements be at once completed. He will visit Ohio and Pennsylvania on his way back. Address him at 104 Bremer street, Chicago, that the time for each place may be set and disappointments or delay avoided.

Mr. Ronayne is completing arrangements with friends in which to visit Union City, Coldwater, Sherwood, and Bronson. He intends, unless otherwise decided, to be at Union City on Wednesday, April 4th, from which he goes on to Ontario, and from Ontario to the East.

Topics of the Time.

Were the Rev. L. Foster, of blessed memory, now living, none would more heartily rejoice at the regard for the Sabbath and its institutions by President Hayes and family. It had been planned in Washington that the oath should be privately administered to the incoming executive at noon on Sabbath, March 4th, when Gen. Grant's term legally closed. But the better counsel of Mr. Hayes prevailed, the sanctity of the Sabbath was maintained, and the law fully satisfied by the private administration of the obligation of office on the evening before. Then, on the first Sabbath after the inauguration, what a strife to get the President's family to this or that church! One has a President's pew purchased for $5,000 which President Grant used to occupy. The telegraph and other influences were brought into play around the White House; but on the morning of that Lord's day the President and his wife quietly and on foot joined the church-going throng on the street, hardly being recognized, and made their way to a humble Methodist Episcopal church near by. He is not a professing Christian, but Mrs. Hayes is a Methodist and directs in religious preferences. Her simple good sense and piety on this occasion well recommend her to the high station she has providentially been called to fill, and is in conspicuous contrast to the Pharisaical extravagance too often displayed on the Sabbath.

Mountain Meadows begins to be revenged. In 1857 a body of Mormons and Indians met a rich emigrant train in the southwestern part of Utah; and, while acting under the guise of friendship, massacred the whole company saving two or three of the children. After twenty years the leader of the Mormon band, John D. Lee, was led out last Friday upon the same fatal plain and shot under the execution of the law—the nearest approach to poetic justice our courts have lately known. It is yet a question whether Brigham Young himself was not the instigator of the massacre. Lee, in a written confession, says it was by Young's order; and claims, moreover, that the high priest of Mormon Masonry had found it necessary to sacrifice some one for the good of the Mormon order and appease the unrelenting courts. Lee was the chosen victim, and the jury, part Mormon, were instructed from Salt Lake City to agree. Further developments in this drama may be yet more wonderful than the acts already finished.

Some of our liberal papers who love the beer, wine and Sunday holiday of Europe, and would force them upon us, are greatly grieved at one result in the late New Hampshire election. That State voted on a new constitution. One of the amendments proposed upon the old was the striking out of the word "Protestant" as a qualification for Governor, Senators, Representtives and Counselors. The good people of New Hampshire rejected a similar amendment in 1850, and they will do well to keep on so. Germany has been giving us some lessons we are slow to learn. The late book by our new Secretary of the Navy on "Papacy and the Civil Power," may enlighten our citizens on this question.

The New York Herald has just published letters from Stanley, written in the heart of Africa last August. He is expecting to solve the problem of the great interior river system, left unexplained by Livingston and Cameron, and thus open that interior to intelligent commerce. As to the practical results of all this exploration, the Herald says:

"Within the equatorial rainy belt of Africa and that vast extent of country known as Soudan, there are 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 of people, who, just as they are, want only a railroad to the navigable Nile or the sea coast, to give the outside world a trade of many millions of dollars. The explorer and the missionary have prepared the way for the diplomat and the complete abolition of the African slave traffic. This work has so far progressed that the railroad builder may proceed to his surveys. In England they are talking of a railway from the mouth of the Congo into the rich countries of the interior and the Egyptian Khedive is building a line into Soudan. The heart of Africa is mostly a region of grassy plains and hills, abounding in cattle, and capable of supplying all Europe with salt beef and leather, to say nothing of corn, cotton, sugar, coffee and tobacco. In a word, these African explorers are the pathfinders for new markets and new settlements for the civilized nations of the earth, and this is the work in which Stanley is engaged."

THE EXPERIENCE OF ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly, and I pray God your whole spirit soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that hath called you who also will do it. 1 Thess. 5: 23, 24.

This inspired prayer implies that the church at Thessalonica were not all wholly sanctified and that the apostle expected them to become so. And this leads to the inquiry, In what respect does the experience of the wholly sanctified differ from the experience of Christians who have not attained that experience? I answer, it is not different except in degree. True Christian experience is thus described, Rom. 5: 1, 2: "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God." Nothing short of this is true Christian experience, and nothing beyond this belongs to the highest Christian attainment. The difference is not in any particular state of feeling. Paul had "continued heaviness and great sorrow of heart," moreover there was given him "a thorn in the flesh, a minister of Satan to buffet him;" yet he was doubtless holy. Jesus was a man of sorrows, "tempted in all points like as we are and yet without sin." It is not a change in the physical nature of man so that he is no longer susceptible to the influences of evil. To speak of either regeneration or sanctification as anything but a moral change, a change in our moral nature to which we are persuaded by the Holy Spirit through the truth, is unscriptural and misleading.

In what then does this experience consist? I answer, it is a state of abiding in Christ. It is being rooted and grounded in love. It is to be like the tree planted by the river of water, whose leaf does not wither. It is to have a faith that overcomes the world. It is to have on "the whole armor of God that we may be able to stand in the evil day and having done all to stand;" and especially it is to have the "shield of faith wherewith we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked."

Now such an experience differs from the experience of those not wholly sanctified mainly in its completeness and not in being different in its nature. None of us are perfect in knowledge, but must forever grow in it,and hence forever grow in grace; but we may have a perfect confidence in Christ, and we may love him with a perfect love. All true faith in Christ works by love and purifies the heart. All who overcome do eat of the hidden manna and of the tree of life that is in the midst of the Paradise of God; but not all continually abide in Christ. Peter's faith was doubtless genuine and sincere when he asked his Lord to bid him walk to him on the water, but it was a very weak and imperfect faith. When he saw the great waves he lost his faith and began to sink. He was very sincere when he told Jesus that he would lay down his life for his sake, but he forgot this and denied him. His love was real, but imperfect; his faith was sincere and earnest, but weak. Peter's faith at Pentecost was something far beyond this. He had then that "perfect love that casteth out fear," and could declare the whole counsel of God and count it a glory that he should suffer shame for his sake.

Like him let us remember that "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect,that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, because as he is, so are we in the world. There is no fear in love for perfect love casteth out fear. He that feareth is not made perfect in love." 1 John 4: 16–18. O that we may have that perfect love which comes from perfect faith, which always makes us to triumph through our Lord Jesus Christ!

Were the Saint Johns Masons?

[Conversation between a Mason and his wife.]

Husband. Well, wife, our great celebration comes off next Wednesday. It is to be a grand affair, I can assure you. All the orders will turn out in fine style and parade, and the Knight Templars on their splendid steeds, with their plumes waving, will make a fine show. Music, an address and collation in the park will fill out the bill. I want you to prepare some refreshments, and get the children ready. Of course I cannot take you out myself, but I will get cousin James to attend to that, and we'll all have a good time.

Wife. Why, husband, you are not going to put on your gaudy regalia and that ridiculous little apron again, and march through the streets with that motley throng are you? I confess if anything could make me ashamed of you it would be this. If it were only in a good cause I might endure the humiliation.

H. Why, wife, it is one of your saints whose day we are going to celebrate; you ought to be glad to see us honor him.

W. And what right have you to claim either John the Baptist or John the Evangelist as a Freemason? If they were not Masons are you not setting up false pretences—acting out a lie? Do you really believe they were Masons? What proof have you?

H. Why, I have never investigated the subject, but of course they were, or our order would not hold to it. I presume it was handed down by tradition. You look incredulous. Can you prove that they were not Masons?

W. I think I can prove that it is absurd to suppose they were, even if Masonry existed in their day. Speculative Freemasonry had its origin in London in 1717. I know you will dissent, for this admitted, what would become of all your fine stories about King Solomon, Hiram Abiff, etc.? Indeed it would take all the poetry out of the "Ancient and honorable institution," and reduce it to a very common-place affair.

H. You don't intend to insinuate that Masonry is a humbug, do you?

W. I don't insinuate anything. I prefer to stand on facts. But let us first consider the case of John the Baptist, the saint of the coming celebration. He was the messenger foretold by Malachi several hundred years previous to his coming, who was to prepare the way for the promised Messiah. His mission was to clear away obstructions, introduce, baptize and exalt the Son of God. Born in the hill country of Judea six months before the Saviour, the Bible simply states that he "grew, waxed strong in spirit, and was in the desert till the day of his showing unto Israel." When he appeared at the age of thirty in public, was it to sport fine clothes, regalia, sheepskin aprons, etc.? No; "his raiment was of camel's hair and a leathern girdle about his loins." His voice was not confined within secret walls but flung wild and free upon the air of the Judean wilderness; it resounded with tremendous power through all that region, calling around him multitudes of men of every rank and condition in life. His stirring cry was, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." He laid the ax at the root of the tree, and told them to give up their sins; not to band together in secret associations to cover up and conceal them. He spoke to them of the coming Saviour as one whose shoe latchet he was unworthy to unloose; as one who was to increase while he was to decrease; who was to baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire. And you remember, husband, the interesting scene on the banks of the Jordan when with unfeigned humility and reluctance he administered to him the rite of baptism—how when Jesus walked out of the water the heavens opened, the dove descended and lit upon him, and a voice said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Twice after this John is mentioned as pointing to Jesus as he walked and and saying, "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." Do you suppose that after all this he ever entered a blue lodge of Masonry that virtually ignores the Son of God? Do you believe he would sanction a system that takes all sorts of men to the Grand Lodge above without any Saviour at all? Absurd! "What communion hath light with darkness, and what concord hath Christ with Belial." Not very long after this he incurred the anger of Herod by boldly reproving him for his gross immorality; was cast into prison, and lost his head through the influence of Herod's partner in guilt. Husband! do you believe that a man of that stamp ever knelt down in a lodge and swore that he would keep a Master Mason's secrets as secure and inviolate in his breast as his own, murder and treason only excepted; or that he would swear not to violate—

H. (Interrupting). Why, wife, where did you get hold of that stuff? Have you been listening—I mean I fear that you have got hold of some of those vile tracts, that some hot-headed fanatics have been industriously circulating of late. You must not suppose that we really promise any such things.

W. I think if I had listened, as you unwittingly admit, I should have heard those very words, but you have not only taken away the key of Masonic knowledge from us women but you guard the key-hole. So I did not learn it in that way. If you wish to have me consider you truthful, however, you will not make any evasions. I wish a real John the Baptist would stumble into your lodge by mistake. Wouldn't he make sweeping work there?

H. Well, wife, I think we have had enough of John the Baptist. He certainly did not have a very long time, in which to practice Masonry. But John the Evangelist lived to be very aged, did he not?

W. Yes, and that gave him a long time in which to prove his devotion to Christ, and to utter many things in his epistles directly opposed to the system of Masonry. Indeed, how your fraternity could have ever fixed on the Saints John for their patron saints is a wonder that can only be explained on the supposition that they were either wholly unacquainted with their character and writings, or altogether unscrupulous. Why, the very first verse of St. John's Gospel is, 'In the beginning was the Word (Christ) and the Word was with God and the Word was God.' He speaks of his glory as the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. He calls him the light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He says that he who doeth evil hateth the light; but he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God. He was the beloved disciple of Christ, who with Peter and James shared his inmost confidence. He witnessed his transfiguration on the mount, was with him in the garden of Gethsemane, followed him to the palace of the high priest, stood by him through all the horrors of the crucifixion, and at the dying request of his Master took his mother to his home. He was prominent in the scenes following the resurrection, and led a long life of unswerving devotion to his Master, suffering severe persecutions, though he did not wear a martyr's crown. Banished to the Isle of Patmos, the grand Apocalyptic vision was unfolded to him, in one portion of which he saw the Lamb surrounded by an innumerable host "saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain," etc., and also "Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Do you suppose that this man after beholding all this glory, and after uttering as he did in his epistles the strongest denunciations against anti-Christ—would appear in a Masonic lodge in a half nude condition, hood-winked, cable-towed, as a blind candidate seeking light! Don't wince, I have learned all about it. Or do you suppose that he would tolerate others in the thing? Do you think that after recording the words of Christ, 'No man cometh unto the Father but by me;' 'Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name,' etc., he would boldly rush into the presence of the Grand Architect of the universe, as you Masons do, without any mediator, and ask his blessing on the profane ceremonies of the lodge? The very idea is absurd and I am almost ashamed to be arguing the point; and yet, husband, you sanction all this when you as a Mason celebrate this day.

H. Well, wife, you are more learned in the Scripture than I am, but I think there must be another side to this question. Only think how many ministers and church members are Masons. They certainly ought to know about it. Why, the Rev. Mr. Carleton, of the High Episcopal church is to deliver the address on this occasion.

W. This very man, last winter during our interesting revival, when we needed aid so much, wrapped around him the robes of his saintly and apostolic dignity and would not even engage in labors to save souls with our faithful pastors here, and yet you know what degrading ceremonies he has gone through, and who he brothers in the lodge. He reminds me of the Saviour's words, "Ye blind guides that strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." Do you think I want to hear him roll off his fine periods about the loveliness of charity, when at the best Masonic charity is no better than an insurance policy. To turn from the beautiful picture of pure and disinterested benevolence drawn by our Saviour in the parable of the Good Samaritan, is like turning from a perennial spring to slake one's thirst in a muddy rivulet.

H. I have not wholly lost my love of truthfulness, and I will look into this subject. I will see Mr. Carleton himself, and if he does not give a satisfactory reason for the faith that is in him—why I despise shams—there is no knowing where I may land, but it will be some distance from him.

Masonry — How little Understood!

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

[Concluded.]

[The argument last week closed with these conclusions: The obligations of Masonry are revealed only at its altar. They are thus revealed upon the Bible, which in Masonry is considered only as a symbol of these obligations.—Ed.]

Let us examine into this term a little and see if it does not verify our statement concerning the part we allege the Holy Bible is made to play in Masonry. On referring to Mackey, Lexicon of Freemasonry, page 464, we find he defines the word symbol thus: "A sensible image used to express an occult but analogical signification." Now a sensible image is one that can be readily seen, and surely the Holy Bible is such an object, and in a Masonic lodge is conspicuously so, for it occupies a central and prominent position on its altar, opened at different passages of Scripture according to the degree upon which the lodge may be engaged. An occult signification is a hidden or concealed one, and an analogical is one having a resemblance or relation to the original idea. Now the only thing in the whole range of Masonry, which, by any possibility, in respect to her human Godhead, can be analogically represented by the Holy Bible, is her infamous and blasphemous obligations; these standing to the Masonic membership in the same relation that the Holy Bible does to the Christian world! The obligations of Masonry are revealed to the initiates of the order by the God of the lodge as his will and law, as the Holy Bible has been revealed to man by Almighty God as his will and law. By which comparison we see how it is, and that it is, that the Holy Bible as a symbol in Masonry is made to express an occult but analogical though blasphemous signification. That it is but a symbol and nothing more in Masonry we may safely and correctly conclude, from what Sayre, the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence of the Grand Lodge of Alabama, in 1855, as reported in Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, pages 207-8, officially and authoritatively declared. He said of the Bible: "Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible; if it was it would not be Masonry; it would be something else. The position which Christian (?) Masons assign to the Bible is a very natural but not a necessary one. It is thus to them as Christians, and not as Masons." Thus we see, that other than as a mere symbol it has no Masonic signification whatever.

Mackey in his Masonic Jurisprudence, pages 33-4, in setting forth and defining the twenty-first landmark of Masonry, dubs the Holy Bible (symbolically though) the "Book of the Law of Masonry." He thus descants: "It is a landmark that a 'Book of the Law' shall constitute an indispensable part of the furniture of every lodge. I say advisedly, a Book of the Law, because it is not absolutely required that everywhere the Old and New Testaments shall be used. The 'Book of the Law' is that volume which, by the religion of the country is believed to contain the revealed will of the Grand Architect of the universe. (Or symbolically and analogically speaking the God of the lodge.) Hence, in all lodges in Christian countries, the Book of the Law is composed of the Old and New Testaments; in a country where Judaism was the prevailing faith the Old Testament alone would be sufficient, and in Mohammedan countries and among Mohammedan Masons, the Koran might be substituted. Masonry does not attempt to interfere with the peculiar religious faith of its disciples except so far as relates to the belief in the existence of God and what necessarily results from that belief, (which in Masonry is the obligations of the institution). The Book of the Law (that is the obligations) is to the speculative Mason his spiritual trestle-board; without this he cannot labor; whatever he believes to be the revealed will of the Grand Architect, (that is the God of the lodge) constitute for him this spiritual trestle-board and must ever be before him in his hours of speculative labor, to be the rule and guide of his (Masonic) conduct. The landmark, therefore, requires that a Book of the Law, a religious code of some kind, (not particular what) purporting to be an examplar of the revealed will of God, shall form an essential part of the furniture of every lodge." Says Pierson in clearer and more explicit language, in his Traditions of Freemasonry, page 372, "The system of Masonry, as in its original conception, still claims to be a system of religion in which all men can unite and the Book of the Law furnishes the key to its mysteries." To which we respond, of course—how else could it be? "The Masonic Law Book," says Ashe in his Masonic Manual, pages 74-5, "is laid before the Mason, that he may not say through ignorance he erred. Whatever sacred precepts (duties) have been administered, and whatever laws (decrees) have been recorded, by sages of old, (bah) the same are faithfully comprised in the Book of the Law of Masonry." From what has been now said, and from the extracts given, cannot every reader of the Cynosure fully understand how it is that a Mason "by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity is free from sin?" If there be any such reader as cannot, he or she is to be commiserated. A noonday sun could not make it more manifest. Masonry is blasphemy, and as such a system is but little understood, notwithstanding all the exposes and rituals that have been given to the world. Let the light of God's truth break upon the benighted. See, read, and understand.

Southwick's Experience as a Mason.

It was, he informs us, through the influence of his friend, the paper-stainer, that Southwick was induced to get a glimpse of the "glories that beam with such sublime effulgence within the four walls of the lodge-room and within reach of a cable-tow." In this connection he states a fact which deserves to be repeated the world over. He tells us that his friend and monitor advised him to get—informing him "on the five points" where he could get it—a copy of "Jachin and Boaz," and to study the first three degrees of the craft preparatory to admission; that he did make a sly purchase of it, of an honest Quaker bookseller, and was catechized from its pages by his friend, who had assured him that by previously studying it he would get along with the sublime mysteries with more facility. What could impress us more strongly with the utter vileness of the Masonic imposture than the fact of thus privately confessing the truth of a book, for writing which the author had been murdered in London, and for republishing which, Smith of Vermont, had met with the same fate? Another fact is thus stated by Southwick: "During the last winter, certain Royal Arch Masons, of this city of Albany, procured the publication of from five to ten thousand copies of that silly book, which they caused to be peddled through the western parts of this State and elsewhere, by a young man whose name is Morgan, and by which means a twofold imposition was to be accomplished, first to pass off the book as that of the ill-fated, murdered Morgan, and, secondly, to lead the public to believe that he was alive and peddling his book."

But the reader will desire to know how Southwick got along with Jachin and Boaz and what befel the dear twins one day. We quote:

"It was perhaps fortunate for me that my wife (I had been married a year only when I joined the sons of light) was a very prudent woman, for a sad accident happened shortly after my initiation—and that memorable event took place on the evening of April Fool's Day, 1795,—an accident, the bare recollection of which might bring tears into my eyes, if I were not a laughing instead of a crying philosopher. But you that have tears prepare to shed them now. I took the grand text-book, the Alpha and Omega of the first three degrees in Masonry (I mean the Masonic masterpiece, Jachin and Boaz) home to study—if it be not a gross perversion of the term thus to use it, with my present experience. So very careful was I of this precious revelation—this magazine of Masonic mysteries—and so fearful that my good wife would find it, that I sought a hiding place for it as carefully as a dog does when he hides away a bone, and after a most profound cogitation, I concluded to lay it away very slily on the canopy of my bed curtains, which came so nearly in contact with the ceiling, that I could but congratulate myself on 'the wisdom of Solomon;' for I really thought the sublime Sibylline as safe as it would have been in the sanctum sanctorum of the order, in Br. ——'s garret. But my unlucky stars prevailed about that time, as they often have since; and as I had very properly, though not intentionally, commenced my Masonic career on All Fool's Day, it seemed as though the continuance of it was to be in good keeping with the commencement; for without giving me the least warning, my wife had declared war against certain intruders that had disturbed our sweet slumbers now and then. And having called to her aid an Amazon well qualified for the battle that was to be fought, both the bedstead and the curtains were suddenly and completely discomposed, turned topsy-turvey! The awful consequences was that Jachin and Boaz were hurled upon the floor by the rude hand of a pot-wrestler:

"Oh! what a fall was there my countrymen!"
My long-eared brethren of the mystic tie!
"When you, and I, and all of us fell down, Whilst 'Betty Bouncer' flourished over me."
E'en now methinks I see her brawny arm,
Sun-burnt and freckled, soiled with soot and grease,
Aloft extending to the curtain top,
With rude hand hurling from its sly retreat
The hidden jewel of the holy craft—
The great Masonic master-piece of wit
And wisdom, such as nincompoops have claimed
As all their own, and proudly hid from all
Since Babel's contrariety of tongue:
For there it was our worthy craft begun—
And well it might—for folly then had raised
Its brazen crest among the clam'rous crowd,
And beat down Wisdom; and with madness fired
Dared e'en attempt to scale the throne of heaven!

Oh! Betty Bouncer! Betty Bouncer! Oh!
Did'st thou mistake great Boaz for a bug?
And Jachin for an ear-wig, or a flea?
If not why did'st thou rudely thus disturb
Their sly repose, and drag them forth to light?
Weep brethren, weep; unlucky was the day,
And full of woe! (Oh, blot it ever out,
Ye that make almanacs, and planets trace
Through all their orbits in the realms of light)
When a mean chambermaid was seen to grasp
The Sibylline, so rare that Tommy Thumb,
With thimble full of scouce, might compass it:
And yet, since Babel's bold abortive scheme,
How many dumpling heads have conn'd it hard,
And thought themselves the wiser for its lore!
Without the aid of pungent Maccaba,
Or Onion juice, what sapient son of light,
What Lambskin Knight or High Priest of the Sun
Would not have wept, had he been there to hear
How Betty, with an arch, sardonic smile,
Called on her mistress to behold the fall
Of Jachin and of Boaz—mighty props
Of mean deception, fraud and quackery!
Dear twins, sweet twins, of mystic mother born,
Who tread the midnight maze where noodles meet,
And knaves that fleece the noodles; calling them,
While they fleece 'em, tender names, as—brothers!
Sweet brothers!—kind, faithful, loving brothers!
"Ye gods! it doth amaze me," Betty cried;
"That men—since women could not—should be found
So simple, to be made the dupes of knaves,
Coxcombs, charlatans, and vile pretenders!
Why I myself—that here am doomed to war—
Ignoble strife—with cob-webs, bed-bugs, fleas!
Rude ignorant, uncouth in speech and manners!
Who never had the benefit of cunning
So much as A, B, C, in any school,
But trained from infancy by cruel fate,
To handle mop-sticks, spits and frying-pans,
Wash-tubs and water pails, and pots and kettles,
And ply the greasy art of cookery;
Yet would I scorn to wear a cable-tow
For all Masonic noodles ever known."

No sooner did my wife discover what it was that had called forth the eloquence of the chambermaid than she started back as though she had encountered a rat, or an apparition; but being possessed of good Irish spunk she soon mustered courage to pick up the Sibylline, and in less than the twinkling of an eye come running into my office, where I was quietly at work among the types. not dreaming of the sad mishap that had upset the curtains and exposed the "divine mysteries" to the profane eye and the vulgar curiosity of honest Biddy. In she came, I say, her eyes sparkling with the mingled scintillations of half-stifled anger and full-flowing pity, if not a little contempt, exclaiming as she entered that she had found me out! that she well knew where I had been on All Fools' night, as well as some other nights, and that "there was the evidence of it!" throwing the book upon the table and asking me if I was not a very wise young man to have been led by that cunning, red-coated Yankee (red coats had just gone out of fashion in New England, but one of them still lingered on the back of my brother and preceptor) to spend my time and money in that way! Here was something a little more alarming than a "tempest in a teapot." But what could I say to this ill-timed discovery, as I then thought it? What I did say I cannot now recollect. But though the "wisdom of Solomon" had failed, I am proud to say that my wife, on a little reflection, behaved like a sensible, prudent woman; and not long after I, for once in my life, at least, behaved like a prudent man; for I determined to throw off forever the undue influence which my Royal Arch Yankee brother had acquired over me. Accordingly, after taking the fourth degree, I told him frankly that I would never go a step further in Freemasonry. He pretended to be much surprised, but I could clearly see it was sheer affectation, and began the old story of something worth knowing, which was yet behind the curtain.

"Stop, my dear sir," said I, "and I will give you briefly what I believe to be the history of all your science and your secrets."

"Well," said he, "what is it."

Reform News.

Travels and Labors in Central Indiana.

Marion, Ind., March 16, 1877.

Dear Brother K.:—Two weeks of almost incessant bad weather and worse roads have not prevented our regular series of meetings from taking place, nor made the congregations other than respectable in numbers and character; but it has involved much hardship.

On the evening of the 6th I lectured at Fairmount to a full house with good attention. Rev. Wm. Hall, U. B. minister, made most appropriate and excellent remarks. On the 7th I participated in an excellent religious meeting at the Friends' meeting house and in the evening went to Little Ridge Friends' meeting house, where notwithstanding the darkness and rain there was a fair audience which gave a respectful hearing.

On the 8th I rode nine miles on horseback through the rain and deep mud to Maple River meeting house, where I met a small congregation. On the 9th I walked and carried my baggage to Bellfield, a colored village four or five miles distant. An old colored man piloted me through the swamp, which we crossed partly on logs and partly by wading. I found rest and entertainment with a family of ex-slaves from North Carolina, who are intelligent, Christian people, and who have my profound thanks for their hospitality. I found, however, that no notice had been given of my meeting, and that it would be impossible to get out a notice that day. I was told that if I would wait till 10 o'clock next day they would give me a hearing. This I did and met a good congregation, all colored, in their large and well-furnished school house. Quite a number of these colored people belong to the colored lodge of Masons in Marion, and one of them, a Wesleyan, supposed that I was finding fault with their Masonry because it was clandestine. He assured me that their Masonry was as good if not better than the white man's Masonry. When he found out that I opposed all Masonry, and when I showed him "Freemasonry at a Glance" he was very angry. He said, "That man is a perjured man," and that I was "in very bad business." Most of the people, however, assented to what I said; and one, a seceder, gave me a hearty endorsement in his own quaint, outlandish way.

After finishing my work here I shouldered my satchel and walked five miles to Deer Creek Friends' meeting house to find quite a small audience, but some very warm and faithful friends.

On the Sabbath I attended meeting at the Bethel Friends' meeting house and spoke both in the forenoon and in the afternoon at three o'clock. My subject was the religion of secretism. Four seceding Masons were present and all expressed approval of what was said. One of them said he had left the so-called "Holy of Holies" of the lodge and was seeking to enter the real Holy of Holies by the true and living Way. May abundant entrance be administered to him.

From here I went to West Branch Friends' meeting house, where there came through mud and rain quite a congregation; and on the 13th went to Roseburgh, where I spoke morning and evening in the Wesleyan church to a full congregation. I had the pleasure of being replied to by a Mason who had the candor and good sense to say he was mistaken on the points he had raised.

On the 14th a walk of two and a half miles brought me to Westfield Wesleyan church, where I met a fair audience, but was continually interrupted by a very religious Mason, much to the annoyance of the rest of the congregation. He informed me that what I said was false, and that I knew it to be so; but afterwards said he should not dispute anything, and had no doubt but that I was perfectly honest.

Last night our meeting at the Friends' meeting house near here was given up for a revival meeting, but it will probably be held in a few days. To-night I am to speak at Liberty chapel and to-morrow is the county convention.

Yours for righteousness,

H. H. Hinman.

Ronayne at Bloomington, Indiana.

We have just passed through a season of great excitement in Bloomington, Indiana. This is one of the strongholds of secretism. We have Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, Heptisophs, Red Men, Good Templars, and all the Greek satellites, and the Anti-mason element is compelled to withstand the united influence of all these. The Odd-fellows are required to cry "perjurer" in order to keep some of their many disaffected members from divulging their valuable (?) secrets.

Mr. Ronayne worked the first degree of Masonry on Monday evening and the third degree on Tuesday, and then lectured on "Masonic symbols" on Wednesday afternoon. His audiences during the first two evenings were very large, and he has forever settled the question in this community that Masonry has been revealed. This is indeed the special mission of Mr. Ronayne. Masons are constantly repeating the absurd falsehood that Masonry never has been and never can be revealed. They cry against the Anti-mason lecturer, that he is talking about something he knows nothing about. No one will say that of Mr. Ronayne after hearing him. The next favorite cry is that all persons who reveal Masonry are perjurers.

Mr. Ronayne shows: 1st, That the Masonic obligation is taken conditionally and that Masonry violates the condition by requiring what is inconsistent with a man's duty, to the state, the church and the family; and, therefore, the condition being violated the obligation is void. 2d, That the obligation binds a man to keep the secrets of Masonry and that Masonry has no secrets, since every rite, ceremony, grip, password, ritual and obligation, have been published and may be bought for twenty-five cents in almost any book-store. 3d, That it is impossible for any man to keep a Masonic obligation, and that all the members violate their obligations almost daily. 4th, That the obligation requires a man to do sinful things and therefore ought not to be kept. And in consequence of these four things it is the man who stays in the lodge and not the man who comes out that is unworthy of being believed.

I hope he will be kept going until he works the degrees in all the principal cities of the United States. Some one ought to take up the same work in reference to Odd-fellowship, and when the exceeding silliness of their rites and the unchristian nature of their religious teachings are fully exposed the world will have no more use for them. Infidels and triflers may still want to keep them up, but good men will not take any interest in them.

W. P. M.

Wisconsin Revisited.

March 22, 1877.

A brief trip to Wisconsin last week, continuing over the Sabbath, was attended with several pleasant incidents, and resulted in a liberal donation to our Publishing House fund. Reaching Oshkosh at 7 P. M. Saturday, I walked over to the North Town, or across Wolf River, and took lodgings at the Tremont, where my wants were well supplied. There was one department of this establishment, however, which was anything but pleasant, where men stepped just through the door to take their drinks. Everything was quiet and orderly, but, judging from appearances, some who entered that door could but illy afford even the "nickel" which I suppose the "mug of ale" costs. After supper I visited and spoke at a meeting of the "Reform Club," where I listened to a number of testimonies to the efficacy of the "blood of Christ" to take away the appetite for strong drink. One man said he had tried pledges, temperance lodges, and resolutions, but all to no purpose, but when he gave his heart to Christ, it made a new man of him, and it had wrought not only a most wonderful change in him, but in his home and in his business.

On Sabbath I went to the U. B. Church, or the "hired house" where they hold their meetings, and found Bro. Lindsey at his post, or, rather, he found me in the congregation, and, after giving me a few words of caution, invited me to speak to the people, which I did as the Lord gave me a message. The morning services were followed by class meeting, which was earnest and spiritual, and participated in by something over fifty members. I accepted an invitation to dine with Bro. Roberts and then returned to preach in the evening. The room was crowded to discomfort, and many who came failed to gain admission. After preaching services, a second meeting was held, to which a goodly number remained. Ten persons requested to be prayed for and a number recently converted spoke in very interesting and feeling words. Bro. L. began his efforts with a band of seven, which has now increased to near one hundred souls in a short time. I have some fears, not to say misgivings, as to the future of this U. B. class, for I saw several Odd-Fellows, if not Freemasons, whose names were on the church roll, and was several times cautioned not to touch upon the delicate subject. I learned, however, during my brief reconnoisance of this field, that our cause has some warm and true friends at Oshkosh, and it is proposed to have a course of lectures there in a few weeks.

At Fond du Lac, Bro. Varney, Rev. Collins, and others made me welcome, and here the preliminaries were arranged for a future campaign. Returning by the way of Sharon, I made arrangements to spend the Sabbath there, preaching in the Free Methodist Church in the forenoon, and speaking to the Y. M. C. A. at 3 P. M., and to lecture in the place Monday and Tuesday evenings. I shall have something further to say of Sharon and its people and of our reform work there at some future time, as it has been a point of much interest.

J. P. STODDARD.

Correspondence.

FATHER FINNEY ON THE PUBLISHING HOUSE WORK.

MANSFIELD, Ohio,
March 13, 1877.

Will our friends read Rev. J. P. Stoddard's account of the Publishing House in Chicago, in the Cynosure, March 8, 1877, with care? God says, in Haggai 2:8, "The silver is mine and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of Hosts." Please let an old friend, who has stock in the American party, and works and votes and prays for the success and the blessing of God to rest on it—let him entreat and persuade all who have a portion of the Lord's money waiting for an opportunity to be used, take stock in the Carpenter Building in Chicago. Thanks to Mr. Carpenter for his donations, but I want that house to have more names and men taking stock in it in every State in this nation. The time is coming when the children of all who helped first in the above party will boast of the glorious work for God and his cause when their parents have gone to their graves. You remember that President Lincoln gave the slaveholding States one hundred days to return to loyalty and keep their slaves. We have about a year to work to raise enough to get a building worth about $20,000; and you have God's funds to give away. Take stock in our light-house, 221 West Madison street, Chicago. Shall we "Hold the Fort?"

A friend of mine in Ohio had one thousand dollars of his Lord's money. He put it into the light-house last year. He expects to reap here a good harvest, and in the world that John Bunyan describes in his Pilgrim's Progress, to reap through all eternity. Where can you put part of your Lord's money in a better place. I fear that, among other sins, one is holding the Lord's money from him.

I can say to any that wish to help, please send their cards to J. P. Stoddard or H. L. Kellogg, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., and either will help you with pleasure. You remember Lincoln's proclamation freeing millions of colored people; our work is to free preachers, elders, and church members, and young men that Satan has caught in his oath-bound trap. You know that Beelzebub has made a nice business in getting many good men into his den and then polluting them in bad company.

Yours in Christ,

JOHN FINNEY.

MASONIC STOOL-PIGEONS.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR SIR: I have just come across the following invitation of the spider to the fly, which I send you, to be laid before your numerous and intelligent leaders, as one further evidence of the truthfulness of the Anti-masonic charge that the cratty Masonic order is at the bottom of all the mushroom, outside, secret, oath-bound organizations that now afflict and curse the world of mankind at large. The invitation is thus presented:

"INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS.

"Your attention is called to the above order, a lodge or court of which I am about to start in Cincinnati. According to its constitution, any sound, healthy man, between the ages of 21 and 50 years, and who has a good moral character, can become a member, and at his death his family will receive a sum at present $400, but not to exceed $1,000. The dues range from $4 to $10 per year, as you may determine by the by-laws, and weekly benefits, if sick or disabled, of from $3 to $5.

"This order springs from the ancient order in England [Oh!], where they have a larger membership than any other order there, but, on its introduction into the United States, was changed to the Independent Order. Brother A. B. Caldwell, of New York, at present the head of the order, is a member in good and high standing among Masons, Odd-Fellows, K. of P., Red Men, &c., and a man of sterling integrity and moral worth. To his exertions is due the large increase in membership from a few hundred who started the order in June, 1874 [ancient, is it not?], to the present time, where they number over 4,000, and increasing at a rate that promises a membership of 10,000, or enough to pay a full policy before two years are past. All candidates must pass a stringent medical examination previous to admission, and it may be relied on that only sound men will be admitted. The policy, at the death of a member in good standing, is paid by an assessment of only ten cents for each member of the court; so that you will see that this order offers inducements at a cheaper rate than any other benevolent order now in existence. This is not intended to compete with or decry any other order, but as an additional insurance for those who wish it. The charge for charter, ritual, seal, and necessary books is only $40, and no charge for institution by the Deputy.

[Here he fails to inform us that ministers are taken in free. But, perhaps this is done on the sly, and not to be told out of school].

"The fee for charter members has, owing to the hard times, been put at only $3, which includes the fee for examination.

"Any wishing to join this new lodge, or wishing any further information can be satisfied by calling on the undersigned.

"JOHN MCK. SEARS,
"No. 14 East Fourth Street,
Or, after 6 P. M., at No. 413 Baymiller street." [Cincinnati, Ohio].

So we go. 'Twas ever thus from childhood's hour. In the language of the great and astute Barnum, "Mankind love to be humbugged, and will pay well for it." And the multiplication of secret societies in this day and generation is a living exemplification of this vital truth. Just about the close of the war, Rathbun and several other restless Masonic spirits in and about Washington city, conceived the notion and carried it into effect of instituting the Ancient (?) Order of the Knights of Pythias, of which, according to Pythian tradition, Pythias and his next friend, Damon, were both honored members and founders, and also, of which, according to the record, the undersigned was at one time an honored or dishonored (as you please) member. Not content with the bantling as at first brought forth, Worthy Grand Chancellor Berry, of Illinois, tried his 'prentice hand, some four years ago, upon the ungainly creature, and, by the aid of his Masonic art, reduced its crude form from the rough to the perfect ashlar, whereat the whole brotherhood clapped their hands and, with one universal yell, cried, "Eureka!" Even Rathbun and the other worthies looked on, saw, and were conquered. They admitted the superior genius of Berry, and acquiesced in his handicraft. They said, 'tis Berry who has given expression to our conceptions, which we ourselves were incapable to utter. He is our oracle, and his wisdom we accept. Berry is enthroned and Pythianism has gone up the Masonic gamut a notch. There, for the present, it rests, and the world draws a breath, wondering what next will be.

THOROUGH SECESSION.

CROMWELL, Iowa.

Editor Cynosure:—

I am a seceding Mason, third degree; Odd-fellow, fifth degree; granger, second degree. Seceded from the Masons in 1872. In proof of which statement I send you a copy of charges preferred against me in Spring Hill, Kansas. The specifications were that I said I was conscientiously opposed to Masonry; second, that I would not pay lodge dues, because I told the membership I did not wish to invest any more money in Masonry.

So you see that God taught me to come out from among, and not to be unequally yoked with unbelievers before I knew of the great Christian Association that is battling for the overthrow of the stupendous anti-Christ in the world.

Baal has his altars erected all over this western country, and his name seems to be legion. The man that will dare to oppose the hideous monster is a target for the "lewd fellows of the baser sort" to wreak their vengeance upon. But we are told not to fear them who can only kill the body, but to fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body. I have no personal ill-will toward individuals, but am opposed to the impiety and hypocrisy of Masonry.

A. J. SMITH.

CHARGES.

SPRING HILL, Kansas,
Dec. 28, 1872.

To the Worshipful Master, Wardens and Brethren of Spring Hill Lodge, No. 56, A. F. & A. M.: I hereby charge Bro. A. J. Smith, a member of this lodge, with unmasonic conduct, in this, to wit: Specification 1st. For that the said Bro. A. J. Smith, on or about the 30th day of October, A. D. 1872, did use unmasonic conversation. Specification 2d. Refusal to pay lodge dues and obey summons of said lodge.

Dated this 28th day of Dec., A. D. 1872.

Signed, IRET RHINEHART, J.W.
[Seal.] By order of said lodge.

SUMMONS.

Hall of Spring Hill Lodge, No. 56,
A., F. and A. Masons.

BRO. A. J. SMITH: You are hereby summoned to attend a communication of this lodge on Saturday evening, being the 16th day of November, A. L. 5872, at 7½ o'clock, at the usual place of meeting.

Object of the meeting: Special business.

Witness my hand and the seal of said lodge, at Spring Hill, this 2d day of November, A. L. 5872.

[Seal.] J. R. SKINNER, Sec'y.

I did not comply with the above. Next came summons to answer charges; intended doing so, but Master advised me to stay away.

A. J. SMITH.

SHALL WE STAY WITH THE LODGE IN CHURCH?

Dear Cynosure:—I read a reply to E. W. Wheeler's article that was in the Cynosure of January 25th. I wish to make a few remarks on both articles. I differ with E. W. Wheeler about working the degrees in public, for men believe their eyes more than their ears. This was what the men of the Circle said in the "castles" in the South as we are told by Edmond Wright in Levington's "Key to Masonry," and I believe it. Wheeler says: "I can say it is disgusting in public or private." The more disgusting it can be proved the sooner it will cease to rule our nation and the M. E. church. I believe as Rev. Wheeler that there are too many sects. That is where the cause of Christ loses strength, for in unity there is strength. If all the churches would unite against secrecy then it would leave them, for it is governed by the bad that is in man, and to be converted to Christ would make them all Anti-masons. One adhering Mason told me, "When you can convert the world there will be no more Masonry." This was a plain confession that it was the work of the devil. Another told me, "We do let our good works shine;" and I told him, "Then it is something devilish you wish to conceal." This he could not deny and so he quit conversation. I am glad to know that some of the members of the M. E. church petitioned conference in regard to secrecy and wish their petitions had been granted.

I think Geo. Richey is too hard on E. W. Wheeler. I will give some reasons why. If all the ministers would do as he says, "Hold up your Anti-masonic light," Masonry would leave the church and other wrongs with it. I would not advise any one to leave a church that forbids secrecy and join one that allows it, nor would I advise a seceder from Masonry to leave the Methodist church, if he was a lecturer, and join the U. B. church, for I know how the Masons talk. They would say the church he used to belong to had turned him out and the poor Brethren had taken what no other church would have, and they would send such reports ahead of him to destroy his influence so people would not believe him. I have had Masons talk as meanly as that about the United Brethren to me.

If we would love our neighbor as ourselves we should invite the vile to church for he has more need of hearing the Gospel preached than the Christian, but not let him become a member until he is converted. Some churches err in this way.

Yours for the truth,

BENJAMIN BORTON, JR.

WARRENS CORNERS NOT YET WIPED OUT.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR SIR:—It is reported on good authority that the presiding elder of Niagara district, Genesee Conference, has said that they intend to wipe out this spot (Warrens Corners). To publish to the world the only known cause for such a threat, and put in a remonstrance, in behalf of the church, is the purpose of this article.

Our great sin in the eyes of the board of presiding elders, as well as in the eyes of ministers in league fraternally, who have been sent to fill our pulpits, is simply opposition to secret oath-bound societies, and particularly Masonry, which has hung to us for years, a dead weight to any spiritual advancement in the church. We bore up heroically under this load for years, supporting the cause of the devil as a necessary accompaniment to religion, under protest of conscience, until further patience seemed no longer a virtue and a few said, "Down with the brakes." We refused to support a false religion in our midst any longer, or to aid and comfort it in any shape. We were told our course was entirely wrong, that the way out of trouble was to petition to conference for a man we wanted. We took that advice and acted upon it, with what results it is now my purpose to relate as concisely as possible.

A petition, signed by over fifty members and supporters of the church, (mostly members), asking politely the authorities of the M. E. church assembled one year ago last fall at Buffalo, N. Y., to send us Rev. Woodruff Post, the only minister we were sure fully represented our sentiments. We did not get him. Masonry could not grant us the request. It implied taking their oppressive thumbs off Brother Post. Of course Masonry could not think of doing that; her thirst for vengeance on him wouldn't be half satiated; and as to our request, that could be got along with easy enough. They had a man under their thumb who had never been initiated, didn't know anything about Masonry; had never tried to inform himself on the question; had attended one Masonic installation the year before at Wilson and still he knew nothing about the order. He was set down for our place, with the expectation that he would fill the bill of course, —he wasn't a Mason. He came among us, and with one exception, the Anti's who had refused to fellowship Masonry, came right forward to his support and are to-day among his best friends, (that ought to mean a great deal more than it does). Although we are his friends and he ours, we were never satisfied with his position on the great enemy of the Christian church. We believe a minister's duty is to know his whereabouts on this great sin in the church, draw his sword and warn the people that an enemy is among them. Anything less than this is short of duty. We thought the brother a little rough on Warrens Corners in some of his sermons, one in particular proved very detrimental to his interests. His influence in the last conference, at Rochester, in bringing about a division of Cambria charge, if report be true, was made to count against us; at all events there was an influence brought, that hurt us badly. In short, to cut off the point on Cambria charge having the parsonage, without so much as a word or hint to the brethren at the other two points of the charge, we characterize as a downright insult to common sense and common decency. * * * This is the key to their action: Warrens Corners is anti-secret, through and back, up and down from head to foot, and Masonry had got to do something, sure enough. They would just cut off the parsonage and leave no place to put a minister, weakening us so that we should have to take whatever they had a mind to send us. They had just the man to carry out their plan, a rich farmer, a man that can r e a d (preach) a little, with plenty of money and everything. "Pay me anything you have a mind, or nothing at all. Stay I will, if I don't get a cent," is the position taken.

After the conference at Buffalo had refused us Brother Post, one of the presiding elders was asked to explain the reason. He answered: "You don't want him! He is no preacher; he is insane, he is riding a hobby! He has never had any success as a preacher where he has been, and the board of presiding elders passed a unanimous resolution that he was utterly disqualified for a successful Methodist preacher." If that isn't downright slander of the good character and reputation of one of the purest minded, most devoted Christian ministers in the Genesee conference, then Webster has got to get up another definition for slander. Masonry virtually says to Brother Post, Get up from your knees, you are altogether to devoted for modern notions; do as we have done, take (or let some one else) every rag off your person, except your shirt, mind and leave that open at the top and bare your left breast, (because modern Christians to be accounted sane must be pricked a little with a sharp instrument right there), in short, make yourself look as near as you can just as you were born into the world, except an old pair of drawers and a slipper on the right foot. You must learn to lie a little; but you will not be required to do anything that conflicts with your religion; but to start off just right in the narrow path you must have on the hoodwink and cable-tow about your neck. We want nothing more to put you through the Entered Apprentice degree, except a man at the other end of the rope to pull you about so you can show a lodge of drunkards, robbers, thieves, murderers and infidels, how a minister of Jesus Christ can let himself down from his exalted state, on the square and level with the whole of them. Brother Post come join us, you are only injuring yourself by staying out in the cold. Heaven, in this order, is sure, without any of Christ's help. What do you say? If you will, you shall have Charlotte, or Cambria charge. The latter before we split her was one of the best country charges in the conference. Well, if you can't fill the above bill, you can't help cultivate our vineyard. There is not an honest minister in the conference but what knows that is a true picture, and in God's name, Warrens Corners asks you to stand up and defend the right the very first opportunity that presents itself.

TRAIN WORK.

SEEMLY, Ill., March 8, 1877.

Editor Cynosure.

I made a flying business visit this week through Vermillion and Champaign counties, passing through the towns of Hoopeston, Rossville, Bismark, Danville, Catlin, Fairmount, Homer, Sidney and Philo, in most or all of which places I distributed more or less of our tracts, Cynosure supplements (illustrated), and secured the money for a year for the Cynosure, and selling nearly or quite a dozen of Odd-fellow, grange, Morgan and Ronayne publications. I aimed to pleasantly and quietly do all this, which did not in the least interfere with my trip, which was undertaken purely as one of business.

I made a number—to me—of very pleasant acquaintances, and in one or two instances, I think very important ones, one of whom is a banker, and who, for quite a while, was engaged in the practice of the law. He bought Ronayne, and gave me an account of how the craft, in one of the above towns, conduct themselves during work or labor, and at intervals, when refreshment was in order, how they would freely indulge in drink. This banker is not a member of the craft, but got his information from a seceder who has descended to the 32d or 33d degree in Masonic infamy, but it would be unpleasant to drag this seceder's name into the public prints now, as he has just left the lodge and is endeavoring to be a Christian, and is now reading up doctrine and getting ready to intelligibly attach his name to the Presbyterian Church at Toledo, Ohio. This repentant Freemason advised this banker to keep entirely aloof from the lodge, saying the lodge to which he had belonged in Illinois was only a club house where drunkenness was freely indulged in, and he had often seen the hall littered over with fragments of chicken bones, etc., at their festings.

We also refer to another acquaintance made on this trip, as we were returning home, and that was of a gentleman who "hails on the square," and who said of himself that his position in the lodge was in the South (Junior Warden), and who was a member of that famous Rossville lodge of mob fame, where it was resolved that the interests of the craft would be endangered if Ronayne should successfully "raise Hiram." This last acquaintance was formed on a caboose between Danville and Rossville, and, there being in all about ten or twelve men aboard, arranged on either side of the caboose, not unlike two rows of jurors who sit to hear and decide matters in dispute in our law courts.

The affair of which I write came on very slowly at the first, but finally became desperately warm, our Junior Warden defending with the utmost determination the mob that prevented Ronayne "raising Hiram" at Rossville, calling, finally, such men as Ronayne as being "perjured." This he did in two or three instances, so plainly and undeniably that every one on the train could understand him. I called out, "I rest my case here!" and claim you, sir, as a witness for my side, and as corroborating Ronayne. The point," said I, "we make is this: If Ronayne had told things outside of the lodge which are untrue, he could not be 'perjured;' but since Ronayne has given what he calls the secrets of the lodge, you, Junior Warden, by calling him 'perjured,' confirm him as having told the truth, and right here we rest and submit our case to the jury," pointing to the men on each side of the car. Our Junior Warden of the famous Rossville lodge not saying anything for about five minutes, nor do I know that I, or any one, either moved or spoke, every thing being still except the slight jolting of the train as it kept moving along, until finally, seeing the case was against him, and to call attention from this fact, and to his relief, the hogs in the car ahead of us set up a sudden squealing, my Junior Warden friend broke the almost deathly silence by saying, "There's some hogs aboard!" This was undoubtedly done to cover his defeat. OUR MAIL.

Samuel Martin, Parshallville, Mich., writes:

"I was a voter in the Morgan war of 1826. There is a Baptist church on one side of me and a Methodist on the other. Both have Mason preachers. There are four or five Mason members in the Baptist church and one or two in the Methodist. Two or three Freemasons will rule a church. What a lamentable condition the church militant of Christ is in with teachers who embrace a pagan doctrine, traveling toward the pagan temple. When shall men forsake their idols and turn to the Lord?"

Calvin Marshall, Stanford, Iowa, writes:

"We are pegging away at the lodges and linked fraternities, holding meetings in adjoining neighborhoods, and meeting the lovers of secrets in open discussion. Their arguments consist of assertions, only proved by the indiscriminate use of profane adjectives."

E. C. Spencer, Myersburg, Pa., writes:

"I think the leaven which has been sent to this place is working. All who read your paper seem to like it. At first our Odd-fellow postmaster received it at the office with a kind of scoff, but gradually he began to get some of its contents when there was no one looking, and now has become more bold in reading it, and a little more plausible in his criticism. I hope and pray that it may lead him to see the inconsistency and demoralizing tendency of lodge rule, both in church and state."

Lorenzo D. Brown, Montmorenci, Ind., writes:

"I do not allow myself to needlessly make enemies to myself or the good cause by bitter personalities, but in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, the God of Love, I attack the principles of the institution, the foundation stones of which are lies, and murder, and treason. 'For their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges.' 'The hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies.' For God's truth is like the pelting hail that leaves nothing alive that is not securely sheltered within the cleft of the Rock of Ages. Masonry boasts its benevolence. Allow me to give you a specimen. I had a brother who was a Mason, and in good standing, but death called him away from his wife and three boys, leaving them all only $50 after the debts were paid. So you see the woman could not keep house, but had to let her children shift for themselves; and they did it, too, for the 'glorious institution' never gave them a cent, but Anti-masons aided according to their ability in schooling and supporting those orphans, whom I have seen in winter time with their bare toes peeping through their worn out shoe Some Masons helped them too, though not as Masons, but as men."

John T. Gromer, Placerville, Cal., writes:

"About three weeks ago the Presbyterian minister of Placerville preached a sermon against secret societies, showing that they were keeping people away from Christ This sermon was answered on the next Sabbath by the minister of the M. E. church, who belongs to several secret orders. These sermons have caused a great deal of excitement in our little city. The secret societies here have over 400 members. The following are the names of the societies: Masons, two lodges; Odd-fellows, two lodges; Red Men, one lodge; grangers, one lodge."

L. Landon, Kennebec, Kan., writes:

"I rejoice greatly in the progress our cause is making under your leadership. I long to see the good work go on, and hope the powers of darkness will soon be driven to the wall. I hope the good work in Kansas, begun by C. D. Sexton and others, will prove effectual to the pulling down of the strongholds of the enemy."

Ed. Charles Barnett, Nebraska City, Neb, writes:

"I am challenged by a Mason to discuss the question of Masonry versus the Gospel as revealed by the Lord Jesus Christ, which has done the most good for mankind?"

We wish this question could be discussed until every citizen of our country would cry out: "The Lord Jesus, let him be God."

J. W. Thompson, Peoria, Ill., writes:

"I am 61 years old, an old abolitionist, and always an anti secret society man. I wish I were able to help the good cause mightily."

H. S. Thomas, Elida, O., sends for the sermons by Revs. J. G. Carson and J. Williams, also the tracts, "Thirteen Reasons," and "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion," and writes:

"I want the above tracts to read from the pulpit of our church at least once a week."

S. H. Evans, Chelsea, Mass., writes:

"I prize the Cynosure above all the other papers or periodicals I am acquainted with."

W. P. King, Stafford, O., writes:

"Your paper contains much information not obtained from any other source in regard to the secret combinations of the day, which is interesting to those who do not favor secretism. I should have heard but little of Mr. Moody's testimony against the lodge outside the Cynosure."

The Sabbath School.

LESSON XIV.—APRIL 8, 1877.—THE SHUNAMMITE'S SON.

SCRIPTURE.—2 Kings iv. 25-37. Commit 32-36. Primary verses, 34, 35.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"O woman, great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt."—Matt. 15: 28.

TOPIC—God Honors Faith.

25. So she went and came unto the man of God to Mount Carmel. And it came to pass, when the man of God saw her afar off, that he said to Gehazi his servant, Behold, yonder is that Shunammite:

26. Run now, I pray thee, to meet her, and say unto her, Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? And she answered, It is well.

27. And when she came to the man of God to the hill, she caught him by the feet: but Gehazi came near to thrust her away. And the man of God said, Let her alone; for her soul is vexed within her: and the Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.

28. Then she said, Did I desire a son of my lord? did I not say, Do not deceive me?

29. Then he said to Gehazi, Gird up thy loins, and take my staff in thine hand, and go thy way: if thou meet any man, salute him not; and if any salute thee, answer him not again: and lay my staff upon the face of the child.

30. And the mother of the child said, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And he arose, and followed her.

31. And Gehazi passed on before them, and laid the staff upon the face of the child; but there was neither voice, nor hearing. Wherefore he went again to meet him, and told him, saying, The child is not awaked.

32. And when Elisha was come into the house, behold, the child was dead, and laid upon his bed.

33. He went in, therefore, and shut the door upon them twain, and prayed unto the Lord.

34. And he went up, and lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands: and he stretched himself upon the child; and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

35. Then he returned, and walked in the house to and fro; and went up, and stretched himself upon him: and the child sneezed seven times, and the child opened his eyes.

36. And he called Gehazi, and said, Call this Shunammite. So he called her. And when she was come in unto him, he said, Take up thy son.

37. Then she went in, and fell at his feet, and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her son, and went out.

"It shall be well." No matter what the outcome may be, to a Christian, "it shall be well." "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God." Gen. 50: 20; Ps. 119: 71; Rom. 5: 3-5; 8: 28; 1 Cor. 3: 21, 22; 2 Cor. 4: 15-17; Heb. 12: 11; Jas. 1: 12.

There are many staves that men lean upon, and trust in to do for them what God only can do. Men trust in riches—in wicked (sharp) practices—in lying—in their own works—in their own strength. He only is not confounded who puts his trust in God alone. Job 31: 24-28; Ps. 52: 7; Prov. 11: 28; 28: 26; Is. 47: 10; Jer. 13: 25; 17: 7, 8; 48: 7; Matt. 26: 33; Luke 12: 19-21; Eph. 5: 15.

We are helpless in ourselves; but who can measure the power that the humblest Christian exerts who calls the Holy Spirit to his aid! No one can estimate that who cannot estimate the power of the Holy Ghost. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." HIS OWN RECEIVED HIM NOT.—Ulysses, says Dr. Guthrie, after his fabled absence of twenty years at the siege of Troy. returned to his home at Ithaca. His friends did not recognize him. Even his wife spurned him from her presence as an impostor. Seizing a stout bow, he bent it with his herculean might, and so proved his identity by his giant strength. His wife now recognized and embraced him. If we may be allowed to compare small things with great, our Lord came a stranger to his own, and was despised and rejected; but he bent the stubborn laws of nature to his will, and proved himself Creator by his mastery over creation.

Every Freemason a Blasphemer.

As proved by the Highest Masonic Authority.

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

By quotations from a score of masonic works of unquestioned authority, the fact of the blasphemous ceremonies and teachings of Freemasonry are so clearly demonstrated as to make it evident that every Initiate is of necessity a blasphemer.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1877.

Our Approaching Anniversary.

Our next anniversary is to be at Dayton, Ohio, a locality where there is more real moral and intellectual power exerted against the secret orders in this country than in almost any other within our knowledge. Our first president, the good Bishop Edwards, came to our Pittsburgh meeting in 1868, when and where we organized our National Association. He then lived at West Sonora, near Dayton; and Bro. D. Berger, then editor of the Telescope, came with him, and worked ably and well in launching the reform. We had a warm reception and large audiences, at Oberlin; but Dayton is the headquarters of the United Brethren church, concerning whom it is no exaggeration to say that they are not outdone by any other denomination in protesting against the American leprosy. There is their large printing house. There the seat of their Telescope, through which one may see the mountain tops of the land of right principles in the blue distance. And there we shall meet a Christian people, cultured without intellectual pride, simple-hearted without rusticity, zealous without fanaticism, and loving dearly their own denomination without contemning others. The city is a delightful one. Large enough to afford good daily papers, and yet not like New York or Philadelphia, whereinto a convention like ours, though large, may drop like a pebble in the "yest of waves" on an agitated sea and be lost to sight as quick. Will our dear brethren Wright and Tobey tell us how many of us they wish to see there next time and what the Dayton friends wish us to say and do when we get there?

Meantime, let us not forget that every meeting of this kind held yet on earth, has always proportioned its usefulness to the amount of believing prayer which has preceded and attended it. Let us go looking for and expecting to feel, if we do not see, the cloven tongues of fire.

President Hayes on Secret Societies.

Some Southern Republicans lately called on the President and had an interview, which is thus given by the Chicago Tribune:

"The President's visitors expressed a hope that, in any event, the freedmen would be protected, and he replied very emphatically, 'They will find me their friend, but we need to win other friends for them from among those who, because of the color line, are now regarded as their enemies, and we must, in some judicious way, divide the Democratic party of the South and make the Republican party better than it is. Conway thought that any effort to econstruct the Republican party by dividing the Democratic party of the South would fail, because, he said, the Democrats are all members of the White League and Ku-Klux, and could not possibly become Republicans without putting their lives and social position in jeopardy. The President replied that he hoped it was different, and that the better class of white men in the South would gladly break away from the Democratic party if they saw a good opportunity, and mentioned the fact that the recent national Republican success in Louisiana was due to the bold and dignified statement of Albert Leonard, of that State, and added that none but the vile and lawless would belong to those secret organizations."

Our readers have already seen that "The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers," a secret despotism, whose king, or "Chief," as he is named, is P. M. Arthur, of Cleveland' is declared by the Massachusetts Railroad Commissioners a conspiracy against the State and traveling public generally.

President Hayes is entirely mistaken in supposing "none but the (reputedly) vile and lawless" will enter such secret conspiracies. Thousands of good men are drawn or driven into such secret bands by importunity, pressure, curiosity, or such other motives as crafty, idle, and capable men devise. And once on the route of initiation, with bandaged eyes and stunned moral sense, they swear, in some shape or form, to put their lives in forfeit if they violate their vows. They are then the timid tools of the men who have sworn them. The only possible security for travelers on railroads or for Southern Republicans is to prohibit secret orders under adequate penalties.

Saved by Grace.

The Lord is greatly encouraging the hearts of his faithful ones by a large and constantly increasing number of seceders from the lodge.

Scarcely a week passes without bringing tidings of some one, and frequently of several who have turned away from what they believe to be "unfruitful works of darkness." Renunciations often accompany reports of revivals, but never, in a single instance, has a man been led by the baptism of the Holy Ghost into fellowship with these "cunning devices." This is both significant and suggestive. It indicates a positive antagonism between the two and suggests Christ as the great and only remedy for this evil.

If the lodge was of God then a man filled with his Spirit would go into it. God would lead him there. But if of the devil then the opposite would be true; when converted he would turn away from it. This is just what multitudes are doing, turning away from the lodge; and the more a man has of Christ in his heart the less he thinks of Masonry or any of its recruiting offices.

Let those who have come out encourage themselves in the Lord, and let us all be of good cheer, for the day of deliverance makes haste. "It may not be my way, it may not be thy way," but it will be accomplished in God's way. J. P. S.

—As intimated in his report of Wisconsin work, the General Secretary is again in that State. His first point was Sharon, where he preached on the Sabbath and lectured on following evenings.

—Bro. Hinman, having filled his his appointments in Indiana, has gone on to Ohio, where he will remain for a short time. He tells us of the earlier part of his work among the friends of Grant county in this number.

—The lodge is just now using the utmost diligence to recover their lost supremacy in Albion, Iowa. This week they have brought in a lecturer from abroad to browbeat the opposition and comfort the craft. Their triumphing will be short, for the truth has been too surely sown in the community, and the odious nature of Freemasonry made too manifest to suffer a return to public favor.

—Returning from Leesville and Bloomington, Ind., last week, Past Master Ronayne conducted a public initiation in the Carpenter building, on the invitation of the Chicago Christian Association, on this (Thursday) evening. He will soon open that lodge in Michigan and Canada. See notice.

—A post-office clerk was arrested in the Chicago office last week in the very act of stealing letters, and he confessed to having taken hundreds of letters since December last when he began his work. All who send subscriptions will note and act accordingly. The post-office order, registered letter or draft make loss by such theft almost impossible, and in any case where money is not acknowledged in some way in due time inquiry should be made for it. Post-office orders have been lost when the money they would have drawn was waiting for months.

—The sequel of this arrest has a very Masonic appearance. Gross, the clerk, was put in charge of the new U. S. Marshall, Jesse S. Hildrup. A bailiff named Adams was caring for him and left him in a room with two or three busy clerks while he went down stairs to change a bill. When he came back his prisoner had gone, no one yet knows where. Now Mr. Hildrup is a Freemason and may have discovered marks of craft in his prisoner. Nothing was easier than to let the man slip out on the square.

—The Brooklyn Eagle lately reviewed the secret order of the United American Mechanics (O. U. A. M.) and objected to the organization for the reasons that the order takes credit for carrying out those works which are enjoined upon men by Divine authority; that it excludes foreign born citizens; and deprives them of their rights; that it is a Know Nothing organization; that it is engaged in very suspicious work, as are all similar societies which fear the light and are compelled to work in secret. A member objects to this arraignment and the Eagle replies:

'A member of the order of United American Mechanics writes to us in its defense, and argues that since it is all right for foreigners to form secret societies, it cannot be wrong for natives to do so. This argument will apply to those who say that foreign secret societies in this country are all right. It does not apply to the Eagle, for the Eagle is opposed to foreign and native alike. We look upon them all as hostile to the spirit of our institutions and favorable only to intolerance. There is no defensible American interest that cannot be forwarded by frank, honest means. The obvious inference from secrecy is that those who resort to it have objects that will not bear the light of day. The political interest that cannot be openly submitted to the inspection of every American citizen is, we may rest assured, at variance in some respects, with the best interests of the whole country. If this were not so secrecy would not be necessary. Popular sentiment would be its sufficient defense.

—In commenting on the Boston and Maine railroad strike the Chicago Tribune's remarks also are very true and of a wide application among the lodge ranks, when it says:

"It is fortunate, even at this late day, that it be established that the general public have some rights, and that governments have the power to enforce them whenever combinations, under the form of trades-unions or any other form, are made to obstruct, embarrass or destroy the privileges, or convenience, or interests of the public. Such a combination becomes of necessity a conspiracy against the State, and must be met promptly and vigorously."

Call for a Northwest Convention of the National Reform Association.

Our country was settled by Christians who founded our civil institutions on a Christian basis. They believed, as our first Presidents, Washington and Adams, solemnly declared, that there can be no true national prosperity apart from religious principles. To-day our highest welfare as a nation is threatened by determined and persistent attempts to obliterate every Christian feature of our civil life. It has become the patriotic duty of every citizen who values the Christian institutions of government bequeathed to us, to unite in maintaining and securing them against all assailants.

The National Reform Association has been organized to maintain all the Christian elements of our government and to secure a sufficient Constitutional basis for them by an acknowledgment in our National Constitution of the authority of Christ as the Ruler of nations, and of the supremacy of his law. Co-operating with this Association, we whose names are subscribed, unite in calling a Convention of the citizens of Illinois and neighboring States, who favor such a movement, without distinction of party or creed, to meet in Farwell Hall, 148

Madison Street, Chicago, on the 10th and 11th days of April, 1877.

The Convention will open Tuesday afternoon, April 10th, at 2:30 o'clock, and will hold two evening and three day sessions, closing Wednesday evening. All citizens of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and other neighboring States, to whose attention this call is brought, are requested to hold meetings and appoint delegates to the Convention.

OBITUARY.

ALANSON POMEROY, ESQ., of Strongsville, Ohio, an earnest reformer and supporter of the National Association, died at his home on January 4, 1877. He was born in Southampton, Massachusetts, and in 1822, with his father's family, he located in Strongsville, where he resided until his death, a period of over sixty years. A local notice of his death says: "He led such an intensely earnest, active and useful life, as gave him a high position in society, and rendered him a marked man. To be in his presence, when at his prime, was truly inspiring. His form and bearing were dignified and commanding; and though his cold remains now sleep in solitude, one familiar with him can hardly realize, on entering the quiet village of Strongsville, that he will no more see that form somewhere about the premises of the brick dwelling on the corner, or the store, or the "Brick Church"—three monuments of his industry in part, fraught with precious memories; the house, of a devoted husband and father, the store, of a man of large business capacity, the church, of an active, consistent Christian." The funeral services were attended by a large body of friends from Strongsville and neighboring towns, and among the ministers who took part at the mournfully interesting occasion was Rev. Willard Burr, of Oberlin.

—The following biographical sketch of Rev. Richard Horton, whose death was noticed last week is from the Am. Wesleyan:

Rev. Richard Horton, of the Central Ohio Conference, died at his residence near Summerfield, Noble county, Ohio, on the 27th of February, 1877, aged sixty-eight years, nine months and eleven days. He gave himself to God and his service in early life. He was among the first in Ohio who espoused the cause of temperance. He became the friend of the slave, and a fearless and able advocate for freedom, when few had the moral courage to stand by his side. He has been a faithful and honored minister of the Central Ohio Conference for about thirty years. He has many spiritual children in the "better land," and many more that are on the way. His talents as a speaker and writer were far above medium. He is the author of that remarkable book, called "The Image of the Beast." At the last meeting of our last General Conference, Bro. Horton was a member of that body, and took an active part in its deliberations. At the last session of the Central Ohio Conference, he was re-elected president of that body, and appointed to Bennington and Oxford charge. He continued on his field, laboring with marked success, until about three weeks before his death, when his health became so poor he was compelled to cease. When he came home he said to his wife, "Well, mother; God has now given me an honorable discharge." He sunk rapidly but peacefully down to the grave. He professed to enjoy the blessing of heart-purity, and his life proved it true.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. R. Loggan reports in the Telescope a precious work of grace among the students of Lane University of Lecompton, Kansas, during the winter. Lebanon Valley College, a United Brethren institution at Annville, Pa., has also been graciously visited in like manner. The churches of this denomination at Westerville, O., and Western College, Iowa, where colleges are located, have also experienced revivals.

—Rev. M. S. Drury, of the Iowa State Association, was engaged last month at Lettsville, Iowa, in revival labors with Rev. E. S. Bunce. Between eighty and ninety conversions were the fruit of their work.

—The Baptists of Ohio number 46,315. They have thirty-three associations, of which three are colored and one Welch.

—A note from Rev. J. A. Richards, of Fort Scott, Kansas, to the Wesleyan shows that earnest reform work is by no means unfavorable to a revival. He says: "Rev. G. L. Shepardson, of Topeka, is here, doing good work for the Master. The church is much revived, and sinners are awakened. We organized an anti-secret Christian Association last week, and expect to organize another in the city of Fort Scott this spring. The "craft" is troubled, some are losing their "jewels," and some do "repent." One "Master Mason" said, that grace had saved him from sin and secretism too.

—Hon. R. W. Thompson, the new Secretary of the Navy, is a member of the Methodist church, and was a delegate to the General Conference of 1872. His recently published work on "The Papacy and the Civil Power," is a work of great value.

—The village and vicinity of Paw Paw, Mich., has been blessed with the most general and powerful religious awakening the community has ever known. The Presbyterian and Methodist churches held union meetings, conducted by their pastor. Over two hundred persons of the village and neighborhood have given evidence of conversion.

—The Nestorian Patriarch of Persia has forbidden any other missionaries than those of the Church of England to address his people; and the American missionaries, who have held their ground there for forty years, have memoralized the Archbishop of Canterbury on the subject.

—The first Protestant church in Turkey was established at Constantinople in 1846, and in the thirty years succeeding more than a hundred have been organized.

—Rev. S. Smith, the veteran Wesleyan and reformer of Iowa, has so far recovered health as to begin pastoral labor again. He is now stationed in Ringgold county, and in connection with his preaching gives an occasional lecture against the lodge.

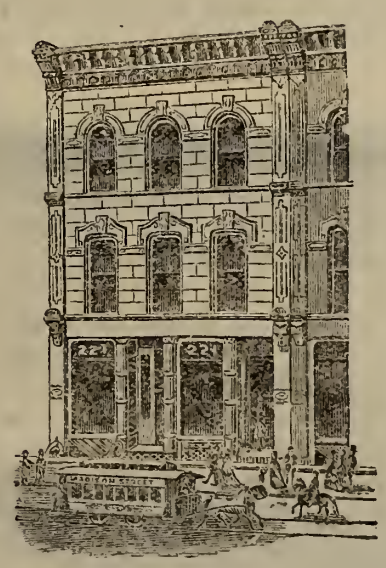
—A revival work of great power in Elm Grove, Ill., has resulted in the beginning of a Free Methodist church. The Presbyterian church was also richly blessed in the same effort.

—A like work and result has been experienced in Oswego, N. Y., under the labors of Mrs. Carter. The meetings were beset with roughs who came to disturb, until the police arrested the leaders.

News of the Week.

—The reported withdrawal of U. S. troops from the State capitals of South Carolina and Louisiana was premature. The situation of the dual governments remains intact except that Chamberlain in S. C. is about giving up the case. Pres. Hayes and the Cabinet discussed the matter seriously last week and resolved to send a commission of reliable and conservative men to Louisiana to examine thoroughly and determine upon what basis a settlement can be made.

—The special legislative commission appointed to investigate the Ashtabula disaster reported last week that from eighty to one hundred lives were lost; that the bridge was defective in its original construction; which defects could have been discovered at any time by proper examination. The report is accompanied by a bill on bridge construction. The coroner's jury on the same case reported previously charging the blame of the disaster entirely to the railroad company.



Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The National Christian Association.

PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.—Pres. H. H. George, D. D., W. Geneva, Ohio.

SECRETARIES.—Rev. W. H. French, D. D., Cincinnati, Ohio; H. L. Kellogg, Chicago.

PRESIDENT OF THE CORPORATE BODY.—Rev L. N. Stratton, Syracuse, N. Y.

DIRECTORS.—Philo Carpenter, J. Blanchard, Archibald Wait, C. R. Hagerty, E. A. Cook, C. A. Blanchard, H. L. Kellogg, E. Hildreth, J. M. Wallace, J. W. Bain, J. B. Walker.

TREASURER AND RECORDING SEC'Y.—H. L. Kellogg, 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

COR SEC'Y AND GENERAL AGENT.—J. P. Stoddard, 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

ASSISTANT COR. SEC'Y.—Mrs. M. E. Cook. 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the Churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Home Circle.

Saturday Night.

The supper is over, the hearth is swept,
And, in the wood-fire's glow
The children cluster to hear a tale
Of that time so long ago—

When grandmama's hair was golden brown,
And the warm blood came and went
O'er the face that could scarce have been sweeter then,
Than now in its rich content.

The face is wrinkled and care-worn now,
And the golden hair is gray;
But the light that shone in the young girl's eyes
Has never gone away.

And her needles catch the fire's light,
As in and out they go,
With the clicking music that grandma loves,
Shaping the stocking toe.

And the waking children love it, too,
For they know the stocking song
Brings many a tale to grandma's mind,
Which they shall hear ere long.

But it brings no story of olden time
To grandma's heart to-night—
Only a ditty, quaint and short,
Is sung by the needles bright.

"Life is a stocking," grandma says,
"And yours is just begun;
But I am knitting the toe of mine,
And my work is almost done.

"With merry hearts we begin to knit,
And the ribbing is almost play;
Some are gay colored and some are white,
And some are ashen gray.

"But most are made of many a hue,
With many a stitch set wrong,
And many a row to be sadly ripped
Ere the whole is fair and strong.

"There are long plain spaces without a break,
That in youth are hard to bear;
And many a weary tear is dropped
As we fashion the heel with care.

"But the saddest or happiest time is that
We court and yet would shun,
When our Heavenly Father breaks the thread,
And says 'our work is done."

The children come to say good night,
With the tears in their bright young eyes;
While in grandma's lap, with a broken thread,
The finished stocking lies.—[Selected.

"Pour Contempt on all my Pride."

The life and death of our Lord Jesus Christ are a standing rebuke to every form of pride to which men are liable. Take for instance:

Pride of birth and rank—"Is not this the carpenter's son?"

Pride of wealth—"The Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

Pride of respectability—"Can any good thing come out of Nazareth." "He shall be called a Nazarene."

Pride of personal appearance—"He hath no form nor comeliness."

Pride of reputation—"Behold, a man gluttonous and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners."

Pride of independence—"Many others, who ministered to Him of their substance."

Pride of learning—"How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?"

Pride of superiority—"I am among you as he that serveth." "He humble himself." "Made a curse for us."

Pride of success—"He came unto his own, and his own received him not." "Neither did his brethren believe on him." "He was despised and rejected of men."

Pride of self-reliance—"He went down to Nazareth, and was subject unto them."

Pride of ability—"I can of mine own self do nothing."

Pride of self-will—"I seek not mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."

Pride of intellect—"As my Father hath taught me I speak these things."

Pride of bigotry—"Forbid him not; for he that is not against us is on our part."

Pride of resentment—"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." "Friend, wherefore art thou come?"

Pride of reserve—"My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death. Tarry ye here, and watch with me." "The Son of man must suffer many things and be rejected."

Pride of sanctity—"This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them."

"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Gal. 6: 14.

Bible Arithmetic.

Addition.—Add to your faith, virtue; to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly-kindness; and to brotherly-kindness, charity. 2 Pet. 1: 5–7. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, 2 Pet. 1: 8, or idle and inactive in the acknowledgement of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Subtraction.—He that lacketh these things, is blind and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. 2 Pet. 1: 9. He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness, * * and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because darkness hath blinded his eyes. 1 John, 2: 9–11.

Multiplication.—Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, (2 Pet. 1: 2,) or, by the acknowledging of God and of Jesus our Lord. For those who acknowledge him in all their ways, he will direct their steps. Those who know Christ and do not acknowledge him before men, can get no multiplication of grace and peace.

Division.—Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. 2 Cor. 6: 17, 18. God's promise here, is that of the most affectionate father towards his tender and best beloved child, on the condition that they take him as their God, depend on him and be separated from the works and workers of iniquity; otherwise he will not receive them or be their God, neither shall they be his people.—The Bible Standard.

Save the Seconds.

A late statesman, one of the conspicuous names on our country's roll of honor, said that he always carried in his pocket a small volume, now one author and now another, which he took out and read while he was waiting for others. In this way he had used the little intervals of time through many years, and had, though without early educational advantages, made himself a learned man. Scarcely a day passes in which we have not to wait five, ten, or fifteen minutes, in office, parlor, or committee-room, for others to meet their engagements with us, or for others to attend our call. This waiting is done away from our own business-places, so that we cannot attend to our own business vocations, and so the precious moments are usually wasted. Suppose we have an average of fifteen minutes a day of such waiting. It will make, in the business days of the year, a total equal to seven and a half business days of idle waiting! Now, think of seven and a half days of careful reading in history—seven and a half long days, of ten hours each.

A small Bible or Testament is an excellent pocket companion, and "seven and a half days" would afford ample time to read it through. Many a Bible student has largely gained his knowledge of the Word of God in odd moments and intervals of labor.—Ex.

The Talmud.

Jews, Protestants and Romanists all agree in receiving as canonical the books of our Old Testament. But as the Romanists would add to these the apochryphal books, so the Jews insist in adding their oral law. They say that when the written law was given to Moses, inscribed on two tables of stone, God also gave another and verbal law explanatory of the first, which he was commanded not to commit to writing, but to deliver down by oral tradition. When Moses came down from the mount, they tell us that he first repeated this oral law to Aaron and his sons, and then to the seventy, and finally to all the people, each of whom are obliged to repeat it in his hearing to insure its correct remembrance. Just before his death, they say, he spent a month and six days in repeating it to them again; and then, they assert, he committed it in a special manner to Joshua, through whom it was imparted to Phineas, and so on through the long line or prophets, and afterward of teachers, down to the time of Judah the Holy, who lived in the second century. by whom it was committed to writing lest it should be lost. This work, consisting of six books, is the famous Mishna of the Jews, which, with its Gemara, or commentaries, constitutes their celebrated Talmud.—Scribner.

India.

The first regular and complete census of India which has ever been taken was in 1871. British India, including the feudatory states, was found to have an area of 1,450,744 square miles, or about one-third the area of the United States, and its population was 238,830,958, or about six times as large as that of the United States. There are in India vast tracts of forest and waste land, so that the average density of population in the inhabited districts is greater even than would be indicated by the above figures. In Bengal the average is 397 persons to the square mile: for the Northwest provinces 430, and for Oude 468. The population per square mile in Great Britain and Ireland, taken together, is only 265. Therefore, it will be readily imagined how crowded India is. Calcutta with its suburb, Howrah, which is to Calcutta what Brooklyn is to New York, has 895,000 inhabitants; Bombay has 644,000; Madras 398,000, and Lucknow 285,000. British India has 140,500,000 Hindoos and Sikhs, 40.750,000 Mohammedans, and 9,250,000 Buddhists, Jains, Jews, Parsees, Brahmoes, Hill-men and Christians. Of the Christians there are not quite 900,000, and of these 250,000 are Europeans. The greater portion of the Christians are in Madras. There are not less than twenty-three distinct languages spoken in India, exclusive of the almost innumerable dialects of the various hill tribes. The variety of castes is bewildering; in the northwest provinces not less than 307 distinctive castes of Hindoos are specified and in Bengal the number of castes is 1,000. Of British-born subjects excluding the army and navy, there are only 59,000 resident in India, and the Americans number only 940. Taking the population as a whole the number of males is about equal to the females, but among the higher castes the females are in a minority—a circumstance due to the fact that the practice of female infanticide still prevails to a great extent. In regard to the occupations of the people, it appears that 1,236,000 persons are employed in the government service; 629,000 are engaged in religious or charitable occupations, including 849 Christian priests or ministers; 30,000 are devotees and religious mendicants; 10,000 astrologers; 5 wizards; 465 "devil-drivers;" 189,000 are engaged in education, literature and science, of whom 518 are poets; 33.000 lawyers; 75,000 doctors; 218,000 "fine artists," under which head are included musicians, acrobats, wrestlers, snake-charmers and monkey-dancers and only one "speech maker" in all India. The agriculturists number 37,500,000; 950,000 are engaged with elephants, camels, horses and cattle, or get their living by hunting; the commercial classes number 3,441,000 and the artisans 8,747,000. There are only 22 gamblers, 5 pigeon flyers, 49 spies, 361 thieves, and 30 rogues and vagabonds—all these being the voluntary designations of the persons so classed. There are, however, no less than 103,000 persons whose occupation is described as "guests."

It has been estimated that the changes in the new version of the Bible, now being made by the English and American committees, would be so slight that 95 per cent. of those hearing the Scriptures read in churches would be unable to tell to which revision, the new or the old, they were listening. It would seem from this there was little danger that Christians would miss in the new what they had learned to love in the old, or would have their feelings wounded by numerous unimportant changes. Among the corrections which would probably be made were such as these: "Straining at a gnat" corrected to "straining a gnat;" "baptizing in the name" should be "baptizing into the name;" "one fold and one shepherd" should be "one flock and one shepherd;" the articles "the" and "a" should be frequently changed, as "the love of money is the root of all evil" should be "a root of all evil."

Children's Corner.

Be Careful what You Say.

In speaking of a person's faults,
  Pray don't forget your own,
Remember those with homes of glass
  Should seldom throw a stone;
If we have nothing else to do
  But talk of those who sin,
'T'is better we commence at home,
  And from that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man
  Until he's fairly tried;
Should we not like his company,
  We know the world is wide;
Some may have faults—and who has not?
  The old as well as young;
Perhaps we may, for aught we know,
  Have fifty to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
  And find it works full well:
I try my own defects to cure
  Before of others tell;
And though I sometimes hope to be
  No worse than some I know,
My own shortcomings bid me let
  The faults of others go.

Then let us all, when we commence
  To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may do
  To those we little know.
Remember, curses, sometimes like
  Our chickens, "roost at home," Don't speak of others' faults until
  We have none of our own.

The Muddy Penny.

When I was a boy a circumstance happened which I shall never forget.

As I was playing in the streets of a large city where I lived, I saw a little boy, younger than myself, who seemed to be in great distress. His eyes were much swollen by crying, and his loud sobs first attracted my attention.

"What is the matter?" I inquired.

"Why—why, I've lost my penny, and mother will whip me," he replied, and then burst anew into tears.

"Where did you lose it?"

"It dropped out of my hand, and rolled right there into the gutter."

"Poor little fellow," I thought, as I really sympathized with him, and offered to help him to find the lost treasure.

The boy brushed away the tears with his arm, and his countenance brightened with hope as he saw me roll up my coat-sleeve and thrust my hand into the gutter. How intently did he watch each handful as it came out freighted with the mud, the pebbles, and pieces of rusted iron. Perhaps the next would bring out his penny. At last I found it.

"Oh, I am so glad!" I hear the little reader say. "And how glad you must have been, too! Now you could dry up the little boy's tears, and make his face bright, and his heart happy. And he would skip and run all the way home without the fear of his mother's displeasure."

But, dear children, listen to the end; and while I know it will make you sad, and perhaps bring a tear to your eyes, it may do you good for a lifetime. I kept the little boy's penny.

As soon as I felt it in my hand, all covered with mud as it was, I forgot all the lessons I had learned at home and in the Sabbath School. I forgot about God, that his eyes were looking right down on me. The wicked one entered into me, as you know he once did into Judas, when for money he betrayed the blessed Saviour. I sold my honor, my good feelings, and my truthfulness, all for a penny.

I searched a little longer, after I had washed it and contrived to hide it; and then, putting on a sad face, told the little boy that I could not find it—that there was no use in looking any longer for it.

Oh, how the big tears ran down his face, as, with disappointed look, he turned away. How mean I felt! I felt guilty; and well I might, for I had already broken three of God's commandments. I had coveted; that led me to steal; and then came in regular order the lie, to cover up all. Alas! what one sin leads to.

Many years have gone by since that wicked act. Since then I have asked God to pardon me for that and a good many other sins I have committed; and, although I love my Saviour, and hope that in his mercy the sins of my youth and of my after years will not be remembered against me, yet I can never blot out of memory's page the dark spot which the muddy penny has imprinted upon it.—Times of Blessing.

Little Strings.

You may have amused yourself with a face made of gutta-percha; pinching it one way and pulling it another, and remarking what different expressions it will assume. When you left off pulling it, it returned to the same face it was before.

Now your faces are softer than gutta-percha, and they are full of little strings called muscles; and these muscles pull them one way or another, just according to your feelings. You feel sad; the little muscles pull your face into a doleful expression. We can tell, by looking at you, how you feel. Or, you feel merry; then the muscles pull your face into smiles and dimples.

But often there are wicked passions at work at the strings. Anger pulls, and oh, what a disagreeable look the face puts on in a minute! Pride pulls the strings, or vanity, or discontent, or deceit; and each brings its own expression over the face.

The worst of it is that when these passions pull very often, the face does not return to what it was before, but the muscles harden and retain that ugly expression. By indulging in evil passions people may work their faces up into such awful faces, that sometimes when you meet a man in the street you can tell, by looking at his face, what his character is. A face that was very lovely when it was that of a child, has had the passion of anger pulling at it so often that it always wears a sullen, cross, dissatisfied look.

Now, dear readers, do you want to have pleasant faces that every one will love to look at? Then don't let the ugly passions get hold of the strings. Put them into the hands of love and charity and good-will and truth and honesty, and then they will be beautiful faces.

I have seen faces without a single handsome feature, that were sweeter to look at than the most perfect features that were ever formed. And why? It is the expression. And what makes the expression? O, it all depends upon whether the bad passions or the lovely graces get hold of the little strings.—Sunshine.

Puzzle Drawer.

Our little folks will find some curious results by multiplying the nine digits used as one number, either in their natural order or backwards, using 9, or any two figures whose sum is 9, as a multiplier, thus: 123,456,789 multiplied by 36 gives 4,444,444,404; also, 987,654 321 multiplied by 36 gives 35,555,555,556; and the same number multiplied by 9 gives us 1,121,111,101; and 987,654,321 multiplied by 9 gives 8,888,888,889. These might be counted as a few only of the very many of just such results.

Mr. Editor:—Father has taken your paper for several years, and we all love to read it, and if not asking too much I would be pleased to have you print these two verses for the young folks to supply with vowels. May God bless your noble work.

Wright's Corners, N. Y.,
March 20, 1877.

Dear Mr. Editor:—I send you the answers to puzzles in the Cynosure of March 15: "The Christian Cynosure" and "Edmond Ronayne," and send another for the Puzzle Drawer. Charles J. Miller.

I am composed of 32 letters.

My 27, 21, 5, 12 and 9 is something every family has.

My 8, 22, 20 27 and 2 is a useful animal.

My 18, 15, 6, 7, 25, 26 and 31 is a wild animal.

My 14, 22, 16, 17, 5 and 23 is the name of the largest city in the world.

My 19, 15, 17 and 1 is the name of the first man.

My 3, 12 and 32 is the name of the first woman.

My 28, 29, 19, 31 and 4 is a measure.

My 11, 10, 13, 12, 2 and 6 is a number.

My 24, 3 and 19 is a kind of drink.

My whole is something all Masons do.

Perlia E. Poole, Bellevue, Michigan, also answers the enigmas of March 15th correctly.

The origin of the word "quiz" is curious. A theatrical manager in London made a wager that he would invent a word of no meaning that shou'd be the talk of the town. He caused this absurd combination of four letters to be chalked or posted all over the city during the night. Of course everybody wondered what it meant—and so it came into the English language. At first every hoax was called a "quiz," but now its meaning is restricted to some little "sell" or trick.

Home and Farm.

Thermal Architecture.

BY THOS. FILER.

The science of thermal architecture is the art of constructing houses in such a manner that they will be cool in hot weather, and easily warmed in cold weather.

This can be done in only one way, and that is by using such materials as will prevent the rapid transmission of heat through the walls, the floor, the ceiling, the doors and windows.

It is a popular fallacy that a house can be made warm by making it air-tight, without any regard to the materials used. No house was ever made warm by air-tight patent weather-strips to the doors and windows. Neither will the air-tight sheathing paper shut out the cold, even though it shuts out every particle of air. It is not necessary that anything shall come into a room to make it cold. It becomes cold only by the heat going out; the same as it becomes dark by the light going out. Neither the darkness nor the cold comes in.

The object of this article is to prove the correctness of the above theory. This I shall attempt to do by quotations from several popular authors, to wit: Wells' philosophy, Johnston's chemestry and the Chicago Inter-ocean.

The Inter-ocean says: "Heat, or coloric, is a property that, to a greater or less extent, pervades all known substances, but there is in reality no such thing as cold, it being only the absence of perceptible heat. For this reason cold cannot be driven from one room into another, although heat can. Cold cannot be shut out of a house, nor can heat be shut in permanently. All substances are conductors of heat, some being better than others. Heat is constantly seeking an equilibrium, just as water is. Now, warm a house or room and shut it up; the heat is conducted off by the walls and other materials of which the room is built, and the temperature reduced nearly to that of the air without. If this occurs in winter the room is cold because there is no heat in it, just as it is dark at night when there is no light in it."

Wells' philosophy says: "Heat is a physical agent, known only by its effects upon matter. In ordinary language we use the term heat to express the sensation of warmth." "Cold is a relative term expressing only the absence of heat in a degree; not its total absence, for heat exists always in all bodies." "Different bodies exhibit a very great difference in the facility with which they conduct heat; some substances oppose very little impediment to its passage while through others it is transmitted slowly."

"All bodies are divided into two classes in respect to their conduction of heat, viz., into conductors and non-conductors. The former are such as allow heat to pass freely through them; the latter comprise those which do not give an easy passage to it.

Dense, solid bodies like the metals are the greatest conductors of heat; light, porous substances, more especially those of a fibrous nature, are the least conductors of heat."

"The conducting power of all bodies is diminished by pulverizing them, or dividing them into fine filaments. Thus saw-dust, when not too much compressed, is one of the most perfect non-conductors of heat. Straw, from its fibrous character, is an excellent non-conductor of heat.

"The non-conducting properties of fibrous and porous substances are due almost altogether to the air contained in their interstices, or between their fibers. These are so disposed as to receive and retain a large quantity of air without allowing it to circulate. Air, in this condition, is one of the greatest non-conductors of heat.

"An apartment is rendered much warmer for being furnished with double doors and windows because the air contained between the two surfaces opposes the escape of heat.

As a non-conducting substance prevents the escape of heat from within a body, so it is equally efficacious in preventing the access of heat from without." So what will make your house warm in winter will make it cool in summer.

"Refrigerators, used for the preservation of animal or vegetable substances in warm weather, are double walled boxes, with spaces between the sides filled with powdered charcoal or some other porous, non-conducting substance. The so-called fire-proof safes are also constructed with double or treble walls of iron, with intervening spaces between them filled with gypsum or plaster of paris. This lining, which is a most perfect non-conductor, prevents the heat from passing from the exterior to the books and papers within."

The following from Johnston's chemistry, is a confirmation of the same principle: "Advantage is taken of the imperfect conducting power of bodies to prevent the passage of heat in any direction, particularly in confining it. Hence double windows, as in Kensington Palace, England, and double doors, with an interposed stratum of air, are sometimes used. Ice houses are constructed with double walls which have their interstices filled with fine charcoal, or some other non-conducting substance, to prevent the influx of heat from without."

"An ingenious plan was adopted by Count Rumford for ascertaining the relative conducting power of the different materials employed for clothing. He enveloped a thermometer in a glass cylinder blown into a ball at its extremity, and filled the interstices with the substance to be examined. Having heated the apparatus to the same temperature in every instance by immersion in boiling water, he transferred it into melting ice, and observed carefully the number of seconds which elapsed during the passage of the thermometer through 135 degrees. When there was only air between the thermometer and cylinder, the cooling took place in 576 seconds; when the interstices were filled with lint, it took place in 1032 seconds; with cotton, in 1046 seconds; with sheep's wool, in 1118 seconds; with raw silk, in 1284 seconds; with beaver's fur, in 1296 seconds; with eider down, in 1305 seconds, and with hare's fur, in 1315 seconds."

This experiment by Count Rumford, is a perfect proof that an empty air-space is not near so good a non-conductor as an air space filled with some proper material.

By conforming to the principle taught by the foregoing quotations I have succeeded in constructing a house that can be kept perfectly comfortable in winter, with one sixth part of the fuel generally made use of in houses of the same size and fashion.

A house of this kind is also much cooler in hot weather. Our best room is frequently ten degrees cooler than the shade outside.

I fully believe, that if all the people of the United States would make their houses as warm as they can cheaply, they would save enough, in the article of fuel alone, to pay the principal of the national debt in less than ten years.

Millions of property and hundreds of lives are sacrificed every cold winter in consequence of making great fires to warm cold houses.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

Francis Murphy and the Pittsburgh Temperance Work.

From a sketch in Our Union by Miss F. E. Willard the following is selected:

His boyhood's home was in county Wexford, Ireland. By birth he was a peasant and a Romanist, and in early life almost his only teachers were the fields and trees, the birds and sky. Born with a brave and gentle soul, much of romance and poetry lay wrapped up in his brain and heart which the ministry of nature was well fitted to conserve. Twenty-five years ago, when but sixteen, he came to seek his fortune in America.

Landing in New York, he was induced by an acquaintance to go to Quebec, Canada. Not finding work here, he went on to Montreal and secured a place in a hotel which, through his drinking habits he subsequently forfeited. He then went to New York State, and in the quiet of farm life, succeeded in controlling his appetite for intoxicating liquors. Here he remained six years, retrieving his character and meeting his first great good fortune in the noble Christian woman who became his wife. Next he removed to Portland, Maine, and became proprietor of a hotel there, remaining for ten years. Under the renewed temptations of this occupation, upon which he entered in spite of the tearful protest of his wife, he again began to drink. The sequel of his dissipated habits is well known in Maine, and Mr. Murphy has never sought to conceal it. Over this most grievous chapter of his life we draw the curtain of a charity as gentle as he ever manifests toward those who like himself have sinned and suffered. Soon after this turning point in his history, the wife he loved went home to heaven, but not until he had declared to her his change of purpose and of heart. The first earnest invitation to become a disciple of the Lord Jesus, that was ever personally made to Mr. Murphy, came from Captain Cyrus Sturdivant, of Portland, and was at once accepted. "If this good friend is interested for me, I shall make an effort to be a sober man," said Mr. Murphy to himself, as the noble captain left his prison cell. "And so"—as we have often heard him say—"I was saved to a redeemed life and pure manhood, by the touch of a Christian's hand."

Encouraged by good people, Mr. Murphy, who has a natural gift of oratory, began to speak on temperance, his first lecture being given April 3, 1870, in the City Hall of Portland. He told his story with streaming eyes and trembling voice, and there was in it that "touch of nature which makes the whole world kin." The great audience wept with him over his griefs and rejoiced with him in his victory. From that time he has gone steadily forward, leading an earnest prayerful Christian life, leaving off the use of liquor and tobacco and setting before him, in all things, "the new man in Christ Jesus, created unto good works," as his only standard and example. With such a Divine force projected into his life, Francis Murphy could not fail to be successful in the truest sense. He lectured in Maine, Rhode Island and Massachusetts, and always with excellent results. Going West in November, 1874, by invitation of the Chicago Woman's Christian Temperance Union, he held large meetings in Chicago and in all the chief towns of Illinois and Iowa, everywhere inducing drinking men to renounce their habit and "seek the Lord behind the pledge." He received one year thirteen hundred applications to lecture, and his engagements kept him speaking every night in the week.

He was, in almost every instance, engaged by the Women's Temperance Unions, our temperance workers, with the ministers of all denominations, cordially co-operating in his meetings, which were always of a strongly religious character. In Monmouth, Illinois, he secured, in fifteen days, fifteen hundred signatures to his pledge. In Sterling, where he gave eight lectures, fourteen saloon keepers voluntarily closed their doors. As a result of the temperance revival begun, through God's blessing on his Western labors, numerous reform clubs were established and thousands added to the church of Christ.

In November last, by invitation of Chancellor Woods of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Mr. Murphy went to "the smoky city," where he has now been holding meetings about twelve weeks. It is safe to say that never, in the history of the temperance reform, has so much been achieved in so brief a space. One hundred saloons have been closed for want of patronage; one hundred husbands and wives, separated through strong drink, are reunited; sixty thousand, (mostly drinking men) have signed the pledge, and sixty per cent. of these have become Christians. The movement has included all classes. Lawyers, manufacturers, business men, mechanics laborers have all taken their stand on the common platform of a blessed deliverance. Immense crowds gather nightly in the thirty different meetings held in the twin cities of Pittsburgh and of Alleghany and their suburbs. The noon prayer meeting, numbering twenty-four hundred, is thronged—persons coming as early as ten A. M. to secure seats. The meetings are all earnest and spiritual. Prayer, Bible reading, Gospel songs, and "testimony" are delightfully intermingled. Mr. Murphy's favorite hymn is, "I hear thy welcome voice," and blessed is the inspiration as these great audiences of newly redeemed souls roll out their chorus:

"I am coming, Lord!
Coming now to thee."

In presence of scenes like these—participated in by all classes—taking place in United Presbyterian and Episcopal churches as naturally as in any others—we are sure to ask, "What is the secret of this abounding life where all was dead before?" Well, first of all, the presence and power of God's Spirit. And, after that, upon the human plane, an explanation is found in the fact that, though as an individual believing in prohibition, Mr. Murphy, as a reformer, deals purely in moral suasion and urges only religious motives. He says: "I feel that it is my mission to first break up the soil and plant the seed. We must do this before we can have blossoms and fruit. So we must first get men's eyes open and men's hearts tender. A reformed man means a great deal, and among other things, it means one more conscientious ballot."

On every pledge he offers, Mr. Murphy has printed "With malice toward none; with charity for all." This is the key note of his work.

He is not a remarkable speaker. There is great room for improvement alike in his logic, his rhetoric, and his grammar. But, through the gentleness of Christ given him in answer to constant prayer, he has, beyond most persons whom we meet—

"A heart at leisure from itself
To soothe and sympathize."

He believes in people—trusts them—loves them. For each and all alike—for the dirty little Arab of the street, the blind old negro, the red-faced rum-seller, the gifted lawyer, the elegant lady—Mr. Murphy has a kindly smile, a friendly hand, a brother's heart.

Pen Sketch from Boston.

The audience from the platform is a study; the hurry of every one to find a seat when the doors are opened prevents care in selection of neighbors; a young lady fashionably dressed is seated by a colored woman whose night out it is, and the fastidious young man finds he is sandwiched between two burly teamsters, who, having finished a good day's work, are ready, as seen by their honest, open faces, to get what good they can. It is wonderful what power Mr. Moody has over such men. At the men's meeting, held from 1 till half past 1 o'clock, and, of course, after the regular noon meeting, hundreds of working men meet, and our first attendance at these meetings gave us a very different idea of the man, Moody, than we had before. In the great audience hall, with its inspiration and his terrible enthusiasm, we sometimes felt, as he spoke, it was too much sledge-hammer work, and having found a place for a nail, he was never satisfied till he not only clinched it, but sent the head clear out of sight. But at the men's meeting he was as his words you can feel are words of love, and the smile that often flits across what little of his face his beard shows is a perfect benediction. These men's meetings are for prayer, and selections of personal experience, as Mr. Moody said it would be impossible to so throw the meetings in the tabernacle open. After a hymn or two, Mr. Moody said, yesterday, "Now, what requests have you to bring, either for yourselves or others that we may pray for? We always want something to pray for." And very soon many lips are unstopped. One rises to thank God for His goodness in receiving him. "When was that?" asked Mr. Moody. "Last Tuesday," said the man; and, with a hearty "Bless God," Mr. Moody rushes off the platform to the man and gives him such a grip of the hand as everybody in the hall feels as if from a battery. Another rose to ask prayer for himself. "I begin to see," he said, "but I don't just understand it all." Mr. Moody said, "Last night, in the inquiry room, that man who has just spoken said to me, I would rather be shot than speak at a meeting.

TENDER AS A CHILD,

"Now," said he, looking at the man, "isn't it easy when God asks you, and if you don't understand it all now, I am glad of it; you never will here; you first receive, accept, and then keep on growing." One day a young man said he was

A BACKSLIDER.

"I have been so for seven years." "Was you ever converted?" asked Mr. M. "Yes, ten years ago." "Three years a Christian and seven years a backslider," said Mr. Moody; "you need to be prayed for, and, my brother, pray for yourself as you have never yet done." A colored man said he had been a slave to drink for fifteen years, had tried every remedy to get rid of the appetite, but it was of no use. Said he, "Some one told of the new cure at the Tabernacle, and I have been at eight meetings, but it does me no good." "Are you willing to give yourself to Christ entirely?" "Well, I am ready to do anything to get rid of this appetite." "Well," said Mr. Moody, "are you ready to give up all for Christ—all your sins?" "I don't know as I am just ready to say that, but I want the appetite killed." "Ah," said Mr. M., "Christ doesn't do any piece work; it is all or nothing with Him." We have seldom heard a more touching prayer than was then offered for this man hardly ready to give up all for Christ. As Mr. Moody said, he was more honest than many. Mr. Moody said, one day he had a great many letters calling him a liar for saying an infidel ever was converted. "I never answer such letters and seldom mention them, but there is a good answer to them here today," and, calling upon one who said he was well known to the frequenters of Tom Paine Hall, where, for years, he was "as bad as the worst, but, four years ago,

A MOTHER'S PRAYERS

were answered while he was reading the Bible his mother gave him when he first left home. He opened it to scoff, but the Spirit convicted him, and now he is an ardent worker for Christ. This case was not the result of the movement in Boston now, but it is proof that the Cross is stronger than reason and philosophy. Mr. Moody could have used other material present, but, as their experience was so recent, it might have been open to criticism, and yet we know the cases are as well founded, and give evidence of sincerity. There was not a dry eye as a man of sixty spoke of how, for over thirty years of his life, he had been a slave to drink. His story was terrible, but was vouched for in every particular by a man well known in Boston. Previous to his conversion he had not seen or heard from his mother for thirteen years, and the meeting of the two was told in great simplicity. His mother asked him to pray, but no, no use to pray; but, urgently asked by his old mother, he knelt down with her and there gave himself to God. For months after his life was despaired of, from so sudden a transition to total abstinence, but even in his terrible weakness and suffering, and sometimes even solicited to take stimulants in very small doses, he positively refused. At last strength and health slowly returned, and for eleven years he has never had the slightest appetite. This case, like the last spoken of, is not the result of any present revival, but Mr. Moody asked the man to relate his story as a proof of what Christ can do; not only take away sin, give peace, joy and hope, but kill appetite; an encouragement to every sinner.

THE INQUIRY ROOMS

are largely attended. So far, the number of church members who come in is very marked. Many are sincere and come for strength and quickening, and show the necessity of deeper work all the time in the various churches. Many are backsliders, but the spark, very weak at first, was never kindled into a flame. Many who come call themselves backsliders, but a moment's talk with such shows they never were converted at all, and this is generally a difficult class to deal with. Many skeptics have come, we believe, only to bother the workers, but some have gone away rejoicing, and many more have gone away ashamed. Another class, and the most interesting, are those who come burdened with sin and a humble sense of helplessness. To all such Christ is ready to fulfill his promises: "Thy sins are forgiven thee;" "My strength is sufficient." A Sabbath school teacher, last Sabbath, finding her seven scholars were very tender, and the Spirit present with them, led them all to the inquiry room Monday night, and five of them gave bright evidence that they had found true peace, and now these five, with their teacher, are very anxious for the other two. We could multiply cases. Care is taken to prevent others from going to the inquiry room, but those who ought, either as seekers or workers. The other evening, a gentleman well known in the community, a church member, on going in, was repulsed and told it was no place for him; it was a meeting for inquirers. "Ah," said he, "then it is for me. I am a sinner, and must find Christ." One result of the preaching on confession of sin and forgiveness of others' faults, and a desire for reconciliation where there has been alienation, is manifested in several cases of wrongly taken, perhaps, years previous, and old enmities, even among ministers, have healed. It will be a deep awakening indeed if all men in Boston give up and restore unlawfully got gains; what an immense amount must change hands.—Letter to the Interior.

RESTITUTION OF PROPERTY

Temperance Revivals.

Dear Cynosure:—It is a very encouraging phase of many of the recent revivals of religion that they reach and save so many inebriates who had been considered almost hopeless and hundreds of such are daily testifying that in their conversion God has taken away the desire and appetite for intoxicating drinks, for which let us bless God and pray that they may be kept as well as saved. But why should not also earnest prayer be offered for tobacco inebriates? Nearly all tobacco users confess that it is a filthy, expensive and needless indulgence of a depraved appetite. Many professing Christians plead poverty and hard times and give a mere pittance for the cause of religion, who spend three times the amount for tobacco that they do for the cause of Christ. What a wicked waste of the Lord's goods; and why should not earnest prayer be offered that those given to this vicious habit may repent of their sin, and be converted from the error of this their way? Dear Christian smoker and chewer, will you join with us in such prayer.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

Any roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK,

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

TIN ROOFS

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

Cynosure Tract No. 28.

FREEMASONRY REVEALED.

A LEGAL ATTESTATION BY EDMOND RONAYNE

To the correctiness of the published expositions of Freemasonry. The author very briefly states the mode of preparation and initiation in the various degrees, with the mock murder and resurrection of the candidate in the personification of Hiram Abiff in the 3d, degree and the penalties of each.

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100. $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M.E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year 1876 were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAPBOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Publishers' Department.

The past week has left a better record than the previous one, for which we thank God and take courage.

This condition of things meets the demands of the Cynosure, and must be continued if any great or permanent enlargement of the Cynosure subscription list is secured.

The last report of Cynosure subscriptions was made in the Cynosure issued March 1st. Another will be made next week, April 5th.

There is only about one month left before the 1st of May. What report of subscribers will we have to give then?

Cynosure subscriptions can be secured easier this year than last in many localities. To illustrate this: Martin Holt, Barton, Wis., last March, sent seven subscriptions for a year each. Last week he sent TWENTY SUBSCRIPTIONS for a year each and one for six months. He writes:

"I started out on my mission with the calculation of getting a club of ten, and I kept going, and, behold, it is doubled and one over. Mr. Hamlyn secured a few names for me and I told every subscriber that I wanted he should get a subscriber by another year, so we can swell the list. The stone has commenced to roll, and may it continue to roll until this reform is established throughout the entire United States. I think the hand of the Lord is in this great work, and may we wrestle like Jacob of old until we come off victorious, is my prayer. We will keep trying, and if we get more subscribers we will send them in."

H. M. Woodford, Waverly, Iowa, sends a club of fourteen for one year.

J. S. Yaukey, Fayetteville, Franklin county, Pa., sends $15, together with seven subscribers for a year, and seven for three months each. He writes: "I will try and send you some more subscribers soon."

E. B. Palmer, Batavia, N. Y., sends six subscriptions for one year.

Preston Allen, West Newton, Ind., sends five subscriptions for a year each, and writes; "I have undertaken once more to get up a club of ten. I have made two or three efforts before this, but could never get the full number. I have now got five subscribers, with the promise of three or four others soon. I will send you the five and promise you the ten."

Will not this encourage others who have made similar efforts without success? There is nothing like persevering in a good work.

President Samuel B. Allen, Westfield, Ill., sends six subscribers for a year, and writes: "I hope for health to run up to the magical number ten or upward."

A. J. Smith, Cromwell, Ind., sends seven subscriptions for three months each.

Who will help us in making out a good report for next week?

Encouraging words have been received from several, and we trust that workers in this reform will do their best in circulating the Cynosure (sowing good seed in this spring time), looking to our Heavenly Father for an abundant harvest of honest, Christian patriots in due season.

"Ye shall reap if ye faint not."

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION to be held at Dayton, Ohio, (probably sometime in June) will be the tenth in the list of these great meetings. No Centennial attraction will interfere this year. Let our prayers, backed by our efforts, make this the greatest and best of the decade.

EXPOSITIONS.—Mr. Ronayne will speak in Union City, Mich., on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, the 5th, 6th and 7th of April. Next week from the 9th to 11th he will visit Sherwood; from thence he goes to Berlin, Ont., which he reaches on the 13th, and will expect to meet the friends promptly.

Thus far, Mr. Ronayne has heard from N. Gay. of Batavia, and J. B. Nessell, of Ellington, N. Y.; J. A. Conant, of Willimantic, Conn; E. F. Morgan, of Middletown, Vt.; John Glen, of Dover, N. J.; A. J. McFarlnad, of Stanton, Pa., and from A. D. Carter, of Deersville, Ohio. As he is going again to Ontario in a short time, and as he proposes to proceed thence through New York State eastward, he would like to hear from other localities, and that definite arrangements be at once completed. He will visit Ohio and Pennsylvania on his way back. Address him at 104 Bremer street, Chicago, that the time for each place may be set and disappointments or delay avoided.

THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION will hold a convention in Farwell Hall, Chicago, on the 10th and 11th inst., beginning on the evening of the 10th. Among the gentlemen expected to make addresses are Rev. Dr. Everts and Prof. F. L. Patton of Chicago, Prof. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton, Prest. Wallace of Monmouth, and Dr. Edwards of Peoria. The Ill. Central and Alton and St. Louis roads return delegates for one-fifth fare, and reduced hotel rates are also provided.

IOWA AND SECRETISM.—The Iowa State Convention, opposed to secret societies, will meet at Oskaloosa April 24. This place is a stronghold of Masonry, and the writer hopes the churches and societies will be fully represented, and that everybody will come who can come. Let not the enemy laugh at our insignificant numbers. It is desired that all who intend coming will send in their names in due time, so that arrangements can be made for entertainment. Address

R. A. McAYEAL,
Oskaloosa, Iowa.

REFORMERS OF MICHIGAN, ATTENTION!

There is to be a quarterly meeting of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies to be held in Howell, Livingston county, April 24th and 25th, commencing at 2 P. M. Tuesday, the 24th. All reformers are expected to be in attendance. Preparations are being made to accommodate all with a home who are from a distance. By order of COMMITTEE.

Topics of the Time.

The settlement of vexed questions in South Carolina and Louisiana has begun in earnest. President Hayes requested an interview with the rival Governors of the former State and both came to Washington about a week ago, and have met the President and members of the Cabinet in a friendly way. It appears that Hampton, the Democratic claimant is exercising about all the functions of the office possible, while Chamberlain has only been able to maintain his title by United States troops. As the former promises to fairly administer the laws toward all classes and has possession in fact, his "nine points of the law" will probably cause a recognition of his claims as the only State government able to maintain itself and preserve the peace. The Cabinet has decided on a commission to visit Louisiana and will reach New Orleans to-day. It is composed of the following gentlemen of high repute for ability and integrity in public affairs: Judge Charles B. Lawrence, Illinois; Ex-Gov. J. C. Brown, Tennessee; Ex-Gov. Joseph R. Hawley, Connecticut; Gen. John M. Harlan, Kentucky; Wapne McVeach, Pennsylvania. The result of their mission will be awaited with some anxiety.

The Moody meetings in Boston continue with the usual full attendance. There have been reports buzzed about, started by Rev. Mr. Murray (the "horse" preacher) and others of that temper, that the efforts in that city were a failure, the audiences small and decreasing and "not many wise, not many noble" had been reached. Reports in the daily press do not give such a coloring. Twenty thousand attended the various meetings a few days ago; and if the stubborn infidel or the proud Scribes and Pharisees reject the gospel call the "common people" hear God's message "gladly," and many drunkards are being saved from the deadly cup and the power of the devil. Mr. Sankey said the other day that the work would continue, probably, until the first of May; after that no promises had been made. Summer is the time of their rest. The great tabernacle buildings too, are comparatively low, large structures that would be so heated by the sun in summer as to make evening meetings very uncomfortable.

New York is agape over the operations of justice almost as strange as the execution of Mormon ex-Bishop Lee, in the laggard but continued vindications of law against the old "Tammany Ring." The leader has passed through the sensational scenes of prison-life, escape, flight, recapture in Spain and return to his cell, while the millions of his stolen wealth have vanished. Sweeney, another of the Ring, fled early, but returned the other day in a humble way to meet his trial and will give up all his remaining property to the city he robbed. Hall, a subordinate member while acting as Mayor of New York, disappeared last week, and either so effectually as to deceive everybody, or else his friends are using deception to cover his escape, but it is believed that he has fled to avoid the fate of Tweed. Late have these men learned to esteem the proverb and the policy of the honest waterman.

Mr. Hall always defied public opinion so far as it connected him with the Tammany frauds, yet if his flight is confession of guilt he has found his secret order of St. Tammany a useful agent, for the time being at least. Whether he might be summoned as an important witness against the "ring," or whether he was personally implicated and liable to the fate of Tweed, in either case St. Tammany would serve his purpose as does the Masonic lodge those who trust in it. As the Tribune pertinently says:

"That 'ring' would furnish him the money for royal living abroad, and maintain a scrupulous care over his matters at home. It would bewilder those in search of him, and, if possible, clap, with significant selection, court-plasters over the eyes and mouth of that venerable spinster, Justice. In the end it will be found, we predict that Hall is alive, well, and kept away by Tammany's diplomacy."

NEVER GIVE UP.

Never give up! It is wiser and better
Always to hope than once to despair;
Fling off the load of doubts cankering fetter,
And break the dark spell of tyrannical care.
Never give up! or the burden may sink you;
Providence kindly has mingled the cup;
And in all trials and troubles bethink you,
The watchword of life must be, "Never give up!"

Never give up! There are chances and changes
Helping the hopeful a hundred to one;
And through the chaos, high Wisdom arranges
Ever success, if you'll only hope on.
Never give up! for the wisest is boldest,
Knowing that Providence mingles the cup;
And of all maxims, the best as the oldest,
Is the true watchword of, "Never give up!"

Never give up! Though the grape-shot may rattle,
Or the full thunder-cloud over you burst;
Stand like a rock, and the storm or the battle
Little shall harm you, though doing their worst.
Never give up, if adversity presses,
Providence wisely has mingled the cup;
And the best counsel, in all your distresses,
Is the stout watchword of, "Never give up!"

A GLANCE AT THE PAST.

A very few, if any, of our writers even analyse the events that occur among us, and point out what the Jesuitry of the lodge may have had to do with those events. The reason is because no one suspects such holy men as Freemasons of having anything to do in shaping our destinies and interfering with our affairs, as Jesuits do in Latin countries. The average American would no more suspect a Freemason of playing the villian in a real drama than he would suspect his own clergyman of doing such a thing, so holy is the Freemason supposed to be.

But let us revert to the past for a few minutes, and see what we can trace there. In the grand yet wicked plot for surrendering West Point to the British, and thus suffocating the revolution by cutting off the New England head from the body, we see Benedict Arnold, the chief figure on the scene, a great Mason. Were Andre and the British leaders also Masons? It is very probable that they were; because Masonry is an English institution, and it furnishes a very convenient means for holding intercourse with traitors.

The plot that threatened the colony with such imminent peril, was broken up by three honest men, who probably did not understand Masonic flummery, since they would not take money in exchange for love and duty to their country.

In the duel between Hamilton and Burr, the latter was a Mason; and his bearing throughout the whole affair showed a deliberation and apparent confidence of success which might naturally spring from the assurance of Masonic aid and assistance. For instance, if the seconds of the two parties should happen to be Masons, which might very probably occur, (since holy Masonry would never be suspected, even by Hamilton himself) then Burr could feel almost certain of killing his adversary. It is certain that Washington, in his farewell address, spoke against Masonry; and Hamilton might well have been suspected of putting this illustrious chieftain up to it. Hence, true Masons could not wish him well for that.

In General Jackson's duel, growing out of his getting possession of another man's wife, how far lodge-Jesuitry may have prevailed, no one knows, any more than in the case of Hamilton. But it is certain that Jackson was a high Mason, and that he deliberately killed his man.

In the case of the duel between Mr. Cilley and Mr. Graves, no one knows, perhaps, whether the latter was a Mason; but it seems pretty certain that his second, Mr. Wise, was, and that this second encouraged his principal by urging him to take better aim until Mr. Cilley was killed.

In these cases we have but little knowledge of how far the actors were under the influence of Masonry; but we can see enough of the cloven hoof, knowing as much as we do now of the monster, to desire to know a great deal more of the matter. Such and similar cases would, doubtless, be very instructive in illustrating the ancient and honorable character of Freemasonry.

In 1852 a noted man of the South visited a man in the heart of New England, and said to him, we may suppose, in signs, symbols, winks, and nods, something like this: "You are the descendant of the true Bunker Hill; a son of the Puritans; a Democrat, and a New Englander; now will you bring all these glories to the support of slavery if we will give you the chair of state?"

Reader, both of these men, one of whom proved to be rebel a general, were said to be Masons; and such was the power of Masonry at that time throughout the whole country that political transactions could be carried on by it in about the style and manner which we have here supposed. At the same time General Scott, a man of too noble a character and of too much true patriotism to ply the tricks of Masonry; who had stood the whole pressure of the Southern democracy, with the great Mason Jefferson Davis at its head, resisting its covert temptations and persecutions to the last; who had identified his whole life with the most distinguished services to the country, but who would not sacrifice his love of country and his good name to slavery—this General Scott and his claims to the country's respect, were run over by the lodge as by a locomotive. The lodge was on its way to blood, and war, and havoc; and the old hero, in his efforts to oppose it, was crushed, never to hope again.

His adversary went on, into the Presidency; for Masonry always wins. He was succeeded by another Mason, James Buchanan, and Buchanan was succeeded by a man who, though not a Mason, yet suffered his administration to be run by the lodge. Lincoln was succeeded by a thorough-going Mason, Andrew Johnson, who was followed by General Grant, a warm friend of the lodge, and he is succeeded by an Odd-fellow. Though Mr. Hayes is probably the best man that has been in the presidential chair since the days of John Quincy Adams, yet it remains to be seen whether he, too, will not have to succumb to the power of the lodge.

It would be an interesting study to go back to the days of Andrew Jackson, that great Mason and great Democrat, when the people turned aside from following up the broken and routed ranks of the minions of the lodge to join themselves to democracy, and see how much the Jesuits of the lodge have had to do in managing our national affairs. I imagine it would be found that almost all the presiding officers of Congress from that time until now have been Masons, or secret society men. And all the Presidents and Vice-presidents have been either secret society men, or men who would suffer themselves to be ruled by the lodge, except few who have been removed by sudden death.

It is time that the American historian should begin to take into account the effect that the Jesuitry of the lodge may have upon all the events that transpire among us. Unless this is done, our history will be imperfect and incomplete. No one can have a correct understanding of it. For instance, when an European looks upon all the licentiousness of tongue and pen, all the low, tricky management, all the puerlity, all the violence and murder that have been committed during the last presidential election, he would regard it, very likely, as an inevitable result of republican institutions; but if traced to the bottom it would be found, I believe, entirely due to Masonic Jesuitry. The base spirit of secret association has taken possession of both parties. Masonry is the animating principle of the Republican party, and Kukluxism that of the Democratic party; and if they are not arrested in their career, the country will soon become divided again into two hostile camps upon the field of martial strife. If the country should be plunged into war by Masonic machination, imperial government, the end toward which the lodge aims, would probably be the result.

There is one thing to be said in favor of our Anti-masonic movement: it will put the people on their guard hereafter against the sanctimonious pretensions of the Jesuits of the lodge; and in thus being forewarned they will be forearmed. What the Republic needs is a party of pure American principle; one that will not allow itself to be controlled and maddened as if by the small pox, with this injection of secret association which has come into the country from the cast off garments of the old world. This virus, which has now become a seated disease in the North and the South, should never be received into the young veins of the West. It is there that we should look for the conservation of American institutions and of American health, but which can never be accomplished where Freemasonry poisons the moral atmosphere. The West has almost entirely grown up since that humble individual, yet an American citizen, William Morgan, undertook to arrest the spread of Masonry westward from New England; but the West is still young and powerful and may yet, by an effort, purge itself of the fell disease which has already seized upon it.

There is one question that the American voter should always ask himself, which is: Does the candidate appeal to me for office through the influence of a foreign institution—is he a Mason or sustained by Masons, or simply does he stand before me on American grounds, as an American man devoted exclusively to American institutions? Upon the manner in which this question is settled will depend the safety of the Republic.

AMERICAN.

OMENS OF GOOD.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—It is both refreshing and suggestive to read an article in the Chicago Evening Journal (weekly) of the 14th inst., headed "Undercurents."

No careful reader of the Cynosure can fail to appreciate that article, so truthful, so pertinently drawn, so traceably clear in all Masonic history both ancient and modern. "Undercurrents" in politics, in religion and in social life, is at once the nomen capita for all organized secrecy, of which Freemasonry is the most fitting representative.

My pen cannot do a better service to our anti-secret cause than to ask the students of Masonic history and readers of the Cynosure to not only read that article, but compare its points with historical facts.

Some of these facts, pointed out so clearly in this article, are: These "undercurrents" (secret societies) undermined the Israelites in both church and state; drove them into idolatry and into exile. They have driven France into infidelity and into great political confusion. They used slavery in the United States to form a political maelstrom, in which our civil government was well nigh wrecked. Most pertinently are these truth-telling words applied to our late political struggle: "Step by step, foot to foot, inch by inch, hand to hand, have honesty and right been fighting against corruption, peculation and perjury—these "undercurrents"—to secure a peaceful and sound administration of our public affairs."

This thought is suggestive: It is a noted fact, that while both political parties share largely of these secret societies (undercurrents), a distinct classification is discernable in the men belonging to these socities. Class first are men in whom manhood ranks above the Mason. Class second are men in whom the Mason ranks above manhood. The former are the lovers of our free government, and are ready to sink every other consideration but moral principle to secure our loved country; the latter are those in whom party, clan, clique or spoils predominate over principle, whether they be Democratic or Republicans.

Hence the Journal is correct in saying, "It was a narrow escape; it was too close a shave to be comfortable. But it was a valuable lesson. It will teach the better class of society that it will not do to trust weapons of destruction in the hands of fools or knaves. It will teach us the real value of the ballot-box, of national stability, of political integrity and the utter worthlessness of the so-called Democrats (undercurents—Masonry) in this country." Here the Journal shows that party spleen films his eye, and refracts his vision from the true position of our national enemy, Masonry, not Democracy.

The Journal rights itself up again: "It is better to trust in a Divine Hand that helps integrity to win victories and maintain a foothold in national affairs, than to believe that human ability alone has twice extricated the United States from ignominious destruction at the hands of its internal enemies." Thank God for that. "Our new President believes in Providence, and from that source expects and asks for courage and help to perform his intricate duties." Thank God for that. Then let him cut loose from these secret undercurrents that God may bless him and the nation under him.

J. C. GRAHAM.

VIOLA, Ill.

The faithful observance of one principle alone made Charles Sumner's name immortal. Through evil and through good report, amid sneers and plaudits, with the favoring wind and against the opposing gale, he always remained true to the principle of equal and exact justice to all men. No matter where he stood, or with what party he acted, when the rights of the colored race were threatened, or halting statesmen would leave their rights in jeopardy, he came out like Peter the Hermit recounting the woes of Palestine, and nerved the popular conscience by his matchless appeals for justice and humanity.—Ex.

Southwick's Experience as a Mason.

[Concluded from last week.]

"You have heard, sir," I replied, "of one of our Yankee brethren who advertised, as a rare show, a wonderful horse, which exhibited the queerest freak in nature imaginable; for the tail of the beast was precisely where his head ought to have been! The virtuoso of the vicinity read the advertisement and were all exceedingly puzzled to account for so rare a phenomenon! The village attorney had found no precedent of the kind in that magazine of wonders called Every Man His Own Lawyer; the knight of the pill and pestle had searched Buchan's Family Physician in vain for any likeness of such a lusus naturæ; the honest parson, who did not happen to be a Boanerges, declared that he had never heard of such a wonder since the beast with seven heads and ten horns, but these were all at the right end; the village matron—I may as well speak out plainly—the shrewd midwife well knew that a child might be born with two heads, or a horse with two tails! She had had seen the one, and had heard of the other from the farrier man, and was, therefore, quite 'sartin' it might be so; but even she had never, 'in all her born days,' heard of any creature coming into the 'univarse' with its head at the tail end! While these sage speculations occupied the minds of the village philosophers, the people were crowding round the stable door and clamoring for admittance. The cunning showman, like my Masonic monitor, knew full well that by taking in one at a time the game would last the longer. The first that entered came out after a while, apparently well pleased, and, to the question, 'Is his tail where his head ought to be?' readily answered in the affirmative. Others, equally prudent, and resolved not to expose their own credulity, followed his example. At length a clown among the crowd pushed his way in and behind the curtain; but he soon came out again and, with honest simplicity, cried out, 'Damnation sieze the fellow; he's tied the tail to the hay rack and let the head poke out the tother end of the stall!' I need not add the effect which this disclosure had on the gaping multitude at the barn door, nor that which my relation of it produced on the countenance of my sage friend and preceptor in the occult and sublime science of Freemasonry; but of one thing you may rest assured, that in every Masonic lodge, from that of the pin-feathered Boaz, or apprentice, to the full fledged ineffable, you will find the horse with his head where his tail ought to be. And if any of you wish to be made asses of, you have only to pay him a visit, and the length of your ears will soon equal the extent of your wishes.

Southwick had occasion, after all, to rejoice in the fall of the curtains. He did not take leave of the institution until he had taken the fourth degree, but he informs us that, previous to mounting that step in the ladder, he had "become pretty well disgusted with the mummery and quackery of the lodge room," in proof of which he quoted an epigrammatic correspondence which took place between him and that "cunning, red-coated Yankee," as Mr. Southwick styled him, who was, nevertheless, a talented, good-hearted, amiable man, barring his rage for speculating in Masonry. The following squibs, passed and repassed in good humor at the time, while the Monitor was presiding at the old Union, and Southwick was at the Secretary's desk, concludes these quotations:

In a garret in Court street there mingles a set
Of sharpers and asses and noodles, well met,
Who pretend to a secret—all folly and fudge—
He that pays for admittance his money will grudge,
When he finds to his sorrow his business fail,
And he feels like a fox with a trap at his tail,
For the way to bankruptcy and ruin is clear,
To the flats that come hither for secrets and beer,
Old Jamaica, gin, brandy, and frolic and fun.
Silly dupes of delusion! their race is soon run.
When their cash and their credit and fame are no more,
Then in vain will they knock at Freemasonry's door.
They are no longer worthy to meet on the square,
To relieve them the lodge has no money to spare.
"Let them go to the poor house," each dear brother cries;
"For in that they may learn to be sober and wise."
For my part I've seen full enough of your joke;
May I never again "buy a pig in a poke."
I shall bid you farewell, for a parcel of geese.
And I hope I'm the last Yankee booby you'll fleece. S.

This produced from the presiding officer the following impromptu:

Be quiet—I know it—say never a word,
Our craft is to blind and bamboozle the herd.
The world is a goose, and pray where is the man
Who'll not pluck a feather whenever he can?
You may go—but remember, the fate of the fool
Will be yours, if you dare to tell tales out of school. W.

To which Southwick rejoined:

I shall go; but to talk of the tineel and trick,
The arts that are taught in this school of Old Nick,
Would be idle indeed; for the world would cry "Boo!"
To the goose that was plucked by such sharpers as you. S.

Should Christians Fellowship Masons?

Editor Cynosure:

In the Cynosure of Feb. 22, among the mail items, is a letter from N. H. Dorsey, whose letter expresses the views of many candid conscientious Christians, and to me it seems they take a wrong view of the subject. I wish to "show also mine opinion."

The Bible is the rule to which every Christian should conform, both in faith and practice, so, "to the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isaiah 16:20. The teaching of the Bible is that all sacrifice, all worship, and all prayers, not offered to God through Jesus Christ, is devil worship. "No man cometh to the Father but by me."—John, 14:6. "But I say that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice they sacrifice to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils." Read the whole chapter.—1 Cor. 10. The two passages prove that there is no approach to God but by Jesus Christ, and that all Gentile worship is devil worship. "And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto devils."—Levit. 17:7. "They sacrificed unto devils, not to God."—Deut. 32:17. "And he ordained him priests for the high places, and for the devils, and for the calves which he had made."—2 Chron. 11: 15. These passages prove that all idolatry is devil worship. "Thou shalt not bow down to their gods, nor serve them, nor do after their works; but thou shalt utterly overthrow them."—Exodus 23:24. "If there arise among you a prophet (teacher), or a dreamer of dreams, and give thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or wonder come to pass, * * * And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, shall be put to death.—Deut. 13. To quote all the scriptures that forbid and denounce idolatry and class it as devil worship, and that prove that there is "none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved," would be to rewrite a very large portion of the Bible. The above should suffice for samples.

Now, to prove that modern Masonry is the same ancient idolatry that the whole Bible so strongly condemns, we will quote from the high Masonic standard authority, Albert G. Mackey's Masonic Lexicon, page 553, under the word Phallus. After giving the history of this god or symbol, he says:

"In the Indian mysteries, it was called lingam, and was always found in the most holy places of the temple. It was adopted by the idolatrous Israelites, who took it from the Moabites when in the wilderness of Sin, under the name of Baal-peor." [See Numbers, 25:3. And Israel joined himself unto Baal-peor; and the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel.] In short, the veneration of the Phallus, under different names, was common to all the nations of antiquity. We shall again have occasion to refer to it in the article on the 'Point within a Circle,' with which Masonic emblem the Phallus has been identified by Dr. Oliver."

On page 366, same authority, "Point within a circle."

"This emblem is to be found in every well regulated lodge, and is explained as representing: the point, the individaul brother; and the circle, the boundary line of his duty. But that this was not always its symbolic signification, we may collect from the true history of its connection with the Phallus of the ancient mysteries, * * * —pp. 367-8. But it is useless to multiply examples of the prevalence of this symbol among the ancients, and now let us apply this knowledge to the Masonic symbol. We have seen that the Phallus and the point within a circle come from the same source, and must have been identical in signification. * * * The present signification of the point within a circle, among Masons, is, doubtless, comparatively modern, and has superceded the original meaning of the symbol."

Here we have the highest Masonic authority declaring that the Phallus is the same pagan god as Baal-peor of Scripture, and that the "Point within a Circle" and the Phallus come from the same source and are identical in meaning; that the Phallus, or lingam, always occupied the most holy place in the temple, and that the "Point within a Circle" is to be found in every well regulated lodge; thus proving that Masons have the same for this pagan idol that the ancients had, and the funeral service of Baron de Palm, celebrated last May in the Masonic temple, New York, was the same Phallic worship which was practiced in ancient Egypt, and the same as practiced by the Israelites above referred to, and for which 24,000 idolaters were slain on that occasion. Now, if God forbade such idolatry then, and he is the same God yet, "yesterday, to-day and forever," where shall we find the law and the testimony for fellowship, charity and brotherly recognition now; and, having shown from Masonic authority that Masonry is pagan idolatry, we cite the same authority to show that Masonry and Christianity cannot be connected. On page 404, article "Religion," Mackey says:

"The religion, then, of Masonry is pure Theism, on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions; but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge, or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry."

So that a Christian is not permitted to connect (join) the truth of Christianity with Masonry; thus it is impossible for any man to be a true and sincere believer in both religions, and if he is hypocritical in either should Christians fellowship a hypocrite? Paul says, Ephsians 5:11, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them;" and we have good authority for saying that these works of darkness were the same pagan mysteries which we have quoted from Mackey. Again Paul says, 1 Cor. 5:11: "But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be an idolater, with such a one, no not to eat." How is that about eating the sacrament?

I know that Masonic ministers will deny these statements about paganism, but that can be accounted for by their Masonic oath, which is, in substance, they swear never to tell the truth on the subject of Masonry under no less penalty than to have their throat cut. Their professions of godliness is entitled to no more credit than the scribes and pharisees, priests and high priests in Christ's day. They certainly made as great claims to holiness as Mason preachers do now, and as to judging them, etc., in the same chapter where Christ says, Judge not, He also says, "Beware of false prophets (teachers) which come to you in sheep's clothing but inwardly they are ravening wolves." Paul says: "Now the spirit speaketh, expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

years I occupied the same standpoint. I could not believe but what these ministers were good Christians, but by degrees I had to change my mind. I will give one item: When I was almost crazy on the subject, in a social meeting where one of these good Masonic preachers, a Mason for fifty years, was leading the meeting, I rose and stated my trouble and in deep feeling asked all to, then and there, pray for me that God would show me what was truth; if Masonry was an institution of God calculated to help men to heaven, I would be a Mason, fight for it as hard as I had against it; but to my surprise the preacher left the house in a rage, and was followed by the Masons, one by one, when they were all gone the rest of the brethren and sisters prayed earnestly for me and light came. Since then I have not had a doubt. Afterwards I asked the old minister, "What made you run? Why did you not pray for me?" His reply was, "I dare not bring that subject before God in prayer." And the others said the same in substance. HIEL LEWIS.

LETTER TO AN EDITOR.

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa., Jan. 22, 1877.

ED. GOLDEN CENSOR:—I look upon your paper as a "child of providence." God in his divine wisdom having raised you out of obscurity as its editor, endowed you with natural wit, nerve, and grace as a "watchman upon the walls of Zion," and given you a penetrating eye and a nimble pen, capable of exploring every nook and corner; yet, with all your excellent sayings and withering rebukes, you will suffer the demon secrecy, with its satanic blight, to stalk abroad unnoticed. And yet as a wise man of God, you see plainly, I am assured, that it is sapping out the vitality of both church and state; and while you remain dumb, the fearful contagion is spreading, wicked men are laughing in their sleeves, and devils are holding a jubilee, while God is dishonored, and Zion bleeding at every pore. As a conscientious editor, how can you remain silent? O think of the brevity of time, the value of human souls, and the fearful judgment awaiting us. Can you expect while mute to hear the judge say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," after shunning to declare the whole truth?

But you are ready to say, many of my patrons would revolt, and forsake me. If so, let them go. The ranks would soon be filled up by others. Is it not better to "obey God than man?" If you but confide in him, you have all to hope, and nothing to fear; and by leaning upon divine power, your paper may form one of the principal agencies in moulding Christian life. You are my superior, but I claim to be your senior—will you therefore receive a word of admonition all in love. REV. JOHN FOHL.

EDITORIAL NOTE.—We must again disclaim any merit found in the Censer. Give God all the glory. * * * As for the withering rebuke of our aged brother, we gratefully and thankfully accept it. The [illegible] of secrecy is one that truly from the fact that so many excellent men are found in the secret clans from the Masonic fraternity down to the children's "Cold Water Temple." The curse of secrecy has eaten into almost every home, and honeycombed every society, and none are more sensitive than these adherents of the lodge when one attempts to open his mouth against them. However the public may view the course of the Censer upon this issue, we wish it distinctly understood that we are above fear of man. "In God we trust," and no power on earth shall frighten us into a "dumb dog." It is our firm conviction that a man can become so full of religion that he will have no need of these externals. We have not space to enlarge upon this subject, and can only say to every young man, beware of the fetters which secret societies, in the very nature of things, bind around your souls. The principles upon which secrecy is based, in a republican form of government, and among a free people, are all wrong—subversive of the interests of humanity. To us it is simply astonishing, how a child of God can belong to one of them, and at the same time be in full, impartial sympathy with all mankind.—Golden Censer.

LODGE POLITICS IN OHIO.

SPARTA, O., Feb. 25, 1877.

Editor Freeman:

I thought you and the readers of the Freeman would like to hear from this part of the country again, as there was some excitement here about election time concerning an old gentleman by the name of Alexander Needels, who thought he was born in a free land and had the right to vote for whom he pleased; but he found that he was sadly mistaken. Now I wish to say this old gentleman is eighty years old, and has always been known as a man of strict veracity, and not only so, but as a Christian, having been a member of the Methodist Church for a great many years. I very distinctly remember, in my childhood, of hearing him tell the story of the Cross. This old gentleman believes in only one true and living God, and he also believes in the commandments, where this same God says, "Thou shalt not kill." And because he is not a friend to murderers, especially the murderers of Morgan, they have set themselves at work (I mean the Masons) to see if they can destroy his character in his old age. The readers of the Freeman will recollect that this same old gentleman was arrested last Fall and bound over to court, and was to be tried in this present month. I suppose you will be anxious to know whether he has been hung or sent to the penitentiary for life. I will say that his trial is past and he still lives. I saw him the other day, and I cannot see that Masonry has caused the furrows of sorrow to deepen any as yet. He thinks that he is yet able to whip six or eight of the very best (I mean intellectually) men that were ever brought to bow the knee to Baal. But I will now tell how he came off with his trial. After he was arrested, the noble lawyer that was at the bottom) he being a Mason) of the affair, who expected to scare the old gentleman out of one or two hundred dollars, to add to his store of dishonest gain, began to find that the voice of the people was down on such dastardly conduct; consequently he began to get very sick, and finally sent word to Mr. Needels, if he would come and pay [illegible] something and be friendly, he would settle it up all very nice. But the old gentleman did not scare worth a cent. Consequently, when court set, the grand jury had more good sense than to pay any attention to the case. Now, instead of getting a little, he may have to pay out a little to settle the cost. The way of the transgressor is surely hard. I must here say that the man that swore out the warrant is a gentleman, and had no thought of anything of the kind, until three of the most unprincipled characters in this county went and actually scared him into it; and all three of them belong to the lodge. Let me say a word with regard to the progress of secret societies in this community. We had Sons of Temperance, grangers and Good Templars; but they have all passed away, and are only to be remembered among the things that were. We still have Masons and Odd-fellows, but whenever we come across a man of any standing in society and ask him if he is a Mason, he will say (looking very sad) "Why, I was once, but don't attend any more." This must be so or they are actually ashamed of themselves; but I will leave it to your readers to say which. * * This lawyer of whom I have been writing, has received a challenge from Mr. Needels to discuss the question, whether Masonry is not anti-Christian. But he has as yet refused to accept the challenge, but has disappeared as a dark cloud behind the scene, and remains speechless as the chambers of eternal silence.

Reform News.

—The General Secretary expects to attend the Michigan State meeting at Howell, April 24th and 25th.

—Mr. Ronayne conquers the proverb "A prophet is not without honor." His work during last week was confined to a single evening in the Carpenter building of which our reporter gives us an interesting account.

—Bro. Hinman has continued his present lecture trip from Indiana into Ohio. He has spoken at Wakeman, Camden, Litchfield, Chatham and York. At last writing he was arranging for meetings in Medina county, and was the guest of the veteran Dr. Bingham.

—Bro. Cogswell's letter tells us of new and hopeful arrangements for the reform in California. The friends on the Pacific slope have been calling for such help for a year or two, and we believe their expectations will not be disappointed.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. — Since my appeal through the Cynosure I have received on the amount pledged me at our last meeting, the following: William Cheetham, of Lowell, $5.00; Daniel Leggett, of Allegan, $2.00. The latter, however, was not pledged but was a free will offering. Many thanks to these brethren for their response. The sums received were greatly needed to help meet the increased expenses caused by the helplessness of my dear wife, for whom, though not entirely without hope, I am yet fearing the worst. I need greatly what is still due, but shall make no more appeals in this way. In God is my trust, though human sympathy is very precious.

Fentonville, Mich., Mar. 20.

FIRST EXPOSITION IN THE CARPENTER BUILDING.

The announcement that Past Master Ronayne would give a public exposition of the First degree of Masonry on the evening of March 29th, at 221 West Madison street, brought together an audience that filled Carpenter Hall to repletion.

The usual devotional exercises were observed, the Rev. J. P. Stoddard offering prayer. Mr. Ronayne having arranged his assistants on the platform and perfected his arrangements for "work," proceeded to make the preparatory remarks, in the course of which he requested the audience to refrain from applauding or any noisy demonstration during the evening. It is worthy of note that this request was cheerfully complied with, and a more respectful and orderly assembly could not be desired. The candidate was now led in and submitted very gracefully to the humiliating ordeal through which he passed. As the initiation progressed Mr. Ronayne, in a masterly manner, dissected and explained the various rites peculiar to the degree, and exhibited them to the ridicule of his hearers. He showed himself to be thoroughly conversant with the subject in hand; possessed of a tenacious memory, enabling him to go into even the minutest details; clear and logical in the treatment of his theme; sarcastic and witty at times, and frequently creating merriment at the expense of the lodge. The exposure had a visible effect, and no doubt helped to open the eyes of many to the real character of Masonry.

Among the charges brought against the institution and substantiated are these: 1st, That its teachings are in opposition to the Bible and subversive of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity; 2d, That it degrades and totally ignores the Word that "was with God, and was God, without whom was not anything made that was made;" 3d, that its initiatory rites and worship are essentially pagan; 4th, that its god is a myth; 5th, that it swindles men out of their money and freedom. It was amusing, at times, to notice the efforts of some in the audience, especially ladies, to control and restrain their feelings of disgust and aversion at the silly and iniquitous mummeries of the lodge room. One lady in particular surprised her neighbors frequently, as with quivering lips she broke forth vigorously in these and similar expressions: "To think that men would make such fools of themselves!" "Why, the whole thing is nothing but a mixture of tyranny, bigotry and paganism!" The counterpart of this was displayed by a man, evidently a Mason, seated on the window sill in the rear of the hall, and on whom the exhibition seemed to have a peculiar effect. Unlike the lady mentioned, he kept mum, but substituted a series of facial distortions and with clinched fists went through a system of gymnastics that would be creditable to a professed acrobat.

A large number of tracts were distributed among the audience in the early part of the evening, which were thankfully received and which will, in due time, bring forth fruit. At the close of the initiation a number of queries were put to Mr. Ronayne, all of which were satisfactorily answered. The benediction being pronounced by the Rev. J. P. Stoddard the meeting separated.

From Rev. H. Cogswell.

Salem, Columbiana Co., Ohio, March 24, 1877.

Dear Bro. K.:—A long time has elapsed since I wrote any thing for the Cynosure; my pen seems to have been idle and my mouth closed through my connection as a pastor where I dared not speak out. "This bondage has now ceased with me," and I buckle on the armor to contend with my foe, if I die in the contest.

I am pleased to inform you that arrangements have been made with me by the California Association, whereby I am to serve them as their lecturer. I expect a hard time, but I believe God in his providence allowed me to enter the lodge, so that I may see its evils the better to fit me as a witness against them. I feel an irresistible conviction of duty urging me on to do all I can to overthrow this and other evils. But when I look abroad, and over the vast field, it seems almost a hopeless case, a hopeless task. Then I am comforted with the thought that it's God's work, and if good seed is sown in faith and prayer it must germinate and bear fruit in due time. "He that goeth forth weeping, bearing precious seed shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." So thoroughly am I convinced of the evil influence of Masonry in churches (as well as every thing besides,) that I have resolved to take no charge of a church where I cannot speak out on this subject. My experience in this has been thoroughly tested the last year, giving me more insight than ever before of its great power in the congregations. I am longing for the time when it shall become a test of membership and fellowship in all our churches. "I do not know but I am doing wrong," but when I come in contact with preachers who are lodge men I feel a distrust and kind of scorn toward them (I cannot help).

I expect to reach California the latter part of April or early in May. I should like to be with you at Dayton in June, to participate in what may be done there. I trust that the brethren will come up with new zeal and energy for the cause; it requires patient endurance in well doing; every inch of influence gained in the cause must be held morally and politically. And now I close by a request to all those who love our Lord Jesus Christ every where, that when you gather around your family altars to offer up your morning and evening sacrifice of prayer, that you will remember those who are laboring in word and doctrine against this evil.

Brethren, let us have much prayer, much labor and much paying, then we shall move on slowly but surely to final success. May grace, mercy and peace abide with the entire brotherhood.

Henry Cogswell.

Routed at Sharon, Wis.

According to notice in last week's Cynosure, I visited Sharon, Wisconsin, for a few meetings. Reaching the town at 8 P. M., Saturday, I learned that there was quite a stir and serious objections to my addressing the Y. M. C. A. of the place in the M. E. church on the following day. The ostensible reason so far as I could learn, was, that, as I was not a member of the Y. M. C. A., they had no right to invite me to speak before them. I have grave apprehensions, however, that this was not the real objection. It was something else which parties interested had not the manhood to name. The Directors of the Y. M. C. A. were in session and decided to hold their Sabbath service in the Congregational church, which was tendered to them for that purpose. At 9:30 A. M., Sabbath, I met with the Young Men's Association in a prayer-meeting, which was made exceedingly profitable and blessed by the Master's presence. At 10:30 I preached to an attentive audience in the Free Methodist church, and at 3 P. M. spoke to the young men in the Congregational church, and by request of the pastor preached in the same place in the evening. The audience was good and the attention marked. There was evidently a growing interest in the community to hear what might be said on Monday concerning the "Unfruitful Works of Darkness," which was the topic announced for that evening. All sorts of rumors were afloat as to what would occur, and among other things it was gravely intimated that the speaker would encounter something worse than eggs and brickbats. Up to this time I had not said one word publicly, either for or against Masonry, but somehow a certain class in the community were seized with fearful forebodings. Something dreadful was about to happen. There was running to and fro and heated street-corner discussions as the hour for the lecture approached.

Soon after 7 P. M. the Free Methodist church was filled to its utmost capacity and after reading the Scriptures and prayer, I spoke for a couple of hours, contrasting the religion of Freemasonry with the religion of Christ. I then gave an opportunity for any one who wished to speak, which brought a member of Byron, Ill., lodge quickly to the front, who made some startling declarations and repeated some very fine quotations for the edification of his "brethren," the relevancy of which to the subject under discussion some of us, at least, were too stupid to see. As a specimen of the religion of Masonry, after telling us they had no religion, he told us that their meetings were opened with prayer, etc., and that they "worshiped the Grand Ideal of Infinity and Eternity." I thought how delightful it must be for some of the brethren in Byron lodge (whose names I withhold) to kneel at the feet of their Worshipful Master with "brother" Wilson, and pour out their souls into the ear of "the Grand Ideal of Infinity and Eternity."

As a specimen of the barbarous vandalism of Byron lodge opponents, he told us that after the decease and burial of a brother in that place, a tombstone was erected over his grave, on which was cut the "square and compass;" but the zeal of these men would not permit such an insult to remain, and so proceeding to the cemetery with mallet and chisel they actually removed this sacred emblem from the stone. I asked the name of the man whose memory was insulted, but not wishing to betray this valuable Masonic secret before the audience, he promised to tell me privately. The next day when asked he did not feel quite sure, but thought it was Geo. Walters. When I told him that I was recently in Byron and that "his 'brother,' George Walters, was then alive and kicking," he thought he might be mistaken; but he would write soon and then let me know. If "Brother" George, or any of the rest of the Byron brotherhood, have suffered such indignity at the hands of men in Byron, I hope they will not fail to notify their "speaking brother" Wilson at Nora, Jo Daveiss Co., Ill., of particulars, at least give him the name of the sufferer, as it places their brother in a peculiar and embarrassing predicament to make such an assertion and then, when pressed for the name of the man, to give that of a man who is known to be alive. It is fearfully damaging to the character of their "worthy brother," and not at all favorable to the reputation of the craft.

Monday evening's discussion only intensified the feeling on both sides and gave a splendid chance for those field-officers commonly called "busybodies," to exercise their vocation. The hour came for the encounter, but sometime before its arrival the house was crowded and scores, I am told, went away unable to obtain even standing room within hearing. The topic for the evening was, 'Freemasonry systematic and unmitigated despotism." The lights of Masonry were permitted to speak for the craft, without a single allusion to the testimony of such "perjured villains" as C. G. Finney, E. Ronayne, or Milo H. Smith, in an address of sixty-five minutes, when the undaunted redoubtable Robert M. Wilson, from Byron Lodge, No. 274, whose name and fame had all day filled the hearts of his grateful and applauding 'fraters" with "with hopes that burn like stars sublime," took the stand. After a few unsuccessful attempts at witticism and rather emphatic comparisons, in one of which he told his hearers that "the best illustration of the heart of an anti-mason was the scum of hell put into a cauldron and boiled down to its minimum capacity." It became evident that he wanted to say something to the point, and equally evident that he had nothing to say. He did not like to encounter A. G. Mackey, Dr. Rob. Morris and others of similar Masonic calibre, and to collapse in silence would be a confession of defeat, and so he toiled on. His good genius had evidently forsaken him, and the supplications and invocations of his devout "brethren" offered to the "Grand Ideal of Infinity and Eternity," failed to bring this celebrated Masonic dignity to his relief. Poor man, forsaken by his Titular Deity, "The Grand Ideal of Infinity and Eternity." It was a pitiable sight. His brethren shaded their eyes and bowed their heads, either in reverence or shame and after the meeting closed "went out one by one." And here I will drop the curtain, adding this single suggestion, viz: That this "brother" would do well before he attempts to speak on Masonry again, to inform himself on some of the principles and primary elements of the system, for he will otherwise incur only the pity or contempt of his hearers. He ought to know, and does know, that it is a gross imposition upon the people to ask an audience to sit and listen to a man for an hour, when the only thing he is able to establish beyond question is that he is himself in the grossest ignorance of what he assumes to teach his hearers.

Correspondence.

We Must Preach against the Lodge by Name.

West Newton, Ind.

So far there is no cause whatever for discouragement at this place; on the other hand favorable reports are coming to light continually; and certainly not the least encouraging among them is the fact that so many Masons are leaving the lodge, and openly and fearlessly denouncing it as a pernicious and sinful institution. Not only do we notice this in all other parts of the field, but in some cases within our own community.

Still some object to the plan of operations adopted at headquarters for conducting the coming campaign. Bro. A says, "Convert the people to Christ and then they will leave the lodge." But while we would be happy to see every man on this footstool soundly converted to Christ, we contend that this would be a very impracticable method for breaking down the institution of Masonry. Why did not Uncle Sam send a corps of preachers into the South to persuade slaveholders to come to Christ that they might see that slavery was wrong, and thus break down the degrading institution that was fast sapping the foundation of our free government? We answer, simply because they had a religion of their own. They claimed the Bible, and claimed Christ; they contended that slavery was right, according to Scripture, and taught it to their children and to their slaves. Why do we not send missionaries to Salt Lake City to convert Brigham Young and wipe out Mormonism? We would give the same answer. But Bro. A. says we go to work to convert men as a very essential means of putting down intemperance. True, but intemperance as a general thing is not an institution. It is a habit into which men fall, and is denounced by the Bible, by morality, and by common sense. Still men are tempted; they form the habit whose power only those who have experienced it can realize; they lose their power of will and confidence in themselves, and become so degraded that nothing short of the assisting grace of God can enable them to come out of this bondage and cause them to stand. And while we fully believe that every man who is thoroughly converted to Christ, and lives up to his own convictions, will denounce slavery, Mormonism, intemperance and Masonry, yet that certainly is not the best and quickest method of getting at the root of all these evils. We will let Bro. A. convert all the people he can, and assist us that much; but we would ask him not to object to our plan, which is already being crowned with so many good results.

Yours truly, BOAZ.

Some Reasons why Ministers should not be Freemasnos.

EMPORIUM, Pa.

Editor Cynosure:

The following remarks on Freemasonry we think can be applied with equal propriety to many other secret societies, and, in a greater or less degree, perhaps, to all secret organizations. The Scriptural command is: "Abstain from all appearance of evil." The professed life work of ministers is to moralize and Christianize the world. And if one person, more than another, should set a good example and "keep himself unspotted from the world," it is the minister. Christ preached the Gospel to the poor, and a large majority of Gospel hearers at the present day are not members of the Masonic fraternity. Now it is well known that many Freemasons are not only immoral and irreligious, but some of them openly scoff at Christianity. Many persons think it strange that ministers of the Gospel, if they love the society of the truly pious, as they sometimes profess they do, better than any others, should wish to assemble in the secret lodge chamber with such ungodly members as many of the Freemasons are, and then utterly refuse to disclose to their most intimate friends or brethren in the church any thing that occurred there. The following maxim strikes some of them as appropriate: "Birds of a feather flock together." Or, perhaps, the Bible quotation: "Men love darkness, rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, lest his deeds should be reproved." Such behavior on the part of the minister has a strong tendency to produce distrust in his genuine piety, and, consequently, invalidates or destroys all his ministerial efforts to produce real reform of any kind. Now it is impossible for us to see how any minister of Christ can feel justified in the least in continuing in a society in which such horrid oaths are administered as some writers assert that Freemasons do administer, or in which they agree to assist one another in crime. But suppose none of this is true, and the Freemason minister knows that all things connected with the society are right, still, if it has the appearance of evil, which, unquestionably, it has, he can not remain in it without disobeying the command of the inspired apostle: Abstain from all appearance of evil. It is very evident why Freemasons are anxious to have ministers in their society. The argument is sometimes used that if ministers belong to the Freemasons and positively assert that it is a good society, we have no right to dispute it. Many are induced to join them on that account. Similar arguments were formerly made in favor of dram drinking, because some ministers indulged in it. We think, to those and those only who are truly wise and righteous, the following words will apply: "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." R. CHADWICK.

Root and Branch Alike.

AMES, Story Co., Iowa,
March 15, 1877.

Not long ago, while in conversation with a Freemason, he made a statement that all secret societies were an outgrowth of Freemasonry. If this be so, what good can we expect from any of them? Can a bad root bring forth a good branch without grafting? Can it be possible that some of the other secret societies are good fruit grafted into the stump or root of Freemasonry, that it might produce some good fruit? I have belonged to two little secret orders, and have not seen any good result from either.

Some of the Masons around here are losing confidence in the order. One preacher has agreed not to attend the lodge any more. He has not been in a lodge since E. Ronayne was here; but he is cable-towed yet. I think the "Preacher's Lament" should be sufficient to loose every bond and let all ministers go free. I have A. G. Mackey's Ritual in my house. Some of the Masons deny it as standard teaching, now or ever, because its passages of Scripture are perverted in several places. But I know it is, for I borrowed it of my brother, who is a Mason, and he says it is good authority. JOSHUA HARRISON.

Sign-board Testimony.

BOSTON, March 20, 1877.

In these times of licensed liquor-selling, it is refreshing to see one who comes out boldly in favor of temperance and good order. At the carpenter shop, No. 20 Creek Square, not far from the "Boston Store," occupied by Mr. Chester D. Holmes, may be seen a sign in bold gilt letters reading thus: "No jobs done in this shop for liquor dealers." Mr. Holmes is a good christian man, and was given to understand that if he wanted to make a living he must take down the sign. Some said that he was a wicked man; others said that he was crazy or wanted to be state constable. Mr. Holmes still lives and finds something to do these hard times. The sign is about eight or nine feet long, and is in a conspicuous place over the door of his shop, where it can be seen by all who enter the square from Union or Marshall streets.

Yours, respectfully,
D. F. PRATT.

A Brother's Letter.

WOODLAND, Barry Co., Mich.

Editor Cynosure:

I formed a little acquaintance with your paper some years ago, but I could not endure its reading matter. Although I have belonged to the U. B. Church for more than twenty years, yet I thought the Cynosure was too radical on the secrecy question, but I acknowledge myself soundly converted now. I can read the paper and feel as good as a man can feel when reading of the abominable workings of secret societies. I have no more sympathy for the last infant born, "granger," than I have for the parent of it, Freemasonry.

I receive the Cynosure every week, and I am glad to say that it is a sound paper on religion, as well as on secrecy. I think it necessary to be separate, to come out; "be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers;" stand on one side or the other of any open question; "we can not serve God and mammon." These secret societies are in the way of sinners everywhere, and no benefit to Christians anywhere.

I received a letter to-day from a dear brother who lives in Pennsylvania. Many prayers have been offered for him. Hear what he says in regard to the church:

"I don't uphold any church now, and the churches are scarce that I can uphold, because the preachers here principally belong to some secret society. They can't call me brother or Christian when they are on their way to the lodge. If that is or can be Christian, then I do not understand the Bible. At the present I have my mind made up that I will never pay or help to uphold any church that will receive any member that belongs to any secret society, and if there is no such church, I will try and start soon and be a lover of the Lord. Dear brother, pray for me."

I say, God bless this my brother. God bless and save us from secrecy.

REV. D. H. SHELLY.

The American Party.

All intelligent men will admit that there is great need of an American party. British Freemasonry and European secretism in general, have corrupted our young men to so great an extent that many American voters are more like European monarchists than any thing else we can think of. The European beer saloons are preparing thousands of our citizens to be managed by the Worshipful Masters. And all the great powers of darkness which hold Europe in subjection, are busy at work to destroy American institutions and the Republic.

No doubt every reader of the Cynosure sees our danger and knows the importance of the American party. Why, then, delay local organization? Why shall we not have patriotic American clubs to disseminate true American ideas and doctrines? Both of the old parties are unworthy of the confidence of any one who believes in free speech, free press, free pulpit, free government and freedom. Let us, then, go forward as true Americans, with civil and religious liberty as our basis of reform in church and state. And let us all be up and doing. This is no time to take naps. Let us have hundreds of American party clubs organized immediately. Reader, we ask you to lead off in this great work. Now is the time to do it! E. J. CHALFANT.

A Brooklyn Murder.

DERBY, Conn.

Editor Cynosure:

DEAR SIR: I thought to give you an incident that occurred in this town last year, which demonstrates to my mind fully that there is a Masonic oath that swears to protect a brother, right or wrong. You may remember a case of a man in Brooklyn, by the name of Simmons, who was murdered and his body cut to pieces by the murderer and deposited in different places. Simmons sent the man out after whisky; he found, on his return, his wife and Simmons under such circumstances that he murdered Simmons and cut him to pieces. It was said they were all drunk. Simmons was a Mason, and the Masons sent a man to Brooklyn and gathered up what of the remains they could find and brought them to Derby for interment. So we had a grand Masonic funeral of white aprons and regalia. I was at the house, but did not go to the grave, where they conducted their brother to the Grand lodge above.

The judge and jury who tried the murderer and sentenced him to be hung petitioned to have his sentence commuted to imprisonment for life, which was done, on account of the condition in which the murderer found Simmons and his wife.

In my conversations with Masons they universally attempt to defend Simmons' character, which was well known in this town by many before he left his family to go to Brooklyn. (By the way, Simmons' family are very nice and respectable people, but he had mostly forsaken his family.) The fraternity here have tried hard to defend the character of Simmons, and the lodge in this place passed resolutions:

Whereas, It having pleased Almighty God to remove by death our esteemed brother, W. W. Simmons, be it, therefore,

Resolved, That, while we recognize, in this dispensation of Divine Providence, the right of Him who giveth life to take it again in His own good time, it is with feelings of profound sorrow that we now commit his remains to the silent tomb, etc.

Who can conceive of such wickedness as the foregoing resolutions? I tell the Masons it is blasphemy and a lie; that the devil did that work. In talking with two Masons yesterday, one a member of the Methodist church, and the other one of the wickedest swearing men to be found, both defending Masonry the best way they could, and the latter heaping imprecations on me as he could find language to express, I simply told him those were Masonic arguments. I took a Cynosure from my pocket and showed them "Hail, Masonry Divine;" also showed them Ronayne's illustrated expose of Masonry, and commented on the candidate, Hiram Abiff, and their blasphemous oaths. What is more ridiculous, to say nothing of the wickedness?

I am doing what I can to circulate your papers and tracts, which are giving the true light on these dark abominations. I shall have to have more tracts soon. Ronayne's expose is the best thing out. I operate on the young men, to prevent their joining the king of humbugs. I trust a brighter day will dawn soon. Truly yours,

I. J. GILBERT.

Our Mail.

G. N LeFevre, Lewisburg, Pa., writes:

"There is a strong, sound sentiment here. I believe there are not more than three, if there are any members of the Baptist church here, which numbers over two hundred, who are actively connected with any secret society. The University at Lewisburg does not admit students who will not pledge themselves that they will not join any College secret society while here. I am glad to see the improved appearance of the Cynosure the last few weeks. It seems to have clean and fresh looking type."

Hiram Cole, Carmel, N. Y., writes:

"I can say with John Tillinghast of Factoryville, Pennsylvania, I took the Cynosure expressly on account of its opposition to secret societies, and I have got what I paid for, shook down, pressed together and running over. Tillinghast said he had never seen an article in the paper, long or short, but what was perfectly safe in any Christian family. He had been a preacher forty years and had a large family about him, and was as particular in regard to what his children read as to what they ate."

C. E. Widger, Cromwell, Ia., writes:

"The anti-secret element is quite strong here and only needs agitation to make it foremost. We love the temperance cause but hate secrecy. Our Master taught openly and in secret said nothing. Neither has he ordered us to do or say anything in secret, but pray, and that is to be rewarded openly. But these secret societies reverse the order of things; they do all in secret except pray, and that they do openly, for a pretense I fear. We hail with welcome the Cynosure in our midst and hope that it will soon find a welcome in many homes in this town and vicinity."

Mrs. Hannah D. Chapman, Sarpy Center, Neb., writes:

"We are able to put to silence the many who think they have the proof on hand that Morgan was never killed; because my husband went with two others (because it was not safe to go alone) one hundred miles to carry money that was donated by the Anti's to his destitute widow, and heard her repel the Masons' offer to support her, with, 'Bring me back my husband; that is all I want of you;' and many other things that are not in print that he knows he can thrill and astonish them with."

A. Shambaugh, Bear, Wis., writes:

"I have been preaching all winter. Received one hundred and forty-four members into the church since December 1, 1876. I find the best way to destroy secret societies is to have people get religion, and then grangism and Good Templarism die so easy. God kills it and religion buries it out of sight."

"J. L. Kiplinger, Silver Lake, Ind., writes:

"I have often read those horrible oaths and wondered if they could be true as published, and desired to know if they were. A few weeks ago I met my brother, a minister of the Gospel, who once belonged to the Masons, but has long since renounced the rotten thing, and says it is no place for a Christian. I asked him if the oaths as published were true. The answer was, 'They are true to the letter."

Ann Bunting, Holton, Kan., writes:

John Tymms, late of Springfield, Dane county, Wisconsin, took his everlasting flight from Oxfordshire, England, on the 9th of February, in the 81st year of his age. He was one of your early subscribers, and always has been opposed to secretism."

Asa Warren, Warrens' Corners, N. Y., sends his twenty-eighth subscriber, and writes:

"This subscriber is the son of David Maxwell, the man who saw that mysterious carriage pass his toll gate on the night of September 13, 1826, about eleven o'clock at night. The carriage was stopped after it had passed the gate about three rods distant. A man by the name of Brown stood at the gate door with the toll change in his hand. The next morning about sunrise that same carriage returned with this same Jeremiah Brown sitting inside pretending sleep. This toll gate is about twenty miles from the mouth of Niagara river. Captain Wm. Morgan is dead but he still lives in the memory of many citizens of Niagara county. Freemasons are scarce on the line of the Ridge road from Wright's Corners to Niagara river, the route Morgan was taken to receive Masonic vengeance from the hands of such men as Eli Bruce, the high sheriff of Niagara county."

Chas. Goodfellow, Clinton, N. Y., writes:

"I take all the pains I can to show the paper and hope to do some good thereby. I wish I were able to pay for a thousand copies for free circulation. The paper is a welcome visitor."

C. S. Davis, Middletown, Ct., writes:

"I have read the Cynosure as I have had time and enjoy it."

L. Birge, Farmington, Ill., writes:

"Your paper grows better and better all the time. Ronayne did a great work for us here in Farmington. Many Masons do not go near the lodge now-a-days."

No matter how small one may be, or insignificant in position, yet one may do a great deal of good in the world. The "little maid" in Syria was a power; though she was only a servant. "God hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the things which are mighty." Ps. 8: 2; Matt. 11: 25; 21: 16; Acts 4: 10; 1 Cor. 1: 27–29; 2 Cor. 12: 9; Jas. 2: 5.

No seven dippings in the blood of Christ are necessary. One plunge into the crimson fountain and we are cleansed from all sin. "Once for all" is our happy condition. Rom. 5: 8, 9; 6: 10; 8: 1; 1 Cor. 6: 11; Heb. 7: 27; 9: 28; 10: 10, 14; 1 Pet. 2: 24; 3: 18; 1 John 1: 17.

There is only one method of cure. There is no other religion beside that of the Lord Jesus Christ that pretends to heal the leprosy of sin. It affords to sinners their only chance to get rid of this loathsome disease. "There is none other name under heaven given whereby we must be saved." Is. 45: 21, 22; Matt. 1: 21; Mark 16: 16; John 3: 36; 14: 6; Acts 4: 12; 1 Cor. 3: 11; Heb. 2: 3; 1 John 5: 11, 12.

Once washed in Jesus' blood we are clean—thoroughly clean. And that is a great thing—to be rid of all foul controlling appetites and passions—to be clean in thought, in purpose and in deed. "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." Ps. 51: 7; Is. 1: 18; Titus 2: 14; 3: 5, 6; Heb. 9: 14; 10: 22; 1 John 1: 7; Rev. 7: 14.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

Every Freemason a Blasphemer.

As proved by the Highest Masonic Authority.

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

By quotations from a score of masonic works of unquestioned authority, the fact of the blasphemous ceremonies and teachings of Freemasonry are so clearly demonstrated as to make it evident that every initiate is of necessity a blasphemer.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO THURSDAY. APRIL 5, 1877.

"Stat Nominis Umbra."

This motto from old editions of Junius ("The shadow of the name stands") is forcibly brought to mind by a letter containing $50 for tracts and copies of the Cynosure for free distribution. The name of the donor is withheld, and we are not permitted to give any clue to his place; nothing but the date, March 14, 1877. Below are extracts from his generous and interesting letter:

"Ezra A Cook & Co.—Gentlemen: —While I do not endorse all the hard things contained in the Cynosure against Masonry and other secret societies, I am satisfied that there are evils enough incident to or springing from them, to make it desirable that the subject should be brought to the attention of the public.

I have never belonged to any secret society, and from what I have seen and known of the workings of Masonry and Odd-fellowship, in their effects upon individuals, I should not desire to be brought under the influence of either. I believe a man can serve God better outside than inside of a lodge. Yet on more than one occasion I have been made acquainted with the testimony that Masonry had been the instrumentality by which men have been brought to decide in favor of a Christian life.

Those who have "The mark of the beast," as I understand it, are not to be reckoned among the saved. Yet you could hardly convince me that some of my Masonic friends with whom I have taken swest counsel in days agone, are not now in glory.

If the system is bad, fight it. But to send all Masons to hell by implication, goes unwarrantably far. The system may be bad yet have much good within it. Like the Roman Catholic church, which, notwithstanding its abominations, has, I doubt not, many sincere Christians in it."

Thus far the writer.

Now the words of God are to be taken with the utmost precision; nothing added, subtracted or misplaced. The divine declaration is: "If any man worship the Beast or his Image, and receive his mark in his forehead or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone, in the presence of the holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb."—Rev. 14: 9, 10.

This horrible doom, whatever its pictures import, is not for those who worship the beast or his image only, but who worship with their head or hand, that is to say with mind or actions, belief or choice—stamped with his mark. The priests of Baal believed their god, or they would scarcely have cried to him all day, and gashed their bodies to move him. They received his mark in their foreheads. They, on the other hand, who bowed in his temple without belief, to please their king and keep their post, received his mark in their hands or actions. Only those who worship the beast or his image, and receive his mark in forehead or hand must suffer in hell.

Some may worship as Abraham practiced polygamy or Paul persecuted, "ignorantly." Some in fear or by compulsion, as Obadiah, doubtless, complied with Ahab when he knew better and hated it. "It is the glory of God to conceal a thing;" and he has concealed the point how much error may be in the head and how much wrong in the life of a man who is at last saved "so as by fire."

The teaching of the Cynosure intends to conform to that of the Bible, viz., that the man who believes in salvation by human ceremonies, or who practices such ceremonies, believed in by others, deliberately, for what he can gain by it, is necessarily lost. Worship being the highest act of the soul, he who practices a false worship, whether as dupe or knave, has cast off the last rope which binds him to God and goodness.

Our unknown friend will see therefore, that though our correspondents speak for themselves, we hold that Masons and Odd-fellows may practice demon-worship, without being Masons or Odd-fellows; as idiots may sing in a concert without knowing the tune; or as Peter told and swore to the falsehood, that he did not know Christ, without being such a liar as has his part in the "lake that burneth with fire and brimstone."

But we have not a remaining doubt, that the "beast" of the Apocalypse means and includes all false or invented worships; of which Rome is the harlot mother. We have nearly as little doubt that modern Masonry, with its whole shadowy brood now encircling the globe, is the "image of that beast." It surely has all the power of the first beast empty and evanescent as it is; and its worship is as fatal. Its mental and moral debaucheries have nearly destroyed conscience south of Mason and Dixon's line. The proofs of this are seen in the facile perjuries, crimes and blasphemies of the late war. And their Northern "knights," though reared amid better ideas and influences, were sunk by their Masonic, midnight orgies, nearly to their moral level,—aye, and wallow there still!

If the Scriptures from Moses to Paul and the Apocalypse, teach any one thing clearly, it is that Satan is the god and object of the gentile or false worships practiced on this globe; that all is gentile worship which is not paid to and through Jesus Christ; and that "neither is there salvation in any other" than Christ.

And it follows, that the Masonic friends of our unknown correspondent, if they are, as he hopes and believes, "in glory;" must have practiced Masonry as Paul persecuted, "ignorantly and in unbelief;" or as Luther climbed Pilate's staircase at Rome while the whole Reformation of the 16th century was heaving in his bosom with its cardinal proposition that the Pope is anti-Christ, the Man of Sin!

But what then? What if the "friends" spoken of ARE in glory? So is the pardoned thief; but his crimes and their Masonry are not with them! What if, as the thief did not, they frequented the lodge and practiced its dark and damning grimace after they knew Christ? If they indeed "built upon that foundation," their "wood, hay, stubble," have been all burned up, and they themselves "saved so as by fire." And could they call to us on earth from their bright abodes, as Abraham called to Dives, their shout would ring out of heaven like that shout which shall wake the dead when Christ comes to judgment. And instead of toning down the utterances of the Cynosure, they would shriek in our ears as to the prophets of old: Cry aloud! Spare not! Make the Freemasons know their transgressions and false worshipers their sins!

O the lethargy of the human conscience, where mischief is framed by law! Our country's glory was dimming; our republicanism a sham; our "Declaration" a lie; our flag reddened with gory stripes. Treason sat in the Senate with her guns in battery along the seaboard, and waiting for the match. But this avalanche of crime was slavery; traitors were gentlemen, and treason and blood, "erring sisters!"

Turn now to the lodge; what is it? Its cloud of night-vampires are now resting on the bosom of the American people, and sucking their blood, while fanning the sleepers with their wings! They light on the churches and their preachers grow silent and timid; and the very angels of God who make the church their care, pale at the havoc made by these night-demons among religious ideas! They light on the state and

"——Earth is sick,
And heaven is weary of the hollow words
Which kings and statesmen utter when they talk
Of justice."

In their conjuring hands the oath of God loses its sanctity, the Word of God its power, and the worship of God its awe! And when the lethargic pagan nations stretch out their leprous hands to us for the benefits of our Christian civilization, this thrice accursed ghost and image of the very beast, which has corrupted and degraded the heathen, stands ready to seize those hands in Masonic grip; open its lodges and lead them to its own altars, as much worse than pagan as truth corrupted by hypocrisy is worse than original ignorance.

Will all those whose subscriptions expired in March who have not yet renewed do so as soon as possible.

Why We Need the Publishing House.

Chicago, March 30, 1877.

Last evening's meeting at No. 221 West Madison St., was the first of a series which it is our purpose to hold, in which the degrees of Masonry and kindred orders will be exposed and discussed. Actual trial has proven that the public working of the degrees is the shortest and most effectual means to the overthrow of the lodge power. The great hindrance to this work in this city has hitherto been the want of a suitable hall for such exhibitions. The finances of the National Christian Association would not justify us in expending from $25 to $50 for the use of a room for a single evening, and we could not obtain one for less. This difficulty is taken out of the way by the temporary occupancy of the Carpenter Building, and we hope and pray that it may become permanent by the aid of our brethren in supplying the amount yet required to secure the fee simple. It is within reach and a little effort on the part of the friends would establish this pillar of witness as a testimony to this and future generations. There are several improvements needed to adapt the building to its present use which will be attended with expense, and which it is not deemed wise to make while the title is not held by the Association. It would greatly increase the good effect of Bro. Ronayne's expositions if the room could be provided with suitable ante-room, altar, pedestals, pillars, etc., so that the work could be performed in as good if not in a better manner than in any secret lodge in the city. Bro. R.'s heart is in the work, and if he could have such a room with all the appliances of the lodge he would, I presume, soon have a trained band of officers, each skilled in his part, and thus be able to make his work even more effective than by his present methods. These meetings in addition to their effect upon those who attend would call the attention of the general public to our reform and to the means of obtaining information from our publications. Their influence is already apparent in the attendance at the reading room, and seen in the more frequent calls for tracts, and especially for Bro. Ronayne's Hand Book of the Lodge. No one, I think, appreciates the importance of the general field work or takes a deeper interest in its progress than I, and it is not pleasant to seem even to be in confederacy with the "horse-leech's two daughters, crying, Give, give," but it does seem to me that the man who can aid in completing this Publishing House fund, and does not do so, robs his own soul of a blessing and deprives a good and needy cause of that support to which it is entitled.

If you are a friend to the work and contemplate aiding it why put it off for a year, or even for a month; why not help now when it will do the most good? If you have any misgivings, or desire information upon any point connected with finances and their management, let us know your difficulties and your wants that we may lay the facts before you. Ask any questions you like, and greatly oblige yours to labor and to serve according to his measure of ability in Christ Jesus who shall judge us all in the last day. J. P. STODDARD.

Rev. P. A. Fields, (3), Kansas.
Geo. H. Greenslitt, Fort Lupton, Col.
O. H. King, Salem, Iowa.
C. W. Tenney, (3), Plymouth, Iowa.
Dewitt Sterry, Norwich, Conn.
Daniel Mitchell, Andersonville, Ind.
A J Smith, Cromwell, Iowa.

The above additional names added to the list makes 186 reported. We would urge every reader of the paper to do what he can to enlarge the roll. Send to the Recording Secretary of the N. C. A. at this office.

—The friends in Iowa will be glad to learn that Rev. J. W. Bain of this city, will attend and speak at the State meeting at Oskaloosa on the 24th inst. As a platform speaker Mr. Bain stands in the front ranks. The lodge and the dramshop dread his presence, and shrink from his faithful and damaging exposures. He spends the Sabbath preceeding the convention with the United Presbyterian church in Oskaloosa and his pulpit in this city will be supplied by Prof. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton.

—An iniquitous attempt to unite incongruous subjects is "The Advocate," a journal published at 31 Park Row, New York, the first page being given to Freemasonry and the grange, the last to light reading and matter peculiar to the Society of Friends, this last department being especially prepared for readers of the paper belonging to that Society. The well-known antagonism of the doctrines and practice of the Friend Quakers to the secret lodges makes this attempt to unite them seem like a dishonest effort to break down the separating wall between the two systems.

—In connection with a notice of a Constitutional Reform Convention to be held in this city soon, the following from Secretary McAllister's letters to the Christian Statesman on the position of Chicago ministers in this reform is significant:

"Only two Christian ministers, of all the large number I have so far called upon, have declared themselves opposed to the National Reform Movement. One of them, Dr. W. W. Patton, takes squarely the ground of secularism, and opposes not only the religious amendment of the United States Constitution, but every law or act of our government which favors Christianity. He assured me that his views were gaining ground rapidly among Christians; but I have not met with a single minister of his own church who does not emphatically condemn his course and oppose his philosophy. So far as I can judge, his discourse has opened the eyes of many to the logical results of the secular theory of government."

—Much as the influence of the press is given to the stultifying labor of bolstering up the institutions of secretism, their ambitious news-gathering propensities are often the means of exposing the shams and impious practices of the lodge. A singular case is just before us. Certain operations having been discovered about the premises of a farmer near Columbus, O., exciting suspicion, a reporter visited the place and found the proprietors engaged in the disgusting business of boiling up human bodies to get the bones, while the flesh was fed to the poultry. The bones thus cleansed were set up in skeletons to be sold, the lodges evidently, from the remarks of the employes about the place, being the best patrons of this manufactory. A small skeleton badly put together attracted the attention of the reporter. "We," said the boy guide, "will sell that fellow to some of the secret societies. He is just as good to scare the devil out of some new greenie as a perfect skeleton would be." No young man should be allowed to enter the lodge without being reminded of the opinion of this body-boiler of Ohio. It may possibly give him some physical qualms even if his conscience is past feeling.

—The Boston papers published the whole discourse of Mr. Moody on "Walking with God," in which connection he gave his most celebrated testimony against the lodge when in Chicago, and we have reproduced it for our readers. Though his remarks on that particular subject are not so full as here, they are no less clear and explicit. Bless the Lord for so definite a testimony. In sad contrast are the remarks of Rev. E. P. Hammond at Terre Haute, Ind., and in Syracuse, N. Y., where he evidently would have drawn in the lodges "in hat and boots" with a flattery strangely in contrast with the honest, fearless testimony of Mr. Moody.

Many thanks for the earnest efforts and cheering words from our co-laborers. All workers for the Cynosure may feel complimented and encouraged to continued efforts by the following extract from the Voice of Masonry, April 1877. One of its correspondents renews his subscription with a cordial letter from which we quote the following: * * * "But may we not hope that the day will come when Masons who are so abundantly able to to support a first-class magazine, shall do so in a manner that will throw Cynosurism in the shade. I for one long for such a time and believe it will come."

The Home Circle.

A Hymn of Judgment.

Righteous God, whose vengeful vials
All our fears and thoughts exceed,
Big with woes and fiery trials,
Hanging, bursting o'er our head:
While thou visitest the nations,
Thy selected people spare,
Arm our cautioned souls with patience,
Fill our humbled hearts with prayer.

If thy dreadful controversy
With all flesh is now begun,
In thy wrath remember mercy,
Mercy first and last be shown;
Plead thy cause with sword and fire,
Shake us till the curse remove,
Till thou com'st, the world's desire,
Conquering all with sovereign love.

By the signals of thy coming
Soon, we know, thou wilt appear,
Evil with thy breath consuming,
Setting up thy kingdom here:
Thy last heavenly revelation
These tremendous plagues forerun,
Judgment ushers in salvation,
Seats thee on thy glorious throne.

Earth unhinged as from her basis,
Owns her great Restorer nigh,
Plunged in complicate distresses,
Poor distracted sinners cry:
Men, their instant doom deploring,
Faint beneath their fearful load;
Ocean working, rising, roaring,
Claps his hands to meet his God.

Every fresh alarming token
More confirms thy faithful word,
Nature (for its Lord hath spoken),
Must be suddenly restored:
From this national confusion,
From this ruined earth and skies,
See the times of restitution,
See the new creation rise!

Vanish from this world of shadows,
Pass the former things away;
Lord, appear, appear to glad us
With the dawn of endless day:
O conclude this mortal story,
Throw this universe aside,
Come, eternal King of glory,
Now descend and take thy bride.

—Charles Wesley, 1756.

Suffering Sin upon Our Neighbor.

Our God says, in Leviticus, 19:17, "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart: thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him."

Do you rebuke your neighbor for swearing? If sin is "upon him," do you try to rid him of it by reproving him and showing him how exceeding sinful is his sin? Does your brother or your neighbor live in sin? And do you seek to save him from that life of sin? Does he commit sin in your presence?

Does he swear before you? Does he take the name of God in vain? Does he use profane language? And do you reprove him? Do you point out to him the awfulness of his sin and warn him of the sure damnation that awaits the swearer?

Does he break the Sabbath? Does he seek his own pleasure on that holy day, and thus break the Sabbath? Or does he forward his worldly business on that day, either by scheming or working for its success, and thus break the Sabbath? Or does he forsake the house of God, stay away from church, and neglect the means of grace, and thus break the Sabbath? And do you reprove him? Do you speak to him of his sin? Do you tell him of his duty and faithfully warn him of the wrath that is to come upon all disobedient Sabbath-breakers?

Does he use strong drink? Does he drink to drunkenness? or does he drink less indulgently and escape drunkenness? Or does he drink strong drink at all and thus sin against God, and sin against society, and sin against his family, and sin against himself? Do you reprove him? Do you tell him of his sin? Do you teach him his duty? Do you speak to him of the damnation to come—of the awful hell into which all drunkards shall fall?

Do you do what God commands you in this matter? Or do you pass by the sins of your neighbors and the sins of your brother, that come so constantly under your very eyes, neglect to rebuke him, and thus suffer his sin "upon him?" Do you hear the swearer swear, and see the Sabbath-breaker break the Sabbath, and permit the drunkard to drink strong drink before you, and offer no word of rebuke? Do you wink at these awful sins? Do you countenance them by a favoring look, or a smile, or by silence?

And does not God command you to rebuke him? And do you profess to be a Christian, and yet not do what Christ commands? "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?" When God commands the swearer not to swear, and he does swear, you say he is breaking the commandment of God. And you are right. But when God commands you to rebuke him for swearing, and you do not rebuke him, are you not breaking the commandment of God as well? And if he be a sinner when he is breaking the commandments of God, what are you when you are breaking the commandments of God?

O, where are the reprovers of sin? We are living in the midst of a swearing, lying, stealing, swindling, Sabbath-breaking, worldly-minded, fashion-following, drunken, adulterous, and murderous generation, and who, of all the Lord's professed people, are bold enough, and faithful enough, and obedient enough to God to reprove the sinners around them? Because of the disobedience of professed Christians, because of their unfaithfulness, because of their cowardice, sin is brazen-faced and defiant. It walks the streets boldly. It is public and outspoken. It flings its insults into the face of God's people in the street, in the depots, in the rail car, and even in the holy sanctuary of the Lord, and hardly is there a Christian heart or a Christian mouth consecrated to reproof! Hardly is found a Christian conscience true enough to remonstrate against sin, or a Christian tongue free enough to rebuke and warn the sinner!

Brother or sister, can you be innocent with sin all around you "upon your neighbors," and with God's commandment to reprove or rebuke the sinner ringing in your ears, if you yet shut your eyes to sin, and close your mouth in dumb silence, rebuking not the sinner? Think about this. And pray about it. And then begin to do your duty. Obey the commandment of your God, and rebuke the very next sin you meet with, "not suffering sin upon your neighbor"—and ever after be a faithful reprover of sin.—Banner of Holiness.

It's no Use.

"I prayed for a man," said Elder Pike, "fourteen days and fourteen nights in succession, as well as I knew how, but he found no peace." "I hope you will keep on praying for me he said. "No," I replied, "I shall never pray for you again, under the present circumstances."

The man went home, much depressed, and told his wife of his trouble, and that Mr. Pike had refused to pray for him any more. He groaned and sighed for a while, until at length he said:

"Wife, it is of no use, I must go and carry that money back."

"What is it?" asked she.

"I made a trade the other day," said he, "I suppose it was legal, but I must go and carry that money back."—Ex.

The Framing of our Constitution.

In 1774 Louis XVI. ascended the throne of France, in succession to his grandfather. He found a kingdom which Carlyle not inappropriately and not in an exaggerated way describes as a powder magazine, with unquenchable fire smouldering around about it. The rulers and governors of the people were very imperious, exacting and wicked; the government, as such, was feeble, and at the same time extremely expensive, lawless and reckless; and the burdens of taxation laid upon the people had become intolerable. The result was the preparation of that state of mind that ultimately broke out in the fury of the Revolution. I do not mean to recall to you the period where the Declaration of Independence was made, two years after; but the point upon which I would like to fix your attention is this: Had the Constitution of the United States still been unmade when the fury of the French Revolution raged, it would have been impossible for it to possess that character of justice, soundness, and political moderation by which it is characterized. For it is not, perhaps, equally well remembered by all that the Declaration of Independence is one thing; the Articles of Confederation, by which these colonies, as they were then, were held together and carried through the Revolutionary War is another; and the Constitution of the United States is still a third and later thing. These Articles of Confederation, that held the colonis together during the war, were not adopted until 1777, and were not ratified, in point of fact, by all the colonies until 1781. I know of nothing in all history that is more touching than the correspondence of John Jay and Washington during the interval between the signing and ratification of these Articles of Confederation and the preparations for the framing of the Constitution—ten critical and perilous years in the history of this nation. They freely acknowledged to one another the gravity of the impending crisis, and their inability to see what ought to be done under the circumstances. Men everywhere had begun to think that the liberty which they supposed they had gained, was a mere illusion. The Congress was completely incapable of commanding the cooperation of a confederate state; taxes could not be collected; men were everywhere talking of the necessity of restoring a monarchy as the only basis of greatness and stability; and these great men trembled with the apprehension that the cause for which they had flung away blood and treasure might be sacrificed, and a triumph achieved by the force of events, by their enemies and the enemies of liberty.

It was out of the feelings so produced and expressed that the framing of the Constitution came, in the providence of God. State conventions had to be held; selfish and grasping men had to be consulted; mutual concessions had to be negotiated; but at length the thing was done, and on the 4th of March, 1789, the Constitution of the United States was ratified and accepted. You will recollect that it was in May of the same year, two months later, that the States General of France were convened, and let loose that storm of revolutionary fury that swept over the kingdom and so much of Europe, deluging it with blood. We ought to be profoundly thankful to God that before that terrible crisis was reached this Union was safely moored upon an accepted Constitution, that was free from the spirit of anarchy and resistance to regulated power and just authority, by which the Revolution of France was characterized; for, if you consider how close the relations then were between the two peoples and how strong American sympathies were with France, because of the sympathy of France with America in her deadly struggle, I think you will see how good it was in the providence of God that our Constitution was framed and settled and established upon a fixed basis before it could begin to feel the effects of that whirlwind and tempest of human passion that swept so disastrously over a great part of the world. As we think of this indulgence, we cannot but say: Hitherto hath the Lord helped us. Helped us in giving us this Constitution, which is a law evermore to all lawmakers; which is firm on the one hand to sustain the Union, and elastic on the other to adapt itself to the new circumstances in which the people find themselves.—Dr. John Hall.

There are people (do not imitate them) who, if they hear an organ, find out at once which are the poorest stops. If they listen to a great speaker, they remember nothing but some slip in the construction of a sentence, or break in the consistency of a metaphor, or flaw in the evolutions of argument. While their friends are admiring the wealth and beauty of a tree whose branches are weighed down with fruit, they have discovered a solitary bough, lost in the golden affluence, on which nothing is hanging.

The Christian is compared to a tree (Ps. i.), and those trees flourish most and bear the sweetest fruit which stand most in the sun. The praying Christian stands nigh to God, and hath God nigh to him, in all that he calls upon him for; you may, therefore, expect his fruit to be sweet and ripe. When another that stands, as it were, in the shade, and at a distance from God, through neglect of prayers, will have little fruit found on his branches, and that but green and sour.—Christian Treasury.

BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Four Evangelists tell of the birth,
The life and the death of Christ on earth;
In the Acts we may find, if we carefully search,
How the Apostles founded his church;
And then to teach each church for its ordering the better,
They wrote by the Spirit a wonderful letter.
The first of fourteen by the holy Saint Paul,
Was written to Romans, but meant for us all;
Corinthians First, and Corinthians Second,
As they stand in the Testament next may be reckoned;
With wholesome reproof and with wise exhortations,
St. Paul writes again to the foolish Galations;
To the Ephesians, who sorrowed to part;
Lovely Philippians, dear to his heart;
Urging Colossians to rise with their Lord;
Twice Thessalonians welcomed his word.
Two to Timothy, gracious and meet;
One to Titus, the bishop of Crete;
To Philemon, friend, and the Hebrew who saw
As he taught them how Christ had fulfilled the law;
James exhorts us to holy deeds:
Twice Saint Peter the whole flock feeds;
Thrice the loving Saint John; then Jude
Tells of the angels who fell or withstood.
Then the whole canon of inspiration,
Ends with the glorious Revelation.

HOW CHARLIE RUN AWAY.

"I declare, it's too mean for anything, mamma," said Charlie, angrily, his forehead knit into a thousand cross little wrinkles. "If I can't do like the other boys, I'll just run away altogether."

His mother looked very sorrowful, for Charlie was her only boy, and his naughtiness sent a sharp pain through her heart. He was only nine years old, but of late had become so headstrong and wilful that he was almost beyond her control, and this threat of running away had been oft repeated. That night she went to sleep and a sudden idea came into her mind. It was a very curious plan, by which she hoped to cure Charlie of his wilful ways.

The next afternoon her boy came rushing in after school, dashed his books down, and was rushing off again, when his mother called him back.

"Where are you going, Charlie?"

"Only out for a row on the pond, with Jack, mother; I'll be back by tea time."

"But it's beginning to rain, and your throat is still sore, by son. Suppose you ask Jack to come in and take tea with you instead. I'm afraid to have you go while it is so damp."

Charlie's face flushed angrily. He threw his cap down and muttered: "No, I won't have him to come at all! It's a shame I'm so tied down. I've a mind to run away, I have so."

His mother did not speak for a minute, then she said, quietly, but very firmly: "You cannot go out to-night, my son."

Charlie went to his play room very sulkily. At tea he did not say a word, and after tea he studied his lessons gloomily, without the usual bright questions and talks with his mother. He rose to go to bed, but his mother called him back.

"Charlie," she said, gravely, taking his hand in hers, you have talked a good deal lately about running away, and now, I think, as you don't seem very happy at home, perhaps you had better go. So I've told Charlotte to have an early breakfast so that you can start at seven, and I'll tie up some clothes in a bundle for you. You can take your father's knotted cane, and Charlotte will give you some cold biscuits to put in your pocket. I'll call you at half-past six."

Charlie could hardly believe his ears. Was his mother in earnest? That wasn't the way boys ran away! He felt very tight and queer in the throat, but he was too proud to cry, so he only muttered, in a shaky voice, "Very well, I'll be up in time," and went to bed. She called him back to put his school books in the closet, as he wouldn't need them any more. This was almost too much, but the child obeyed without a word, and then went slowly up stairs.

That night his mother lay awake many hours, full of anxious fears as to the result of her experiment. Charlie felt very sober about his prospect for the next day, but it was too late now to retreat, and he determined not to give in. Nevertheless, he was sound asleep when his mother came to give the forgotten good night kiss. She saw the marks of tears on his face, and her heart grew a little lighter.

Charlie was up early in the morning, long before his mother called him. It was a cloudy, chilly day, and the warm breakfast would have tasted very good if he had thought about it, but he never could tell what he ate that day. When it was over, his mother said, in a commonplace way:

"Now, my son, you had better be starting. Your best clothes are tied up in this bundle, and I have put some of Charlotte's soda biscuits in with them. Good by, and be a good boy, wherever you go."

They were on the front steps. His mother kissed him very affectionately, exactly as if he was going on a long journey, watching him go down the steps, and then went in and closed the door, and Charlie was left to go his way alone.

He walked very slowly down the street to the corner, stopped there, and looked up and down. It was early in the morning, and nobody seemed in sight. A great feeling of loneliness and longing for his dear lost home came over Charlie, and he would have given worlds to be back again in the warm, cosy sitting room, looking over his lessons before school. He turned the corner and walked a block, then turned once more and went slowly along, his head down, and a feeling of entire forlornness, getting worse and worse all the time. What was his mother doing now? Washing up the glass, no doubt; he hoped they would not forget to feed Billy, the little Scotch terrier. Ah! he would probably never see Billy again!

Just then Charlie came plump against a fat black woman carrying a pitcher of milk. He looked up and exclaimed:

"Why, Charlotte!"

"Why, Master Charles!" said Charlotte, who had slipped out of the back door just when our boy left the front steps, and had never lost sight of him for a single moment.

"Oh, Charlotte!" repeated Charlie, bursting into tears and seizing her hands, regardless of the milk pitcher, which, unfortunately, was empty, "do you think mamma will ever take me back again?'

"Just try, honey; I'd go and ask her right away," said good old Charlotte her eyes rather misty.

Charlie's mother was sitting by her work table when she felt two arms around her neck, wet with tears, against her own, and a voice, choked with sobs, said:

"Oh, mother, if you'll only forgive me and take me back, I'll never want to run away again—never!"

She held her boy close to her happy, thankful heart, and kissed him many times. Her experiment had succeeded, and that was the last that was ever heard of Charlie running away.—The Occident.

JENNIE E. TEMPLETON.

BEDFORD, Iowa, March 19, 1877.

MR. EDITOR:—I send the answers to the enigmas of March 15th, "The Christian Cynosure" and "Edmond Ronayne." I am a reader of the Cynosure and like it very much. I think Masonry is a very bad society and everything should be done to put it down. There are a good many Masons in this neighborhood and it makes them very mad to say anything against it; but I don't think it will do them much good, and I think it would be a good thing if Ronayne could come here and lecture. It would wake them up a little. There are a good many Anti-masons here and would be more if they had pluck enough to stand up to their principles.

Yours truly, SARAH E. DAVIS.

The answer to Alice Alexander's puzzle, Feb. 22, is "The Lambskin fraternity—Satan's vanguard." Alice surely had some one to help her to such a long title for a puzzle. We hope she is a little reformer at home about little things as well as in our "corner."

NERVOUSNESS AND NERVINES.

Nervousness is one of the prices we have to pay for civilization; the nervous savage is a being unheard of. For this disorder, which is partly of mental and partly of bodily nature, relief is sought in various ways, and among these we may place the employment of narcotics. The temporary relief afforded by these drugs is very apt to lead those who suffer from nervous sensation to put too much trust in and resort too frequently to them. In the long run they prove most destructive to health. Their use has of late become so frequent as to threaten society with a serious evil. It has been boldly contended that chloral is to be found in the work-boxes and baskets of nearly every lady in the west end of the metropolis, "to calm her nerves." No doubt this is an exaggeration, but is a fact that New York chloral punch had become an institution scarcely a year after the introduction of chloral into medical practice, and now it turns out that Germany · "sober, orderly, paternally-ruled Germany" — has such a thing as morphia disease spreading among its population. The symptoms are not unlike those of opium eating. Experience suggests that persons suffering from this disease should at once be deprived of the drug. Their willfulness and liability to relapse, however, are so great, that it is said that only about twenty-five per cent. have been seen to recover in a large series of cases.—Cassell's Magazine.

WOOD RENDERED INCOMBUSTIBLE.

It has been demonstrated by the most rigid experiments that wood immersed in a "pickle" of a solution of tungstate of soda cannot be ignited under any of the ordinary conditions to which it may be exposed: The tungstate is made by the addition of tungstate of lime to hydrochloric acid and salt, affording as a by-product chloride of lime in large quantities. The action of the tungstate upon soft woods is to render them quite hard as well as incombustible, and it also acts as a preventive against dry rot.

Sticks and boards of the prepared wood have been saturated with kerosene oil and set on fire; the oil burned off entirely without igniting the wood. Two small houses have been built, one of ordinary pine wood, the other of prepared wood, and fires of great urgency kindled in each. The one of ordinary wood was quickly consumed, while the other was left only slightly charred.

KEROSENE LAMPS.

A merchant returned home about two o'clock at night, and found his wife lying on the bed groaning heavily and unconscious. She was waiting his return, and at last, tired out, laid herself on the bed, after turning down the wick of a lighted kerosene lamp as low as possible without extinguishing it. In this position of the wick, if the oil is bad, a vapor mixed with an innumerable quantity of specks of soot diffuses itself through the apartment, and so covers the eyes, nose and respiratory organs, that on falling asleep one runs the risk of suffocation. It is always advisable, therefore, in the use of kerosene lamps, to allow the wick to burn brightly or to extinguish it entirely. —Wiener Medicinische Presse.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

Mr. Moody on "Walking with God."

[Boston Globe]

There was an assemblage of about four thousand people at the Tabernacle in the afternoon of March 21st A large number of people from the country had availed themselves of the opportunity to secure seats for this meeting; and though the weather was unfavorable, there was a very good representation of city people—rather more than usual at an afternoon gathering. A noticeable characteristic of the audience was the preponderance of men and women who have passed the meridian of life. For some reason the preliminary praise service was omitted. Mr. Moody and his associate took their places upon the platform at three o'clock and the evangelist opened the meeting by calling upon the audience to join in singing the hymn, "Draw me nearer."

THE DISCOURSE.

Our subject this afternoon is "Walking with God." Of course this address is for those that have been redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, for no man has a just right to walk with God until he is saved. For six thousand years, since Adam fell out of communion with God, God has been trying to win back the sons and daughters of Adam into communion with himself, that they might walk with him. When Adam was innocent he could walk with God in that garden, but the moment he fell he was out of communion with God; he didn't want to see the Lord and ran away from him. When a man is going away from God and into sin he don't desire to walk with him. But after we have become his children, the sweetest lesson we can learn is to learn to walk with him, to be in fellowship and communion with him. God came down and visited men. He visited Abraham, Jacob and Moses, but he did not walk with man until he had first put behind them the blood in Goshen. Then he became their king, walked with them and was with them several hundred years; and he would have been with that nation to-day and made it a blessing to all the world, but they rejected him. They said, "We want a king like the nations around us," and yet because he had said that he was God, they, as it were, turned away and said, "We will have a king," and God granted their request. Now, if nations will not walk with God, it is a privilege of individuals, and each one in this house can be brought into communion with God and walk with God the rest of their days if they will. It says, in the first of Peter, second chapter, twentieth verse: "For what glory is it if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God." And the twenty-first verse: "For even hereunto were ye called because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow in his footsteps." I am told by a man who has been out in the Indian country that they very often find what they call an "Indian trail" over the mountain, and as if one man had trod that path. I am told by some who are acquainted with the customs of the Indians that the chief goes on before and then the tribe follow and put their feet right in his footsteps. Now our Chief has gone on before to heaven and left his footprints and we are to follow in his footsteps, and we will have a blessed journey if we do not get out of the path, but keep right in his footsteps and not get into the world. But whenever any of us think that our way is better than his way and are not willing to follow in his footsteps, then it is that we will get into trouble and darkness. In the twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus, the second, third, fourth and fifth verses, we find that if we keep his statutes and walk with him, that God will bless us:

YOU ONLY FIND ONE FOOTPRINT

"Ye shall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord.

"If ye walk in my statutes and keep my commandments, and do them;

"Then I shall give you rain in due season and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit.

"And your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time; and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely."

If you read the history of that nation you will find that just as long as they kept the statutes and the law of God that they were blessed above all nations around them. No one could lift a sword successfully against them. God gave them rain in season and the land brought forth fruit in abundance. And he blessed and smiled upon them. But when they turned away from him, and from his law, his statutes, then it was that they brought calamity upon themselves, and nations came upon them and took them into bondage and servitude. You know Nebuchadnezzar came and took them down into Babylon and kept them there seventy years, and it was because they would not keep the law of God, they would not keep his statutes or the Sabbath day. They said, as Pharaoh, "Who is God that we should obey him?" and they turned away from him. He promised them in Leviticus, xxvi. 12: "And I will walk among you and be your God and ye shall be my people." What a blessing! What nation had a God like that? What nation was blessed like that nation when God was walking with them? The shout of the King was heard in the camp. God could protect them and send legions of angels to help them in battle if they only put their trust in him. He warns them in Leviticus, twenty-sixth chapter, twenty-first verse: "And if you walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me, I will bring seven times more plagues upon you according to your sins." What causes so much sin now in the city of Boston? Why, it is because men are walking contrary to God. God says if you walk contrary to him he will walk contrary to you. "I will turn your ways upside down." There is no peace for the wicked. You may try to find peace, but you cannot away from God. If men will only walk in God's way, keep God's law and statutes; if they will only reverence the sanctuary and the Word of God, and be God's followers, they will have peace. They will be blessed as they were in olden times. Our God is unchangeable, the same to-day as ever; but we are walking contrary to God and bringing all our troubles upon ourselves.

GOD HAS A CONTROVERSY

with man on account of sin. Until man turns from sin and hates it, and turns to God, there can be no fellowship or communion with God. In the eighty-fourth Psalm, eleventh verse—and to me it is one of the sweetest verses in the Bible—it is said: "For the Lord God is a sun and shield; the Lord will give grace and glory; no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." No good thing. Now if a man is willing to walk uprightly the Lord has promised that no good thing will be withheld from him, and that he will bless him. How many can say that is true? When we are ready to obey God fully and walk uprightly then he will smile upon us and a blessing come upon our souls, and we will be mounted up, as it were, on wings heavenward. I want to come upon something that is practical now and touch upon something that keeps us out of communion with God. I believe that there is one truth that ought to be preached all over Christendom, and that is

SEPARATION FROM THE WORLD.

If the church was only separated from unbelievers, that is, have the line drawn and take its stand, I believe that it would have more power than at the present time. I don't fear these infidels who talk about the church of God. But there are so many men who profess to be Christians who are not. They will pat you on the shoulder, tell you how glad they are to see the work going on, profess great interest, and then they will go behind your back and give you a stab in the dark. They will meet you and say that it is a very fine work, are much interested, have a deep sympathy with it, and the very next day, perhaps, they are your enemy, and don't believe in your work. They have two faces. We have got too many of that kind of men. If men who are opposed to Jesus Christ will only come out and fight it, then we will know where they are. Those that have the Son of God as their leader, let them come out and confess it. What we want is separation from the world, and the quicker the better. He says in Amos 3:3, "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" If you see a man who is in constant communion with another man you say these men agree pretty well. You see two business men walking down to the store together, you say those men agree. But if they don't have fellowship with one another you don't have the same impression. If a man is going to walk with God he has got to agree with God; has got to give up his ways and thoughts and take God's for God is not going to give up his thoughts and ways in order to walk with us. I was in a horse-car some time ago and I saw two young men. One of them hardly spoke a word without cursing. I don't know as I ever heard a young man in fifteen minutes swear so much. The other young man didn't swear at all. Perhaps he had a praying father or mother. But as soon as they locked arms together and went to the theater, they were agreed and the young man who had not sworn was as bad as the other. He was in fellowship with him. If we are going to be hand and glove with the ungodly, with unbelievers, with unconverted people and those who do not know Jesus, we are going to lose our power; like Samson with his hair cut off we lose our power. We want to be separated. If a man speaks contemptuously of my wife or mother he is no companion for me; "Good-bye, sir." I would do all I could to lead him to Christ. And if a man speaks contemptuously of the Son of God, who has redeemed us, "Good day, sir, you and I do not agree," and the quicker I am alone the better. If we walk with God we have got to be separated from the world, and if not we make God a party to our sin. He says, you know, when he brought them up from Egypt it was their sin that separated them from him. If we are going to live in sin and God walked with us, he would be a party to our sin. I want to call your attention to a passage in the II. Cor. 6:14:

"BE YE NOT UNEQUALLY YOKED together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communication hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" What part? "And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore, come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Now he says he will be with you, and "ye shall be my sons and daughters," if you come out and separate yourselves from unbelievers. I know this isn't going to be a very popular thing for me to say but when you come to the Lord God, you have got to let the truth come right out. I believe that comes down with every-day life. I believe if I am a Christian man I ought not to be yoked up with the ungodly. A man came to me sometime ago and said he was in great distress. He had two partners who had voted to do something that compromised his Christian character, and asked: "What shall I do?" He said he had been a Christian, I think, for fifteen years, and the partnership had only been formed three or four years. I told him the mistake was back yonder when he formed that partnership. "God told you not to do it." "Be ye not unequally yoked; you cannot go in with those two ungodly men." And they have now voted to do something that compromises you, and you have the power to avert it. A great many men think if they can make money a little faster, even if they do go contrary to the word of God, that it is all right. It comes again in matrimony. What right has a godly, sainted woman to give herself away to a scoffing man because he is rich? What right has a praying man to marry a frivolous, scoffing young lady that hates Jesus Christ, the Bride of the Church of God? "Be ye not unequally yoked together." It means more than that. What right has a Christian man to be in some of those lodges where there are infidels and sceptics that care not and scoff at the Word of God. The Word of God pumps right through such a profession of faith. People want me to not I. I will not yoke myself up with anything of the sort. Separation is what we want if we would have power. We may be unpopular down here, but we will be popular up there if we do right. Let us not vacillate here and there or be catering for public opinion. I had rather be rejoicing in Christ with God leading me alone, than have all Boston applauding me, walking with

JOIN CLUBS, REFORM CLUBS, LODGES, ETC.;

God. I know there are a great many young men scoffing and saying, "What do I care about what the Word of God says?" You can say so, but bear in mind if you go contrary to the Word of God you will not have the blessing of Heaven upon you. Many a young lady has given herself away to some scoffing infidel and will have a miserable life. It will not be long before her husband will trample her feelings under foot, just as he does God's Word. He won't care much about your feelings. He may profess to love and care for you, but he will prove untrue to you by and by. It is a good deal better for us to do right. There was a lady in Chicago that came to me in great distress and says, "What shall I do? I am engaged to be married to a young man who is not a Christian." I said, "I cannot give you any advice about that; he has got your heart; your course is very plain. I should tell that young man faithfully, just your feelings; just give him the Word of God and say that it tells you that you, who are a professed child of God, cannot marry him while he is unconverted, for it says, 'Be ye not unequally yoked.'" She did so. The young man gave her up, but it was not a week before he was in the inquiry room. He said he had a great respect for that young lady. She took her stand, and he said he had more respect for her and for her God. O, my friends, I know this doctrine isn't just what you like, but it is a good deal better to have the truth and to know what God would have us do. They that go contrary to the word of God he will go contray to. Let us just ask ourselves this question, "Am I unequally yoked with unbelievers? am I yoked up with some unbeliever?" Perhaps somebody may say here, "I have been converted since I got married." The Word of God guards that; you are not to leave your husband. I am talking to those who have not formed the alliance, and if you will read your Bibles carefully on this point you will find that God gives no uncertain sound. Yet some of you think that by marrying you might save the person. I had rather be saved than be living in hopes of being saved. If the young man you want to marry won't accept God before you are united. you can feel pretty snre he won't afterwards. If he won't reason with you, take your word and allow you to talk to him about Christ before marriage, I haven't much hope to believe that he will after you are married. You will find a good many say, "He is a narrow bigoted man; I believe that if I am united to an unbeliever, I can lift him towards God." I suppose Lot reasoned so about Sodom. But it lifted him down instead of up. Instead of our lifting the world, we find the world

PULLING THE CHURCH OF GOD DOWN.

If you want to be right with the world you want to testify against the the sins of the world. There is too much compromise between a religious wife and an unconverted husband. She will let him persuade her to go to the theater sometimes in order to get him to go to church with her, and then he will take her to a church where the Word of God isn't preached, which is even worse than the theatre sometimes. A friend of mine in England purchased a gold chain for a friend, and carried it in his pocket for sometime, and a lead whistle that it rubbed against made it black. The lead affected the gold, but the gold did not affect the lead. And so you will find the world gets us down, but we don't get it up. The gold will not go into the lead, but the lead will go into the gold. What we want is to be separated, and if we want power with God and man we must be separated. A short time ago a man told me he had a canary, which, being placed beside some English sparrows, lost its song, and afterwards would do nothing but chirp, chirp, chirp. That is the trouble with Christians who have not got separated from the world. They cannot sing songs of praise without going chirp, chirp, chirp, and if they go into prayer-meetings they do the same, and make empty prayer. If he wants power with God, a man must be separated. If not you will will lose your song and sweetness out of your heart. Withdraw from the world and then God will bless you. Look again at the eleventh chapter of Numbers, fourth verse. I think that gives us another view of this truth, and how it is that we lose our power. You know the children of Israel, when they came out of Egypt were followed by some Egyptians. It says: "Nevertheless, these shall ye not eat of, them that chew the cud, or them that divide the hoof, as the camel, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you." What a picture that was. They loathed the manna of heaven. God gave them angel's food, bread of heaven. Men loathe the Bible. They run after operas and theatres, and they follow the world, and the world has come into the church. Yet they loathed the manna of heaven. We find that Enoch walked with God, and conquered death with one bound. As old Dr. Bonner of Scotland, expressed it, "Enoch took a long walk one day, and he has not got back yet." Enoch is walking up there with God, and by and by we shall see him. May God help us to walk with Him.

Miss Sarah Smiley said in a recent Bible reading in Chicago, that, strange as it may seem, she was often met with the question: "Is the Bible really true?" Her reply was that it is. And the evidence that it is is abundant. She continued: There are two ways of proving this fact, both equally satisfactory. In both of these ways it has been satisfactorily proved many times. The first method of proof is by external, historical evidence. This is a laborious method, requiring much time and study; yet it is entirely satisfactory. The second equally satisfactory proof that the Bible is true is within the reach of all. It is this: The Bible fully accomplishes what it promises in those who personally test it. To illustrate: There are two ways of ascertaining whether or not a loaf of bread is nutritious. The one by chemical analysis, an elaborate method, requiring much time and study. But if you are hungry you need not wait for the results of chemistry. Eat and if refreshed you will know as really that the bread is good as you would from the chemist's analysis.

Religious Intelligence.

—Major Whittle preached his farewell sermon in the Chicago Tabernacle last Sabbath afternoon to a large audience. His work has been eminently successful here in strengthening and instructing and the prayers of thousands will follow him to Toledo, Ohio.

—The United Presbyterian church at Bloomington, Indiana, has been experiencing an almost continual revival during the past year. The pastor, Rev. W. P. McNary finds also time to take an honored part in our reform as President of his State Association.

—The great Pan-Presbyterian council will be held in Edinburgh in July. Among the topics to be discussed are, "Principles of Presbyterianism," "Home Work," "Foreign Missions," "Unbelief, and How to Meet It," "Spiritual Life," "Christian Training of the Young," "Presbyterian Literature," "Social Evils."

—The late action of the government of Spain in the suppression of religious liberty is among the saddest memories in its annals. The two state documents, issued from the government offices of Madrid, have astonished the Christian world and alarmed the best friends of the Spanish people. These documents define the limits of religious tolerance, reducing it to the smallest dimensions, defend the sub-governor who made himself notorious by acts of disgraceful intolerance against the Protestants, and exonerate him from all blame. The return of Isabella and her mother, who were exiled in 1868, has been attended by the imprisonment of hundreds of liberals of all classes, from those occupying all positions, filling the land with dismay and sorrow. But religious liberty will again triumph in that land. Mrs. Alice G. Gulick writes from Santander that those who live in a land of religious liberty have no idea what it costs a woman in Spain to break away from the Romish Church! She describes the case of a poor widow who was greatly persecuted for embracing the Protestant faith.—Interior.

News of the Week.

—The heavy snows of March disappeared before the warm rains and sun of last week and the floods were released from winter's chain to overflow large sections Chicago toward the city limits and cause an almost unprecedented rise in Northern Illinois streams. Fox river was reported higher than ever before known on Sunday afternoon.

—From like causes at Staffordville, Conn., last week, a dam across the headwaters of the Willimantic river burst and hundreds of thousands worth of property in railroads, bridges, mills, churches, etc., were destroyed. The villages were warned so that all escaped but two men.

—The prosecuting attorney is after two or three members of the late Sullivan jury for perjury. He thinks he has a clear case with one of them.

—Negotiations by Russia with the other Powers are yet incomplete and it is believed that she is unprepared for war. Gladstone and his colleagues in Parliament have again attacked the action of the ministry in the Turkish question and demand interference in behalf of the oppressed subjects of Turkey.

—The army Board of engineers have examined the foundation of the Washington monument at Washington city and ordered work to cease. The foundation has settled over eight inches and the whole pile is crooked.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV, A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

Cynosure Tract No. 28.

FREEMASONRY REVEALED.

A LEGAL ATTESTATION BY EDMOND RONAYNE

To the correctiuess of the published expositions of Freemasonry. The author very briefly states the mode of preparation and initiation in the various degrees, with the mock murder and resurrection of the candidate in the personification of Hiram Abiff in the 3d, degree and the penalties of each.

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100. $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts [illegible]

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year 1876 were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Gain in one month..... 37

This gain is greater than that of last month. Subscriptions are expiring every week. Subscriptions must be constantly received to keep the list up.

Wm. K. Morley, Brush Creek, Iowa, sent a club of ten subscribers for a year last February and wrote: "I am in hopes to do better next time." Later he sent in a club of twelve and wrote: "I intend to keep trying." This week he sends another club of sixteen for a year together with a check for $24.00. He writes: "I have been trying again and have succeeded in obtaining sixteen subscribers."

HOPING and TRYING with God's blessing added bring great results.

A club of seven for a year, sent, we believe, by Jacob Bixler, Martinsburg, Ind., has been received.

A. Holt, Carthage, New York, writes: "I am trying to secure some more new subscribers."

Rev. A. Shelley, McPherson, Kan., writes: "I am in hopes I shall be able to send you a club after harvest." H. C. Stoughton, Duncan, Ill., writes: "I shall endeavor to scatter papers this summer and if possible get up a club for the fall if not sooner." This is the way to be successful. "Rome was not built in a day," and clubs for any paper are seldom secured without patient, persevering, hopeful effort. Mr. Stoughton sends two new subscriptions for three months each that he has solicited again and again for years. We congratulate him upon this beginning of success.

Now we are just entering upon the month of April, TWO HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SIX subscriptions expire this month. If they are all renewed promptly and those who can will send one, two or three or more new subscriptions, we will be able to make another good report the first of May.

How many clubs of ten or more shall we receive this month?

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 31, 1877.—From S Augspurger, A A Baker, L Birge, J Binler, J Ball, J Crothers, A W Curtis, P Corl, A M Durfee, E T Dufton, Era Club Agency, J Hoyne, J C Hopkins, H Hough, J W Hibbs, S M Harrow, H G Harrington, A Holt, B F Johnson, J Jackson, A Kingsley, C A Knox, M Liscomb, W D Lowrey, J N Lloyd, N W Myers, W Manchmer, W K Morley, S P Martin, J Motter, W T McConnell, W B Milligan, M Matthieson, R D Nichols, M Pettengill, H C Stoughton, J Sleeper, A Shelley, J Stewart, C B Sherk, J M Snyder, A Wilson, J Wilkison, J B Wells.

MCHENRY COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

A call for a "county convention opposed to secret societies" having been widely circulated, and numerously signed by prominent citizens, we hereby announce such a convention to be held in the Independent church at Marengo, Ills., commencing at 2 P. M., Wednesday, April 25th, and continuing through that and the following day, and earnestly invite a general attendance. Entertainment furnished for all who come.

P. C. TEEPLE, Pres.

IOWA AND SECRETISM.—The Iowa State Convention, opposed to secret societies, will meet at Oskaloosa April 24. This place is a stronghold of Masonry, and the writer hopes the churches and societies will be fully represented, and that everybody will come who can come. Let not the enemy laugh at our insignificant numbers. It is desired that all who intend coming will send in their names in due time, so that arrangements can be made for entertainment. Address

R. A. MCAYEAL,
Oskaloosa, Iowa.

REFORMERS OF MICHIGAN, ATTENTION!

There is to be a quarterly meeting of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies to be held in Howell, Livingston county, April 24th and 25th, commencing at 2 P. M. Tuesday, the 24th. All reformers are expected to be in attendance. Preparations are being made to accommodate all with a home who are from a distance. By order of Topics of the Time.

Mrs. Pike, says the Interior of the wife of Jones' murderer, proposes a conundrum for Chicago and mankind. She wants to know why she is kept in a vile dungeon, whereas Mrs. Sullivan was treated with the most delicate and respectful consideration.

In following up the assassins in the late Chinese massacre at Chico, Cal., the authorities, as was expected, traced the game to a secret den, the Order of Caucasians, and in pursuing their investigations struck against the following: "I swear before God Almighty that I will carry out and obey all orders of the Council of Nine, whatever they may be. If I do not so my life is forfeited and I may be put to death by this Council of Nine." No Jesuit or Freemason could put it more concisely than have these "hoodlums" of San Francisco. To get at so complete subjugation of its members Freemasonry puts them through scores of oaths and dozens of degrees, all which is unnecessary blasphemy, expense and humiliation, since the end to be gained is the same. The stultifying, confusing methods of the "Ancient" order, however, serve it well when brought into public accusation, while these plain spoken "Caucasians" are likely to feel the heavy hand of law.

Pres. Hayes' appointment for Secretary of the Navy seemed to need more explanation than any other. It was like going to the ranks of a generation past, and the younger politicians could not understand it. But of all the reasons given the Catholic press alone urges the agreement of the President and Mr. Thompson on the papal question. One has been successful as a politician while hostile to the aggrandizement of that power, and the other has written a book. It is not impossible that anticipating a German campaign with the Jesuits, Mr. Hayes selected one adviser who had convictions on the subject, and could maintain them. In an editorial on Mr. Thompson and his book in the Catholic Review, the worst that is said is that he "is understood to have been a Know Nothing," and the book "bears evidence that he is a Freemason," which is certainly bad enough to be said and worse if true.

Has President Hayes escaped the sword of Blaine to be slain by Wendell Phillips? The Attic orator did not excel, in his severe denunciations of Philip of Macedon, the scathing fire of the Demosthenes of Boston, in his late speech in Philadelphia, and repeated in an interview the other day with a Boston reporter. Mr. Phillips believes that the friends of President Hayes have "sold him out" on the Southern question, and his advisers he dubs a "slave-hound cabinet," with a hearty hatred. Gen. Devins, the Attorney General, is the special target of his hot shot, and his past career is held up riddled by the fierce broadside of invective. Devins, in 1851, when United States Marshall in Boston, caught and returned a negro under the infamous Fugitive Slave Law. Phillips cannot forget this outrage and enjoys his revenge as heartily as an Indian. Devins served in the Union army and bears some scars for the black race, but we do not know as this particular sin was atoned for or repented of after all. Mr. Phillips might well have attacked him for another offense against public morals and American principles, since he has been at the head of the Grand Army of the Republic and is now chief of the secret Loyal Legion. No man would likely be allowed to hold such offices if he were not also a Freemason.

A remarkable example of the influence of the press and telegraph was shown last week in New England. Friday, at 2 P. M., was the hour set for the execution of John P. Phair at Windsor, Vt. The day before he gave a full statement in defense of his innocence of the crime of murder to a representative of the Boston Globe, who telegraphed it to his paper where it appeared next morning. A gentleman named Downing read it, and recalled facts in connection which were strong proof of Phair's claim. Immediately the telegraph was at work to find Governor Fairbank, though but two hours remained before the execution; and finally at fifteen minutes past one a reprieve of a month was granted. Phair maintained his innocence even when ready for execution, but had given up all hope, and fainted at the news of delay.

Bismarck will not be allowed to resign after all, as cabled last week. The Emperor has given him a four-months' holiday, being assured that German reforms shall be placed in careful hands meantime. The news of his resignation produced unwonted excitement,—regrets and misgivings at his withdrawal in this critical period of European affairs, but satisfaction among among his enemies in the German Parliament, in France, and especially at Rome. His return to duty will be celebrated by more active campaigns in his plans of reform in internal administration, social legislation, the system of taxation and railway questions, and wherever he may bide his shadow will fall broadly across Europe in the turbulent months that may fill out the year.

BISHOP JOHN D. LEE.

THE HERO OF THE MOUNTAIN MEADOW MASSACRE.

The Church of the Latter Day Saints of Jesus Christ is a Masonic lodge, and nothing else. It is Masonry applied to the government of a community; not for the good of that community, but for the purposes of power and profit; for the benefit of the leaders. Brigham Young is its Grand Master. It differs from the other lodges of the United States in some particulars, though in no essential principle. It has received three degrees above those of other lodges, which were communicated by the Archangel Gabriel to Joseph Smith, who in turn gave them to Brigham Young. The grips and signs of these three higher degrees are different from those of the Grand Lodge of any of the States of the Union; and the penalty, too, called the "blood atonement," by which a Mormon agrees to be killed if he "disobeys orders," is somewhat, though not materially different.

The manner of disposing of a refractory member is more methodically and systematically arranged than it is by other lodges generally, which are obliged to study appearances on account of the force of law and opinion. A regular organized band of assassins, called "Danites" or "The Destroying Angels," attend to that matter, and are said to do it very effectually. Directed by the Grand Master and his twelve apostles and seventy elders, they sweep down upon a man in whom there lingers too many traces of independence, before he knows it, and thus serve the purpose of intimidation to perfection. But to do these men justice, they have probably not murdered more of the citizens of the United States in proportion than have the other secret lodges of the country; for it must be remembered that since the days of Morgan Masonic murders have greatly increased, until those committed by the Ku Klux in Louisiana alone, are estimated at upwards of four thousand.

In 1857-9 when United States forces occupied a position in the neighborhood of Great Salt Lake City, sent there ostensibly to reduce rebel Mormons to submission, a Masonic lodge was established in the camp of the troops; a building was erected especially for the purpose; but though the Mormons might probably have the grip of entrance to it, yet the American officers could not readily enter the Mormon lodge, because of its higher degrees and different grips. For this is the nature of Masonry: it consists of rings within rings, the inner rings growing continually smaller until a Grand Master, or king, proves to be the last ring and chief head-center of all. The higher orders may find admission into the lower degrees, but the lower degrees can never enter the higher orders.

Yet as the troops were under the direction of the slave-power, and were being made to serve the purposes of rebellion, there was an interest in common between the lodge of the camp and the lodge of the Mormons, who were fellow rebels, which helped the two lodges to a ready understanding with each other. Masonry is Masonry the world over; and pirates and bandits have a pretty thorough knowledge of its language, however mystic it may be. The Mormons, who had driven out all the United States civil officers from the Territory, were comforted, reassured and strengthened in their rebellion by the presence of United States troops, whose ark of the covenant was a Masonic lodge; something which an American military camp then saw probably for the first time since the landing at Jamestown. It may possibly have become "ancient and honorable" since then.

But while the troops were yet on their way to Great Salt Lake City the horrid massacre of Mountain Meadow took place, in September, 1857. The Mormon Bishop Lee took a leading part in that affair. The circumstances were these: A large party of emigrants from Arkansas, men, women and children were on their way to California, through Utah, when they were set upon by Mormons and their Indian allies and all killed, plundered and stripped, except a few children who were too young to give testimony in the case. The Mormons kept their jewel of a silent tongue on the affair; laid the blame on the Indians, as has been done in many similar cases, and for many years it seemed as if the law had been as successfully defied as it is by the lodge generally. Owing, however, to the opening of Utah by railway communication, the defeat of the slave-power ally of the Mormons, and an increase of Anti-masonic sentiment in the country, and owing partly too, to the fiendish, wholesale character of the massacre, one of the murderers, Bishop Lee, has at last, after a lapse of nearly twenty years, been brought to punishment. He was shot to death by sentence of court on the very spot where the massacre was committed, on the 23d of March, 1877.

Lee, in his dying confession, gives many details of the awful tragedy. The emigrants defended themselves for several days, receiving and inflicting considerable loss, but were finally worried down and enticed out of their defences under a white flag, and with the pretence of protection against the Indians. When the party were thus disarmed and defenceless, they were fired upon "simultaneously along the whole line," and destroyed. This action was the immediate result of a council of "presidents, bishops and other church officers and members of the High Council, societies, high priests, etc., who invoked the aid of the Holy Spirit to prepare their minds and guide them to do right and carry out the counsels of their leaders."

One of the assailants, McMurdy, as he raised his piece to fire, said: "Lord, my God, receive their spirits, for it is for the kingdom of heaven's sake that we do this." Thus was the kingdom of heaven taken by violence by these Masons, as it is by Masons generally, pretending that they find precepts for their murderous tricks in the Bible.

An emigrant by the name of Aden, who had formerly stood friend to some Mormons against violence in "the States," and a Mormon by the name of Laney, who ventured to befriend him, were both killed in cold blood, such terrible severity being in accordance with the commands given by the Lord to the children of Israel to destroy the gentiles.

Lee says that he tried to stop this savage work; that he often wept during its occurrence; that he pleaded for the women and children, etc.; leaving us to infer that he was very much better than the institution to which he belonged; but that "he had to obey orders." This was the way that Morgan was killed. The pious fraternity, derived from King Solomon, had to obey their oath! When Lee reported the work done to Brigham Young, he said to him: "President Young, you should either release men from their obligation or sustain them when they do what they have entered into the most solemn obligation to do." Brigham replied, "I will think over the matter and make it a subject of prayer, and you may come back in the morning and see me." Lee did so, and Brigham said to him, "John, I feel first rate; I asked the Lord if it was all right for the deed to be done to take away the vision of the deed from my mind; and the Lord did so, and I feel first rate. It is all right. The only fear I have is of traitors." This is the only fear that the lodge usually has. It fears traitors; and it has taken the most effective means of intimidation, accompanied with frequent murders, to suppress them.

How much of Lee's story may be believed is uncertain; for where Masonry prevails it is impossible to tell what is the truth. But it is only too certain that between one and two hundred American citizens were murdered by Mormons and their allies in 1857; that an American force of from two to four thousand men, with Territorial judges and civil officers, lay encamped near the scene of the massacre for two years, and that nothing has been accomplished for the vindication of law and justice until this present time. Such is the power of Freemasonry in the United States.

The Grand Lodge of Great Salt Lake City derives its power and its priesthood from Aaron, the brother of Moses, instead of King Solomon, and is hence more ancient, and perhaps more honorable than any other Grand Lodge in the country. But however this may be, it seems certain to our own mind that the great Mormon Temple of Great Salt Lake City is not a greater blotch, a fouler spot on the face of American society than is the Masonic Temple of Boston, of New York, of Philadelphia, or of Baltimore. Nor is any act of the Mormon church a greater outrage upon the rights and sensibilities of a Christian, republican people, than the chartering, by Congress, of the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia.

AMERICAN.

Two Things Some Baptists cannot Understand.

BY REV. S. CARLOS RICE.

The first is why there are more females than males in certain churches?

One Rev. H. L. Morehouse has written for the Standard a series of articles in answer to the above question. His articles are very elaborate but with all his learning he fails to cite one quite important reason, viz., secretism. Women do not patronize the lodge so much as do the men, not even in villages and cities, and much less in the country. But men have so many lodges to support, especially in cities and villages, that little time or inclination is left them to devote to the church. Mr. Morehouse shows from statistics that there is a large disproportion between female and male members, especially in city churches; not so in rural churches. In some cities this excess is three to one; in others two to one. In the Standard of March 1st, Mr. M. says: "Rural life does present more favorable conditions for the reception of the Gospel than does city life." Why could not Mr. M. tell us the chief reason? He probably knows that most lodges are in cities and villages—I do not speak of grangers. Lodge men are usuallycontent with the lodge and lodge religion; and what do they care for the church, unless as a stairway to good society? And if they do not care for good society and respectability they will not join a church. Very few farmers belong to Masonic or Odd-fellow's lodges; hence almost or quite as many men as women in rural districts belong to some church.

Another thing some Baptists cannot, or will not understand, is why there are so many short pastorates among them. In the same copy of the Standard one "E. A." says, "That of 212 pastors (in Michigan) 69 had settled within the year 1876, 64 during 1875, 24 in 1874, 23 in 1873, 8 in 1872, and 1 in 1864. By this showing only ten pastors have been settled over six years in a place." Yes, and in many Baptist Associations one can hear the same sad account. And the sage divines puzzle their brains and look this way and that, above and beneath, round about, and everywhere almost, to find the cause, and get a cure for short pastorates. Still a few of them know well the chief cause and a good cure, viz., oath-bound secret societies, as the cause, and the cure, exorcise the church of the evil spirit of secretism, and exercise the church in the spirit of the Master Jesus Christ. The practice of this rule would save much lamentable speech making, much writing and very much trouble. According to Baptist and Congregational church polity, one man of some influence, possibly a Mason, may by his single vote elect a pastor, and that same man may make trouble enough to defeat the election of a pastor. In this Republic one vote can elect a President, but one man cannot make trouble enough to non-elect him. But alas, in many churches, four, three, or even one Mason often starts and fosters a trouble that sooner or later ousts the pastor; or, as they say in Arkansas, will make him "git." It is possible that one Masonic member will do nothing more than withhold very needed support from his Anti-mason pastor, and that pastor is compelled to "git." Scores and hundreds of pastors are thus wholly or partially starved away every year, and the money they ought to have replenishes the coffers of the lodge. Many ministers know by sad experience that is not fancy but fact.

But withholding support is not the only mode of driving off a pastor. There are as many ways as there are motions of that "unruly member" that is full of deadly poison.

As Bro. Hinman says in his article on Free Prayer Meetings, "One or two Freemasons will govern a church and control its prayer meetings as effectively as though they were a majority." So one or two Freemasons can drive off a pastor. Secretism is not the only cause of short pastorates, but that it is a very fruitful cause, there can be no doubt.

Paine boasted: "I have gone through the Bible as a man would go through a wood with an axe on his shoulder and fell trees; here they lie; and the priests if they can, may replant them. They may perhaps stick them in the ground but they will never grow." Has the tree of life died? It is spreading its branches over the earth, and the nations are partaking of its life-giving fruit, and reposing in safety beneath its branches. "In five years," he declared, "there will not be a Bible in America."

Washington's Masonic Record.

Editor Cynosure:

The Masonic Advocate for March 5th has the following:

"A Perfect Ashlar.—The best specimen of a perfect Ashlar presented in the Masonic ranks in American history was George Washington. He was indeed a paragon of Masonry, an examplar of its graces. There is no degree of moral improvement suggested by Masonic teachings to which he did not aspire, and but few that he did not reach. His life, as a citizen, a statesman, and a patriot the world knows by heart; his career as a Mason is not less worthy of admiration and respect. In the pressure of a long and doubtful war, when his faculties were concentrated in the never ceasing details of command, he was ever ready to time his thoughts to lodge meetings, happy to respond to lodge courtesies. His portrait or bust should be conspicuously displayed in every lodge-room. Not only should we become familiar with the majestic features of this perfect Ashlar in our dwellings, but they should appear in conjunction with the highest and most significant emblem of all, the letter G over the Master's chair."

Also the following:

"Washington's Chair.—A correspondent of the Wilmington Herald writing from Raleigh, North Carolina, says the chair occupied by George Washington as Worshipful Master of the Masonic lodge of Alexandria, Virginia, is now in possession of Unanimity Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Edenton, in that State, whither it was sent during the war of 1812 for safe keeping. It is of massive mahogany, elaborately carved, and a fine specimen of antique furniture. An effort will be made to induce its custodians to allow this memento of the illustrious 'man and Mason' to be placed on exhibition next year."

Now let us examine and see what such statements are worth. In Webb's Monitor, page 325, we learn that November 4, 1752, George Washington was initiated. On page 314 we learn that on March 3, 1753, George Washington was passed Fellow Craft. On page 321 we learn that on August 4, 1753, George Washington was raised Master Mason. On page 327 we learn that on December 28, 1778, Washington attended the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. And on page 313 we learn that two years later, namely, January 13, 1780, the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania proposed George Washington to be General Grand Master of the United States. This is all Rob. Morris gives us of the Masonic life of Washington, the "perfect Ashlar."

Now let us turn to Washington's letter, dated September 25, 1798, and we find the following: "Except to correct an error you have run into, of my presiding over the English lodges in this country. The fact is I preside over none; nor have I have I been in one more than once or twice, within the last thirty years." One of these visits to the lodge we have given above, December 28, 1778; now if we take 30 from 1798 we find 1768, and if from this we take 15 we find 1753. And hence George Washington could not have attended lodge meetings more than fifteen years. Now what becomes of those "lodge meetings" during "a long and doubtful war?" And I think that the "Perfect Ashlar" becomes very imperfect. But such is Masonry. It claims nearly all the good men of the country, and hesitates at no lie to carry out that claim, no matter how much it contradicts the facts of history.

The Earliest known Protestant Church action against Masonry.

Through the kindness of Rev. Samuel McArthur, of New Concord, we are able to present below a document which embodies, perhaps, the first action against Masonry ever taken by a Protestant church. The article is found on page 128, of "A Display of the Secession Testimony," by Adam Gib: Edinburgh, 1774. We reproduce the action in full, as a valuable item in Anti-masonic history.

ACT CONCERNING THE MASON-OATH.

Edinburgh, August 25, 1757.

Whereas an oath is, one of the most solemn acts of religious worship, which ought to be taken only upon important and necessary occasions; and to be sworn in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness,—without any mixture of sinful, profane, or superstitious devices: and

Whereas, the Synod had laid before them, in their meeting at Stirling, on the 7th of March, 1745, an overture concerning the Mason-oath; bearing, that there were very strong presumptions, that among Masons an oath of secrecy is administered to intrants into their society, even under a capital penalty, and before any of those things which they swear to keep secret be revealed to them, and that they pretend to take some of these secrets from the Bible; beside other things which are ground of scruple, in the manner of swearing the said oath. And therefore overturing, that the Synod would consider the whole affair: and give directions, with respect to the admission of persons engaged in that oath to sealing ordinances; and,

Whereas, the Synod, in their meeting at Stirling, on the 26th of September, 1745, remitted the overture concerning the Mason-oath to the several Sessions subordinate to them; for their proceeding therein, as far as they should find practicable,—according to our received and known principles, and the plain rules of the Lord's Word and sound reason: and

Whereas, the Synod, in their meeting at Edinburgh, on the 6th of March, 1755, when a particular cause about the Mason-oath was before them,—did appoint all the Sessions under their inspection, to require all persons in their respective congregations—who are presumed or suspected to have been engaged in that oath, to make plain acknowledgement whether or not they have ever been so; and to require that such as they may find to have been engaged therein, should give ingenuous answers to what further inquiry the Sessions may see cause to make, concerning the tenor and administration of the said oath to them; and that the Sessions should proceed to the purging of what scandal they may thus find those persons convicted of; according to the directions of the above-mentioned act of Synod, in September, 1745; and,

Whereas the generality of the Sessions have, since the afore-mentioned periods, dealt with several persons under their inspection about the Mason-oath; in the course of which procedure, by the confessions made by them,—they have found others, besides those of the Mason Craft, to be involved in that oath. And the Synod finding it proper and necessary, to give more particular directions to the several Sessions,—for having the heinous profanation of the Lord's name, by that oath, purged out of all the congregations under their inspection:—

Therefore the Synod did, and hereby do appoint,—that the several Sessions subordinate to them, in dealing with persons about the Mason-oath, shall particularly interrogate them: If they have taken that oath, and when and where they did so? If they have taken the said oath, or declared their approbation of it, oftener than once, upon being admitted to a higher degree in a Mason-lodge? If that oath was not administered to them, without letting them know the terms of it—till in the act of administering the same to them? If it was not an oath binding them to keep a number of secrets, none of which they were allowed to know before swearing the oath? If, besides a solemn invocation of the Lord's name in that oath, it did not contain a capital penalty; about having their tongues and hearts taken out, in case of breaking the same? If the said oath was not administered to them with several superstitious ceremonies; such as, the stripping them of, or requiring them to deliver up, anything of metal which they had upon them,—and making them kneel upon their right knee bare, holding up their right arm bare, with their elbow upon the Bible, or with the Bible laid before them,—or having the Bible, as also the square and compasses, in some particular way applied to their bodies? And if, among the secrets which they were bound by that oath to keep, there was not a passage of scripture read to them (particularly 1 Kings, 7:21), with or without some explication put upon the same, for being concealed?

Moreover, the Synod appoint,—that the several Sessions shall call before them, all persons in their congregations who are of the Mason Craft, and others whom they may have a particular suspicion of as being involved in the Mason-oath,—except such as have been already dealt with, and have given satisfaction upon that head; and that upon their answering the first of the foregoing questions in the affirmative, the Sessions shall proceed to put the other interrogatories before appointed. As also, that all persons of the Mason Craft applying for sealing ordinances, and likewise others concerning whom there may be any presumption of their having been involved in the Mason-oath,—shall be examined by the Ministers, if they have been so; and upon their acknowledging the same, or declining to answer whether or not,—the Ministers shall refer them to be dealt with by the Sessions, before admitting them to these ordinances. And that all such persons, offering themselves to the Sessions for joining in Covenanting-work,—shall be then examined by the Sessions, as to their concern in the aforesaid oath.

And the Synod further appoint, that when persons are found to be involved in the Mason-oath,—according to their confessions in giving plain and particular answers to the foregoing questions, and professing their sorrow for the same, the said scandal shall be purged by a Sessional rebuke and admonition,—with a strict charge to abstain from all concern afterward in administering the said oath to any, or enticing any into that snare, and from all practices of amusing people with the pretended mysteries of their signs and secrets. But that persons who shall refuse or shift to give plain and particular answers to the foregoing questions, shall be reputed under scandal; incapable of admission to sealing ordinances, till they answer and give satisfaction as before appointed.

And the Synod refer to the several sessions, to proceed unto higher censure as they shall see cause,—in the case of persons whom they may find involved in the said oath with special aggravation; or taking, or relapsing into the same, in opposition to warnings against doing so.

And the Synod appoint, that each of the Sessions under their inspection shall have an extract of this act, for executing the same accordingly.—Advocate of Reform.

History of Sylvan Lodge No. 41, Moravia, N. Y.

Prepared at the request of the lodge by the Rev. John A. Bowman, Rector of St. Matthew's church, Dec. 1876.

Up to the end of the year 1825 Sylvan lodge had continued to prosper. And although prosperous and generally "in funds," yet owing to the outlays in charity, in the burial of the dead, and in completing and fitting up their new hall they were obliged to use the strictest economy.

As an instance of the care with which the lodge husbanded their means, the historian has found among the records, and presents for the amusement of the brethren, the following resolution of Feb. 1, 1825: "Resolved, That if the chapter will pay one-half, that we purchase a large Bible, three brass candlesticks and a bottle of ink."

On the 31st of May, 1825, arrangements were ordered to be made for the celebration of St. John the Baptist's Day, June 24th. The Rev. Orsamus H. Smith, rector of St. Matthew's church, was appointed orator, and Franklin Day, marshall. It is to be presumed, but the records do not mention the fact, that the celebration came off with pleasantness to the brethren, who had extended invitations to the brothers of the different lodges of this county.

This year seemed to have been one of great popularity of the order of Masons in the village and neighborhood, for there were nineteen persons entered, passed and raised during 1825; about the highest number ever taken in one year, during the whole existence of the lodge. Among the persons made Masons this year, was the Hon. Ebenezer Smith, initiated August 30th. Bro. Smith was one of nature's noblest sons, and for many long years walked before his fellow men of Moravia, as a man of enlarged benevolence and hospitality, as a warm-hearted Christian, a firm supporter of St. Matthew's parish, of which church he was for many years a consistent member. He had been honored by his fellow-citizens with the office of Justice of the Peace for twenty-four years, and he served a term of five years as one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas for Cayuga county. He died in Moravia, May 23, 1854, and was buried with Masonic honors. He had attained the good old age of seventy-six years. A daughter of his, Mrs. Mary Jennings, is now residing in the village, and is a member of the same church, where her honored father worshipped.

Now we enter upon the dark days of the lodge. The year 1826 the country ran wild with Anti-masonry both politically and socially. Masons were pointed at as members of a secret and dangerous society—dangerous in a free government, because, as it was falsely asserted from the political "stump," they were bound by the most horrid oaths to defend each other against charges of murder and treason. It required nerve then to acknowledge one's self to be a Mason. Yet Sylvan lodge, faithful to its principles, continued its communications through fifteen years of dark adversity, while every other lodge in western New York shut down. Few persons dared to join them, but those few were duly initiated, passed and raised, as of yore. In 1826 two were made Masons, Thos. Morgan and Abram Sclover. In 1827 two, A. K. Tremain and Wm. Loteridge. In 1828 and 1829 none. In 1830 one, W. W. Locke. In 1831 and 1832 none. In 1833 three, Jos. B. Colgrove, B. Chase and J. Shepherd. In 1834 two, Abram Helm and A. H. Dunbar. In 1835 two, Wm. Wade and Jos. Bowker. Wm. Wade was born at Dighton, Mass., on April 28, 1811. His parents settled in this neighborhood in 1817, where he grew to manhood and learned the carpenter's trade. He was for years a communicant of St. Matthew's church. He died May 1, 1871, and was buried with Masonic honors from the church whose services he loved so much. He was a Sir Knight Templar, well versed in the work of higher degrees. In 1836 five, Philo B. Barnum, John Morrison, Jonas White, T. J. Winsor and H. G. Fowler. In 1837 one, David A. Moore. In 1838 and 1839 none. In 1840 one, James J. Leach.

The year 1840 closed the "dark ages" of the lodge. The cry "Down with Masonry" had spent itself on the ear of credulous multitudes. The "political hobby-horse," on which many an unscrupulous politician had mounted to ride into office, broke down in the race for office by his ambitious rider, and was found to be but a miserable "jack" which threw his rider and left him sprawling in the political mire, bespattered with mud. The broken-down politician either mounted a horse of another color or was left out in the "cold," a despised man, and not to be trusted in office any longer.

Masonic Religion as Seen in its Dedications.

Mackey's Lexicon; Art. Dedication, pp. 105–108. When a Masonic hall has been erected it it is dedicated with certain well known and impressive ceremonies to Masonry, Virtue and Universal Benevolence. Lodges, however are differently dedicated.* Anciently they were dedicated to King Solomon, as the founder of ancient craft Masonry, and the first Most Excellent Grand Master.† Christian lodges are generally dedicated to St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist; and in every well regulated lodge there is exhibited at‡ certain point within a circle embordered by two perpendicular lines called the "lines parallel," which represent these two saints. In those English lodges which have adopted the union system of work, the dedication is to "God and his service," and the lines parallel represent Moses and Solomon. This change was adopted by the Grand Lodge of England 1813, to obviate the charge of sectarianism. I have, however, in another work, endeavored to prove that to this charge we by no means render ourselves amenable by this dedication to the above saints, since it is made to them, not as Christians, but as eminent Masons; not as saints, but as pious and good men; not as teachers of a religious sect, but as bright examplars of all those virtues which Masons are taught to reverence and practice.

With respect to the original cause of this dedication, the English lodges have preserved a tradition which, as a matter of curiosity, may find a place in this work. I am indebted for it to Bro. Moore's excellent magazine, vol. 2 p. 263.

"From the building of the first temple at Jerusalem to the Babylonish captivity, Freemason lodges were dedicated to King Solomon; from thence to the coming of the Messiah they were dedicated to Zerubbabel, the builder of the second temple; and from that time to the final destruction of the temple by Titus, in the reign of Vespasian, they were dedicated to St. John the Baptist; but owing to the many massacres and disorders which attended that memorable event, Freemasonry sunk very much into decay; many lodges were entirely broken up, and but few could meet in sufficient numbers to constitute their legality, and at a general meeting of the craft, held in the city of Benjamin, it was observed that the principal reason for the decline of Masonry was the want of a Grand Master to patronize it; they, therefore, deputed seven of their most eminent members to wait upon St. John the Evangelist, who was at that time bishop of Ephesus, requesting him to take the office of Grand Master. He returned for an answer, that though well stricken in years, (being upwards of ninety) yet having been in the early part of his life initiated into Masonry, he would take upon himself that office; he thereby completed by his learning, what the other St. John had completed by his zeal, and thus drew what Freemasons term a line parallel; ever since which Freemasons' lodges in all Christian countries have been dedicated both to St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist."

But the task is not difficult to trace more philosophically, and I believe more correctly, the real origin of this custom. In the spurious Masonry, so well known as the the mysteries of pagan nations, we may find the most plausible reasons for the celebration of our festivals in June and December, and for the dedication of our lodges to St. John the Baptist, and St. John the Evangelist.

The post-diluvians, according to the testimony of the Jewish writer Maimonides, the Magians of Persia, until their ritual was improved and purified by Zoroaster, and most probably the ancient Druids, introduced into their rites a great respect for, and even an adoration of the sun, as the source of light and life, and fruition, and the visible representative of the invisible, creative and preservative principle of nature. To such sects the period when the sun reached his greatest northern and southern declination by entering the zodiacal signs, Cancer and Capricorn, marked as it would be, by the most evident effect on the seasons, and on the length of the days and nights, could not have passed unobserved; but on the contrary must have occupied a distinguished place in their ritual. Now these important days fall respectively on the 21st of June and the 22d of December. In the spurious Masonry of the ancients these days were, doubtless, celebrated as returning eras in the existence of the great source of light, and object of their worship. Our ancient brethren adopted the custom, abandoning, however, in deference to their own purer doctrines, the idolatrous principles which were connected with these dates, and confining their celebration exclusively to their astronomical importance. But time passed on; Christianity came to mingle its rays with the light of Masonry, and our Christian ancestors, finding that the church had appropriated two days near these solsticial periods to the memory of two eminent saints it was easy to incorporate these festivals, by the lapse of a few days, into the Masonic calendar, and to adopt these worthies as patrons of our order. To this change the earlier Christian Masons were doubtless the more persuaded by the peculiar character of these saints. St. John the Baptist, by announcing the approach of Christ, and by the mystic ablution to which he subjected his proselytes, and which was afterward adopted in the ceremony of initiation into Christianity, might well be considered as the Grand Hierophant of the Christian church, while the mysterious and emblematic nature of the Apocalypse assimilated the mode of teaching adopted by St. John the Evangelist to that practiced by the fraternity. It is thus that I trace the present system of dedication, though these saints, to the heliacal worship of the ancients.

DEDICATION—(Morris' Dic. pp. 126,7.)

Every Masonic body is said to be "erected to God and dedicated to some proper patron," viz.:

Blue Lodge to Saint John the Baptist, or Saint John the Evangelist, according to the day of dedication.

Mark Masters' Lodge to Hiram the Builder.

Past Masters' Lodge to King Solomon. (Mackey says in his "Lexicon of Freemasonry" p. 108, to the Saints John.)

Most Excellent Masters' Lodge to King Solomon.

Royal Arch Chapter to Zerubbabel, Prince or Governor of Judah.

Royal and Select Masters' Lodge to Hiram the Builder.

Council of High Priests to Melchizedek.

Council of Red Cross Knights to Zerubbabel.

Commandery of Templar Knights to Prince Emanuel.

Commandery of Maltese Knights to the same, and Encampments of Knight Templars to Saint John the Almoner according to Mackey's Lexicon p. 108.

The dedication of a lodge is attended with solemn ceremonies, fully described in the Monitor under head of Past Masters. The ceremonials are under charge of the Grand Master or his deputy. The lodge is opened in the third degree. The Worshipful Master of the lodge to which the hall belongs, addresses a request to the Grand Master that the hall be examined, and if approved, "solemnly dedicated to Masonic purposes agreeably to ancient form." A procession is formed embracing the three degrees of Masonry, which three times circumambulates the hall. The Architect surrenders up the implements of his work to the Grand Master, who responds in a complimentary strain. An ode is sung. A second procession is formed of Master Masons only, which three times circumambulates the lodge, applying successively the corn the wine and the oil, thus dedicating the edifice to Masonry, to Saint John and universal benevolence.

[NOTES BY J. W. RAYNOR.]

*If lodges were anciently dedicated to Solomon, for so good a reason as the founder of Masonry, why change for some other patron? and who authorized the change?

†Lodges in Christian countries have been dedicated to the Saints John, because of the influence of Christianity, and the peculiar relations of these two saints thereto, and thus Mackey stultifies himself when he declares this.

‡Dr. Oliver in his "Symbol of Glory," enumerates twelve different Masonic interpretations of the circle and parallel lines.

Masonic Consistency.

HOW THEY SWEAR.

"I, A. B., of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God, and this worshipful lodge, erected to him and dedicated to the holy St. John, do hereby and hereon most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear that I will not assist in or be present at the initiating, passing or raising of a woman, an old man in dotage, a young man in non-age, an atheist, a madman, or a fool, knowing them to be such.

To all of which I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution to keep and perform the same, without any equivocation, mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind whatever, binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my body severed in twain in the midst, my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes and the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, so that no more trace or remembrance may be had of so vile and perjured a wretch as I would be should I ever knowingly and willingly violate this my solemn obligation of a Master Mason, so help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same."—Ext. from Oath of Master Mason.

HOW THEY REFORM.

On pages 276 and 277 of a book entitled "The Masonic Token," edited by William T. Anderson, 32d deg. Past Master, Past Grand Steward, etc., will be found the following account of the initiation of a lady in a French Masonic lodge. The narrative runs thus:

"The lady of General Faentraille, having adopted the military uniform, served as adjutant to her husband; she had distinguished herself by several heroic deeds of arms, but so particularly by her kindness and liberality to mankind in general, that the first Consul presented her with a commission as captain of cavalry, should she feel disposed to continue in the profession of her choice.

"The lodge of "Freres Artistes," of which many military officers were members, having arranged to hold, after one of their assemblages, a lodge meeting for ladies (fete d'adoption) previously to adjourning, notice was given to the Master (Bro. Cuvelier de Tric,) that a staff officer in full regimentals, was anxious to take part in the forthcoming ceremony. A certificate had been demanded and was submitted, but appeared to belong to a ladies' lodge (much to the astonishment and consternation of the Venerable and all present) addressed to Madame Faintraille, adjutant or captain. He recollected, however, that this lady, by her conduct and talents, had earned this extraordinary distinction, and doubted not that the officer mentioned was the lady, and was irrepressibly seized with with an overpowering impulse of making her a Freemason, and suggested it to the lodge, saying: 'As the First Consul has seen fit in the deeds of this lady to swerve from the usual course by making no difference in her sex, I do not see that we can err by following the example.' Many objected, having the fear of the Grand Orient (Grand Lodge) before their eyes; but the eloquence of the Venerable and the example of the First Consul, induced the majority to consent. Preparations were immediately commenced to receive the female adjutant into the brotherhood, with every possible and cautious form consistent with her sex. The ceremony passed off with honor (?) to all parties, and at its conclusion the Lodge of Adoption was opened."

The above is not the only instance of a violation of Masonic obligation in respect to the admission of females into the Masonic order which exists, for Demott, in his Ahiman Rezon, page 29, quoted by Mackey in his Masonic Jurisprudence, in a note at the bottom of pages 113 and 114 says: "This (female exclusion, etc.,) is still the law of ancient Masons, though disregarded by our brethren, (I mean our sisters) the modern Masons, who (some years ago) admitted Signor Singsong, the eunuch, at one of their lodges in the Strand, London. And upon a late trial at Westminster, it appeared that they admitted a woman called Madame D'E——." Here it is proper to ask in view of these initiations, are not the members of these lodges as much perjured for admitting women to the privileges of Masonry as seceding Masons for exposing the ritualism, obligations and ceremonies of the order? If there be any appreciable difference, in what does it consist? I opine it would take something more than a Philadelphia lawyer to define it. The figure these ladies cut in being made Masons, can be very well and correctly imagined by all who have attended and witnessed Ronayne's expositions upon the stage. The dress of the candidate, as exhibited by him, is verified and confirmed by Scott in his Keystone of the Masonic Arch, page 129, in these remarks:

"An ancient reason given for refusing females the privileges of enjoying the rights and benefits of Masonry, was the prohibition in Deuteronomy: 'The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth to the man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment.' The dress or apparel of a Mason, and particularly the dress of one passing through the celebration of the mysteries, would not be suitable for a woman. In the language of Bishop Patrick, 'if there were no distinction of sexes made by their habits, it would open the door to all manner of impurity; for which reason, if there were no other, this law was very wise and pious.'"

Moore adds his testimony to that of Scott, (Outlines of the Temple, p. 229,) in these words: "The members must be men, not women." Here is at once an insuperable barrier against the admission of females. It is the written behest of Masonic antiquity, and we dare not disobey the law or murmur at its restrictions. But such is the law, and it is as unchangeable as that of the Medes and Persians. The reasons (for this prohibition) are self-evident to every one who has passed the ordeal of our mystic brotherhood." Responding to which, we say, most certainly.

Scott and Moore are both standard Masonic authorities. Scott is the author of "The Analogy of Ancient Craft Masonry to Natural and Revealed Religion," Past Grand High Priest; Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Mississippi; Knight Templar, etc., etc. Moore is the editor of the Masonic Review, author of the "Craftsman," the "Templar's Text Book," the "Ancient Charges and Regulations of Freemasonry," and other Masonic works. Therefore, their testimony cannot be reasonably questioned, discredited nor impeached.

Rathbun and Remington.

Editor Cynosure:—

C. B. Remington, State Agent and D. P. Rathbun, State Lecturer, were in Allegan county, March 26th to 29th. Rathbun gave two lectures in the Congregational church in Hopkins, and two in the Christian church in Watron. He dealt some heavy blows. Masons, Oddfellows and grangers were out in general and felt it keenly. The craft made me think of an ox that had lost his cud; some sick, but opened not their months. Rathbun dared them to deny what he said, but mum was the answer. He also offered any Mason ten dollars if any one of them would go before any justice of the peace and be qualified that what he said was not true. He also laid out old Hiram in good style. "So mote it be." Dan'l Leggett.

The California Lecturer.

The friends of Christ and of religion unmixed with the base alloy of Baal-worship in California are to be congratulated in the acquisition of one of our most amiable and devoted workers to their number. These good brethren have for some time been sending up the "Macedonian cry," and God has heard and is about to answer their prayers. Rev. Henry Cogswell, announces through the paper that he expects to enter that field the last of the present or the first of next month. Private advices assure us that arrangements are being made to give him a hearty welcome and a cordial financial and moral support. This brother will carry with him the varied experiences of a business man, the benefits of years of successful pastoral labor, a personal knowledge of seven degrees of Freemasonry, a consecrated life, a clean record and the prayers of a host who love the Lord that bought them.

As the friends in California are waiting with interest his arrival so will the readers of the Cynosure be anxious to hear often from their fellow-laborer, of his fortunes and the progress of our common cause in that new field. Let us all pray that he may be able to "go up and possess the land" for Christ and his kingdom. J. P. Stoddard.

Ronayne in Lawrence Co., Ind.

Leesville, Ind., Mar. 26, 1877.

Editor Cynosure:—We have been somewhat isolated in this section of country. Very few of us have had the moral courage to utter a word against Masonry and kindred organizations. I am glad to say that a change has taken place. Some of us had long wished for Mr. E. Ronayne to visit us and publicly work the degrees of Masonry. This wish has lately been realized. We very happily succeeded in getting the largest house in Leesville for Mr. Ronayne. Accordingly, on the 13th inst. he arrived and worked the first three degrees on the evenings of the 14th, 15th and 16th, to the satisfaction of all except the members of the craft who became quite sullen and made themselves scarce during the expositions.

On the first evening the "egg argument" was used against us but to little purpose, except to make friends for us. The second evening we had a larger crowd than we had on the previous evening. Good order prevailed and everything passed off pleasantly. The third evening the weather was very disagreeable, yet we had a respectable audience. Those who attended the expositions were convinced of the fact that Mr. Ronayne has given us Masonry as it is, and are disgusted with its pagan rites and ceremonies.

The next day, after Mr. Ronayne's expositions were over, I am informed that the secretary of the lodge in Leesville received a letter from headquarters with the information that Ronayne was in Indiana; that he was an expelled Mason and working in the interests of a paper called the Christian Cynosure, and for the Masons to be on their guard.

I think much has been accomplished here. Jack Masons have been converted to Anti-masons and those who have heretofore been silent, are speaking out against the "image of the beast." We can count Anti-masons now by the score. For this we rejoice. We feel encouraged for the conflict between light and darkness. Mr. Ronayne's work will certainly be owned of God. When we study the past history of his eventful life, and his characteristics, we must confess that surely God has raised him up for the very work in which he is engaged. May his life he long spared to expose and reprove the abominations which are done of them in secret.

It is my purpose to deliver lectures against Masonry during the spring and summer at different points where I have been solicted. I shall also labor for the Cynosure. I have been teaching school since last September and have not had opportunity to lecture much. Yours for truth, J. T. Hobson.

A Masonic Minister.

Dear Brother Kellogg:—After the Grant county convention at Marion, Indiana, during which we had a very spicy debate on Oddfellowship with the pastor of the Christian church, I went to Wabash where I spoke once and came to Wakeman, Ohio, where I preached once and lectured twice in the Congregational church, and once in the Baptist church in Camden. From thence I went to York, Medina county, where I found rest and sympathy with that veteran reformer, Dr. Bingham. After visiting Litchfield and Chatham and making arrangements for lectures I preached in the York Congregational church and lectured in the evening. This was April 1st, and my subject the moral and religious aspects of secretism. The next morning I met the pastor of the Methodist (not M. E.) church in the postoffice, and the following conversation in substance took place.

Pastor.—I did not attend the lecture nor give notice of it. I regarded it as sacrilege, calculated to destroy religion, morals and good order.

"Well, that is just what Ahab thought of Elijah. If Elijah had only let Ahab, Jezebel and the four hundred prophets of Baal alone there would have been quiet times in Israel."

"Do you mean to compare us to Ahab, and Masonry to heathen religion?"

"I do. Your religion excludes Christ and invites to its altars the Jew, the Mohammedan and the pagan." (This was denied but a short reference to Masonic authorities settled it.)

"But you want to cut our throats. Your hearts are full of murder and you would kill us all if you could."

"O no, my friend! We have nothing but kindness in our hearts. We feel for you as we do for the poor drunkard, and just as we would lift him from the gutter and try to save him so would we try to save you from the lodge."

"But we Masons want none of your help."

"That is the saddest fact of all."

Correspondence.

Mrs. DeGeer in Floyd Co., Iowa.

Ulster, Iowa, Mar. 28, 1877.

It is really gratifying to the friends of this reform to see, as your readers are permitted, the advance constantly made; to me it is specially so. As I look upon the past the question occurs, "Have I done my part in this work; am I doing it, or what I can?" I have been a constant reader of the paper from the first issue; did obtain a few subscribers off away from home and one for six months in our own township, but the friends of secrecy made him feel too poor, by making the work unpopular, and I failed to secure a renewal. I am not aware of any flinching from duty in private or public conversation on this subject with preachers, laymen or officials, civil or ecclesiastic, and when led of the Spirit in ministrations at God's altars, have gladly done service. Yet I feel to be an unprofitable servant; have not had a zeal according to knowledge. I feel like consecrating afresh and doubling my diligence; do what I can in scattering the anti-secret literature and secure subscribers for the paper. Much can be done if effort is put forth. We shall reap in due season if we faint not. Bro. Wheeler's "Shall we secede?" in last week's issue, was refreshing. Stay where you are, brother, as long as you can put in such telling truths for the Lord Jesus. But the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light; reformers sometimes need reforming. "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning."

A female evangelist from your city, if I am correctly informed, by the name of DeGeer, engaged in the temperance reform, has been lecturing and organizing temperance orders in this county,—secret where the people preferred it, or would submit to it. I apprehend the latter the nearest right for this reason: In her first lecture at Rockford it was announced in behalf of Masonry. Was not able to be there and hear for myself, but was told by the M. E. preacher that she made secrets needful, could not do without them; for, said she, a woman cannot have the choice of her own husband; the object of her choice does not propose, but another does, and from motives of policy she accepts; from prudential motives she is obliged to keep this as a secret in her own breast, that her husband was not the man of her choice. Here is a moral I would like to dwell upon, but forbear. In her lectures she was very thorough, bearing with severity upon the use of the weed, and inserted in the pledge a provisional clause to refrain from its use for as many to sign as would. She also preached the gospel on Sabbaths as opportunity was given. The pastors at Rockford were more obliging to her and her gatherings than the Free Methodist preacher and his flock complained of in last week's Cynosure by the Michigan State agent in our reform, when Bro. Rathbun came around. The meetings here must stop no matter about souls burdened for sin, groaning for deliverance; it would have been discourtesy for a religious meeting to be held in the village when Mrs. DeGeer was there operating in the interests of secrecy! I know nothing of this Michigan affair, nor the parties concerned; should be glad to know your correspondent had not put any coloring on the matter, and sorry to know that our Free Methodist brethren had intentionally left the neighborhood to get rid of the lecture. It does not follow that a man who accommodates his neighbors with a grindstone should furnish a hand to turn, but it does seem that the pastor and flock was holding meeting some three miles distant; I think most likely the meeting had been in progress with much of interest, and they conceived it their duty to attend to matters of greatest moment; this is possible. But Mr. Hoit and a Mrs. Gundry were there through whose influence the house had been secured. But Mrs. Grundy felt terribly, she seemed to think their house was about to be desecrated by the lecture; I can hardly think it, for she had been influential in securing the house—I fancy she saw it was desecrated by the fumes of tobacco smoke or spittle on the floor and it is more than likely that B. F. Roberts had instructed them to keep everything of a desecrating character out of it, for it is well known by all who are acquainted with him that he is an uncompromising opponent of Masonry and an active participant in the work of this reform. If I am wrong in respect to the cause of Mrs. Grundy's fears, I am willing and expect to be righted, but I have known and witnessed great zeal manifested in our reform by would be reformers who ought to reform themselves in this particular, and I know Free Methodist preachers who decline taking part in such gatherings for this very reason.

Respectfully yours for the whole work. John Ball.

Brooklyn well Supplied.

Green Point, N. Y., Mar. 21, 1877.

Editor Cynosure:—I find upon talking with church members here that there are more opposed to secret societies than I was aware of. They have got the right idea that the church is society enough. In my last I wrote that this is a hot-bed of secret societies. I wish to know if any of your readers can show more lodges than we. Green Point is one ward of Brooklyn. It contains no less than fifteen lodges! I would also like to ask the writer of the article about jumping on the spikes in the K. of P. if it was his bravery inspired him with confidence or had he india rubber shoes on, and if the password, second degree, graces the archives of the lodge in his own hand writing. I am saving all the Cynosures to distribute round among the friends. Remember me to friend Hodge. With best wishes for your success, I remain, yours truly,

Geo. H. Stiles.

Another Comes Out.

Green Hill, Ind., Mar. 31, 1877.

Dear Cynosure:—Having learned that a friend of mine, the Rev. Henry Johns, of Upper Wabash Conference, United Brethren church, who held a demit from the Masonic lodge of Lexington, Illinois, had renounced that and all other secret orders, I wrote to him about the matter, and received a letter, some extracts from which I give for publication, in the hope that they may do good: W. N. Coffman.

"Perrysville, Ind., Mar. 23, 1877.

"It is a pleasure to me to answer the question you ask me in your letter.

"My demit is dated March 16, 1874, and is signed by the Secretary in behalf of the Master, Wardens and brethren of Lexington (Illinois) Lodge, No. 482 A. F. and A. M. I took my demit because I loved the church better than the lodge, and because no man can be a practical Mason and not become formal in religion. I was made a Mason in the spring of 1868, in Lexington, Illinois. I took three degrees, and have assisted in initiating, passing, knocking down and raising Hiram Abiff a great many times; or, Masonically speaking, I have helped to make many a Mason. I renounced Masonry because nearly every locality can furnish instances in which the wheels of justice have been clogged, and some of the worst of criminals have gone free, because of their connection with Masonry. Again, I renounced it because it denies the Lord Jesus Christ, and will not allow his name used in any lodge where there are Jews. In fact it is unmasonic to use Christ's name at any time in the lodge, as men of all religious beliefs are admitted to membership, and it would be offensive to many to use it.

My advice to all is, Stay out of all secret societies, as they can do no one any good, and those who join them lose money and time and are in danger of losing their souls. And why pay twenty-five dollars to learn the secrets of Masonry when they can be had for fifty cents. Buy Ronayne's Hand Book of Freemasonry and you have the three first degrees perfect, as I have examined it and find it correct.

So, then, take the advice of a friend, and one who, in Masonry, has seen the elephant to his sorrow; as it robbed him of years of enjoyment in religion and usefulness in the ministry."

Referring to the U. B. church he says:

"As a church I hope we may keep our Discipline as it is on the secrecy question, and that our delegates will stand united on that question in the General Conference next May. I have had a hard struggle, but have got the victory at last, thank God; and should lectures against secrecy be desired, I am ready to go anywhere, on condition that my expenses be met by those getting my labors. Yours in Christ,

Henry Johns."

The Lesson of the Noon-day Prayer-meetings in Chicago.

One of the most remarkable incidents of the Moody meetings, and also of the noon-day prayer-meetings, is the large number of testimonies that are given of perfect deliverance from the bondage of sin.

Men who have been sunken in the lowest moral degradation, the worst class of drunkards and gamblers and the most confirmed tobacco users, have not only been "washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb," but are kept by Divine grace in the hour of temptation.

Some, indeed, say that the appetite for strong drink and tobacco was taken away in answer to prayer, and others that while it remained its power is entirely broken, and what they were perfectly powerless to do of themselves, they now find to be easy and delightful in the strength of the Lord. There is no reason to believe that these are exceptional cases, persons of unusual strength of resolution; but rather that they are ordinary sinners, saved by grace, and that what has been done for them the Lord is able and willing to do for all.

Now the lesson is this, if God is able to save these poor slaves of appetite, is he not equally able to save us from all sin? Can he not save us from pride, self-will, impatience and unbelief, as truly as from drunkenness and debauchery? May not average church members go to Christ with as much assurance as drunkards and harlots? and will he not save to the uttermost all that come unto him?

In view of the blessed promises of God and of what he has done and is doing, shall we not adopt the language of the apostle, 2 Cor. 7: 1: "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord."

Sick of his Folly.

Editor Cynosure:—Not long since I sent you a notice of a K. of P. who had no further use for his "fustian and feathers." I now send you the "grand hailing sign of distress" raised by a Cincinnati Odd-fellow who wishes to banish from his presence the evidence of his folly. He advertises in a recent number of the Enquirer thus:

For Sale.—Uniform—I. O. O. F. Encampment, complete; never worn; will sell cheap. Address H., this office.

Surely the sober second thought is coming on apace, and the leaven of regeneration is working by slow but sure degrees within the breasts of the secret burdened American public. May the light dawn soon, and all the idols be broken in the temples of Baal. J. H. H. W.

The Necessity of Expelling Masonry from our Courts.

The following extracts were taken from letters sent to J. H. H. Woodward of Cincinnati and copied out by him for publication. The book referred to is his work on Masonry in the Court-house:

Gen. J. W. Phelps of Brattleboro, Vt., writes: "To day I have received a copy of your pamphlet, and may safely address to you my thanks for it, though it may possibly have come from other hands. My thanks are due for your manly testimony ably and tellingly given against one of the vilest as well as one of the most powerful institutions that has ever disgraced the human race. Considering the relative conditions of the two states of society in which the Inquisition and Freemasonry have existed, perhaps Freemasonry is the most discreditable. Both have made use of religion, and in such a cynical way as devils might do, as the best means of cajoling, intimidating and defrauding honest men. Freemasony is a far more dangerous attack upon Republican government than slavery ever was. It is a scrofulous disease inherited from our mother England, and, if not cured in time, will carry us off."

Philester Lee of Lebanon, Oregon, writes: "I have disposed of your pamphlets. I sold and also gave away to those that had not the money with which to pay. I take great pleasure in exposing the works of darkness. I wish Ronayne could come to this coast, and exhibit the three degrees of Masonry. That, I think, would make sale of all kinds of Anti-masonic books. May that great, good and all-seeing Eye watch over and prosper this blessed work of reform. My whole soul is in this work. A burnt child dreads the fire. I lived in Morgan times. I am now sixty-seven years old. My health is very poor, but with a trembling hand I wish to do what good I can."

Rev. G. C. Vincent of Brookville, Pennsylvania, writes: "I have received your pamphlet, including note, etc. I am truly glad the Anti-masonic cause is assuming proportions which promise important results. There are many Anti-masons who, through diffidence and through dread and still more through indolence and indifference, do not speak out. To raise a wholesome sentiment will cost much in money and talent well applied, and still more in endurance of persecution."

Lorenzo D. Brown of Montmorenci, Indiana, writes: "I got one of your pamphlets of a bookseller in LaFayette, Ind., and must say I appreciate its contents and its condensed and systematic arrangement. I am praying God for the speedy and everlasting overthrow of Freemasony and kindred evils, and working and talking as I pray. I am a farmer but would like to scatter knowledge on this chief of evils now afflicting our land and world."

Thomas R. McConnell of Princeton, Iowa, alluding to the pamphlet, says: "I am sorry I did not have something of that kind in the war to defeat Masonic promotions. I served three years and now I will do what I can to expose the thing."

A lawyer and adhering Mason, who resides in Kentucky, but whose name and residence I am not permitted to disclose, thus writes: "You know of what you write, and tell the truth. You are like the forlorn hope in the breach—the first to leap in and throttle the enemy. You may succeed, or you may fail, or fall in the onslaught. But wha you aim at is right; what you say is true. * * I am sure that it is false and criminal in its dealings with the nation and individuals. There are many who will tell you 'God speed,' but who would not dare to speak out themselves. You are capable of inaugurating and carrying out actions that may do great good to an oppressed people, in time."

Michael Arter, Sr., of Crestline, Ohio, writes: "I handed that package of circulars out that you sent me, and I got fearful looks when I gave one to a Mason. The Masons have lied me out of between three and four thousand dollars. You may think I cannot like them very well. I heard two Masons swear a lie, just as much so as if I say I am acquainted with you."

J. B. Nessell of Ellington, New York, writes: "I am right glad to find you are full in the work of ferreting out and exposing the scoundrelism of the old harlot—Freemasonry. I must have one of your pamphlets immediately. My wife has a suit in the county court that sits next week. The woman that has sued her has a son that flaunts the emblems of the mystic order, and we have good reasons to believe that the same has had an effect in the court below which went against us, and we fear that the same game will be repeated in the court above, if they are not headed off in some way."

Philip T. Melton of Bertram, Iowa, writes: "Send me your pamphlet on Masonry, as I wish to learn all I can before court, having a suit pending in which if I am beaten, it will be through the accursed institution of Freemasonry."

J. P. R. James of Read's Landing, Minnesota, writes: "I have about $3,000 due me from different parties, and thanks be to Masonry I cannot get a dollar of it. May the curse of God be ever on the lying, thieving, murdering institution of soul slavery. Not the men but the institution."

Rev. A. H. Springstein of Pontiac, Michigan, writes: "You ask if I was a Mason. I took three degrees. I have exposed the vile thing fully, both with my tongue and pen, and continue to do so and ever shall, the Lord helping me. I have suffered immensely by the position I have taken, but I do not regret it—nay, I rejoice in it."

David Stewart of Corinna, Maine, writes: "I am not a Mason, and never have been, but have seen and felt something of its baneful influence in our country, and am ready to lend my influence to expose and correct its tendencies."

George Eley of Juda, Wisconsin, writes: "I feel to rejoice that 'Masonic scoundrelism' is being brought to light. I fully agree with you in the sentiment that Masonry is destined to be tried legally, politically and religiously, and when thus tried, it will be found wanting. May God speed the time when Masonry will have no place in the land!"

William Steel of Portland, Oregon, writes: "I am an old man and was an Anti-mason in the days of the Morgan excitement, and have never seen anything since to change my sentiments but much to strengthen them. This place is full of Masonry and kindred societies, all of which I would like to see destroyed."

James Andruss of Amboy, Illinois, writes: "I was once fool enough to take three degrees in Masonry, but when I found Masonry killed Morgan, I thought it time to quit such a society. I now think it an institution doing more for the destruction of our liberties than all others, and hope to see it come to an end in a short time, but perhaps I shall not live to see it, being eighty-three and a half years old."

Samuel D Greene of Chelsea, Massachusetts, writes: "This evil institution, with all its degrading ceremonies; its unlawful and anti-Christian principles, must be overthrown in our country, or the Republican institutions and the high moral culture introduced by our Purilan forefathers will greatly suffer."

Edmund Tuttle of West Meridan, Connecticut, writes: "I have had a strong abhorrence of Masonry ever since the murder of Morgan by the Masons."

LESSON XVI.—APRIL 22, 1877.—GEHAZI THE LEPER.

SCRIPTURE.—2 Kings v. 20-27 Commit 25-27. Primary Verse, 27.

20. But Gehazi, the servant of Elisha the man of God, said, Behold, my master hath spared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought: but, as the Lord liveth, I will run after him, and take somewhat of him.

21. So Gehazi followed after Naaman. And when Naaman saw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and said, Is all well?

22. And he said, All is well. My master hath sent me, saying, Behold, even now there be come to me from Mount Ephraim two young men of the sons of the prophets: give them, I pray thee, a talent of silver, and two changes of garments.

23. And Naaman said, Be content, take two talents. And he urged him, and bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments, and laid them upon two of his servants; and they bare them before him.

24. And when he came to the tower, he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house: and he let the men go, and they departed.

25. But he went in, and stood before his master. And Elisha said unto him, Whence comest thou, Gehazi? And he said, Thy servant went no whither.

26. And he said unto him, Went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and oliveyards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and menservants and maidservants?

27. The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed forever. And he went out from his presence a leper as white as snow.

LESSONS.

1st. In dealing with others we are to be governed, not by what they may be able to give, but by what we have a right to ask. How much of private fraud originates in a disregard of this principle! How much of political "jobbery" is inspired by the thought that there are no limits to the resources of the public treasury!

2d. What the master has refused the servant has no right in his name to seek to obtain. This has a twofold spiritual application. It applies to Rome's indulgences on the one hand, to the legalist's modifications of the simple gospel offer on the other.

3d. The love of money is a (not the) root of all evil. 1 Tim. 6: 10. It led Gehazi first to fraud, and afterwards to lying. Let us beware.

4th. The commission of one sin paves the way for the commission of another.

5th. A seeking for secrecy is ordinarily a virtual confessing of iniquity. Comp. John 3: 20. Why, then, should societies organized for benevolent purposes shroud themselves in inviolable secrecy?

6th. Sin cannot be successfully concealed.

7th. Worldly possessions and pleasures may be secured at too great a cost.

8th. "He that maketh haste to be rich shall not be innocent." Prov. 28: 20.

9th. The conduct of parents affects their children.

10th. Ecclesiastical position not a certain proof of personal piety. Let us as teachers lay this lesson to our hearts.—Evangelical Repository.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 1877.

The Deceivableness of Unrighteousness.

We print, at large, in another column a sketch of Sylvan Lodge, Moravia, New York, written by an Episcopal clergyman. We tried to condense it but could see no part to omit. The cool, impudent, unblushing falsehoods, uttered and insinuated, which make up the staple of the "history," will strike every one who has the least information on the subject. And yet this piece of depravity and unutterable wickedness and deception was written by an Episcopal clergyman and published by a Congregational preacher who edits the paper from which this scrap of "history" is clipped. Every thoughtful man should read and ponder on it. Note:

1. That in 1825 Sylvan Lodge could only buy half a Bible, but could celebrate St. John's day and foot the bills.

2. This Sylvan Lodge, shielded by an Episcopal church, was the only one in all western New York, which did not "shut down," but defied both people and legislature, church and state, God and man.

3. Note, too, the cool laudation of Masonic saints who had outfaced law and justice, patriotism, citizenship, and everything else which plead for the murdered, martyred Morgan; one of which saints had not only communicated in "St. Matthew's church," but had also drunk the wine of the devil's communion from a human skull, and became a "Sir Knight Templar."

4. Mark, above all, how this reverend vilifier of good men, treats such New York politicians as Wm. H. Seward, Francis Granger, Millard Fillmore, Seth M. Gates, and the great-souled Gerrit Smith. If those men and their companions were the worthless creatures he represents them, who were New York's noblemen? And if New York Antimasons were such contemptible creatures, why did fifteen hundred lodges go down before them?

A Suggestion to Teachers.

We do not care to make the following quotation a text for a sermon, but will beg leave to suggest a few practical hints which naturally are drawn from it. Says Carlyle, in his essay on "Model Prisons:"

. If I had a commonwealth to reform or govern, certainly it should not be the devil's regiments of the line that I would first of all concentrate my attention on! Fill your threshing-floor with docks, ragweeds, mugworths, and ply your flail upon them—that is not the method to obtain sacks of wheat. What sort of reformers and workers are you, that work only on the rotten material, that never think of meddling with the material while it continues sound; that stress it and strain it with new rates and assessments, till once it has given way and declared itself rotten; whereupon you snatch greedily at it, and say, "Now let us try to do some good upon it." You mistake in every way, my friends. Yonder are continents of dingy, poor, and dirty dwellings, where the unfortunate, not yet quite declared for the devil, are struggling manifoldly—in their workshops, in their close cellars, hungry garrets, and poor, dark trade-shops, with red herrings and tobacco pipes crossed in the window—to keep the Evil One out of doors, and not enlist with him. There, I say, is land: here is mere seabeach. Thither go with your benevolence, thither to those dingy caverns of the poor; and there instruct and drill and manage, there where some fruit may come from it.

These ideas of reform applied to the criminal classes, a vast proportion of the working class in the churches are acting upon in the Sabbath schools—to save from its baleful and disastrous touch those young minds upon whom sin has not yet fastened its fangs. It is not thought improper in these schools to introduce such reform topics as are popular. Instruction and warning against the use of intoxicating liquor, tobacco, the violation of the Commandments, etc., are here used most properly, while character and habits are in the formative process and those downward steps in sin are untaken that cast out the young man or woman from reputable society. An opportunity is given every teacher of young minds to impress the main principles of our reform by the limitations of age and experience demanded by the lodge. Before that age arrives when a young man is exposed to the blandishments of secretism, and its "runners" ply him with their sophistry, his mind may be made a Gibraltar to their direct assaults, and to their enchantments be like shrewd Ulysses passing the siren-haunted strand. We hold it to be one of the responsibilities of a faithful instructor, whether in pulpit, or in Sabbath or day school, to fortify the young mind with those principles of action which render it brave, frank, honest and true. With such the stultifying processes of the lodge find no agreement. The Sabbath-school teacher or superintendent will find in nearly every lesson an opportunity to impress Scripture truth in opposition to lodge falsehood. In the public school there may be more difficulty in a direct application, but with young minds first impressed with a simple love of truth it is only necessary to point out ways of investigation. We know of one teacher who introduced the matter simply as one of research, as his pupils might be led in the analysis of a flower or the description of a specimen in natural history. There is no danger that the result will be harmful if conducted honestly.

These thoughts are hints which teachers may use as their circumstances allow, and they are only given for the benefit of those who propose to exalt their profession and be faithful to their pupils.

An Uncertain Sound from the Evangelist Hammond.

It has been intimated in these columns that Mr. E. P. Hammond was compromising the "glorious gospel" of the Lord Jesus Christ in his allusions to the pagan system of Freemasonry. The Wesleyan, of Syracuse, where Mr. Hammond is now laboring with apparent success, thinks his remarks about the lodge mark him as a Freemason, and we rejoice at the ability with which Bro. Stratton brings before the evangelist, and all who may hear and be misled by his teaching, sound logic and good doctrine on the lodge question. With such an exposition as the Wesleyan has printed the last two weeks before him, if Mr. Hammond can continue to hold up the cross of Jesus Christ and whisper softly and sweetly to the lodge, he is such a man whose voice should not be heard except in tones of deepest penitence.

That our readers may judge of the justice of this, we present herewith a portion of a discourse by Mr. Hammond, reported in the Terre Haute Daily Express of Feb. 20, 1877. We trust the speaker will see the inconsistency of his course when better informed of the nature and principles of Freemasonry, and may preach a whole, untarnished gospel against this and all other popular sins.

The following is from the report of the meeting in the opera house, Terre Haute, Ind., Monday evening, Feb. 19th:

Mr. Hammond said he believed Masonry to be a good thing. It might be abused as all other things were abused. The government of a state or a city might be abused. A Mason had sent for him a few hours ago, and when he visited him he found him behind a bar. Do the Masonic lodges exercise a proper discipline? Should a Mason be permitted to keep a drinking saloon? Too many of that order make Masonry their God, and are satisfied with its teachings. You can do nothing to please God unless you come to him believing in Christ as the keystone of that arch. The speaker related a story of two little boys who were in the habit of playing truant from school. Their father told them that he would whip them if they were ever guilty of the act again. On the very next day they induced another boy to accompany them, and instead of going to school started for a grand excursion to the woods. When they were about three miles from home, the boy who had accompanied them fell from a tree and broke a leg. He was unable to walk home, so his two little companions were compelled to carry him. When they arrived at home they told their father what had happened and begged that they might be spared a whipping, in consideration of the fact that they had been so kind to their injured companion, and were nearly exhausted with fatigue. The plea did not save them, they had broken an express command and were punished for it. Just so with the sinner. You can do nothing to please God in your rebellion. Nothing is acceptable to him except through Jesus Christ. The speaker had visited the great cavern under the city of Jerusalem, and had seen the chips of stone left by workmen who wrought Solomon's Temple. He had stood under the great arch and gazed upon the keystone, a miniature representation of which adorns the watch chains of so many Masons. Christ is the keystone of the great arch through which you must enter heaven, and unless you accept him you cannot hope to be saved.

—In response to an inquiry for the password of the grange for this year, a friend writes that it is "Fraternity." —In connection with the article on the execution of Lee, the Mountain Meadow leader, is is reported that papers have been found that actually implicate Brigham Young in that horrid butchery, proving him to have been the responsible party.

—Friends have asked how Washington's letters to Rev. Mr. Snyder could be reconciled with the claims of Freemasonry in respect to his great love and zeal for the order. Friend Perry, of Connecticut, replies briefly in this number. The fact is, there can be no reconciliation. The lodge puts up its claims in the face of Washington's letter, at the same time exalting his character as their "perfect ashlar" and a truthful man!

—At the township election in Hadley, Mich., on Monday of last week, an American party ticket was nominated and received eighteen votes in spite of threats and sneers. This is about three times the vote of last fall, so the reformers of that part of LaPeer county are encouraged.

—Statistics given at the second annual session of the Grand Lodge of "Knights of Honor," held last week in Boston, show that this order was introduced in Boston in July, 1875, and there are now 56 lodges with a membership of 2,500. There are in the country about 550 lodges in 28 States, with a membership of over 16,000. By the payment of $1.00 per month each member secures the payment of $2,000 to his family at death. These payments are made, in part at least, from assessments on the individual members. This kind of insurance company, with its mask of thundering names, as Grand Dictator, Supreme Lodge, etc., is not likely to be any more secure than any of the score or two that have failed in the last few years.

—The Mayor of the city of Albion, Iowa, called on us a few days ago. We congratulate the people of that city on having secured so fine a looking Mayor. His face is a recommendation to him. It shows energy, intelligence, good judgment and integrity. We especially congratulate the people on the fact that he was elevated on an honest American party ticket.

—S. S. Jones, the Spiritualist publisher lately shot in his office in this city, was a Freemason and an Odd-fellow, and his funeral was attended by deputations from both societies. The exercises were conducted chiefly by a female Spiritualist, Mrs. Richmond, who spoke as the "controlling spirit" directed.

—The paper left by this man Jones will continue under his son-in-law, a Freemason, to advocate what they please to term "The Philosophy of Life," a theory which Jones ardently advocated but which seems not to have any very considerable following. His idea was that all religions all social systems were subordinate and working toward a certain ideal development of man, which was his "Philosophy of Life" —a very Masonic sort of a theory, which may have lacked only the Masonic embodiment of oaths and grips to have been a rival of the lodge.

—The Masonry taught by this Spiritualist organ is, moreover, of the rankest kind. No character is too reverent or occasion too hallowed to prevent their pasting upon it the foul label of secretism. Witness the following from the Religio-Philosophical Journal, Mar. 31st:

SECRET ORDERS.—"What had Christ to do with secret orders?—Mrs. Richmond's Lecture on Freemasonry, Feb. 11th.

Very much indeed. Do not his brethren testify? Witness the three degrees of his fraternity, only the members of the third being enlightened to perceive the mystery of bringing back the departing spirit, and their future work, as drawn out before them only by the grand lodge upon the mount. Witness, too, his recognition, when on trial by Pilate and the sudden and permanent change of the latter's purpose. And last, but not least, read the testimony of another advanced initiate, "Called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedec, of whom we have many things to say, hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing." "The lapse of time, the ruthless hand of ignorance and the devastations of war have laid waste and destroyed many valuable monuments of antiquity," shattered the form and perverted the meaning of many an ancient record. But as the gem in the dust is still a gem to the practiced eye, so shine for us still the beautiful lights of ancient Masonry and the discordant sayings of a discarded sect.—F. M. A.

—Friend Lathrop, of California, is still publishing in the San Benito Advance. His articles are clear and forcible representations of truth against the falsehood of Masonry and cannot fail to have a good effect upon candid men whether connected with the order or no. If our local press could be everywhere thus used lodges would be as rare as American statesmen.

—The many friends of Elder Barlow will be alarmed to learn that his physician has lately informed him that his useful life might be brought to a close at any time through disease of the heart. Yet it may please God to withhold the blow for many years, as in the case of the celebrated Harriet Martineau. Let prayer be made for him.

REFORM NEWS.

[Concluded from 5th page.]

"But you are trying to tear down Masonry and you will never accomplish it."

"That is just what you said about slavery."

"Don't compare Masonry to slavery. They are not alike."

"Not exactly alike. The one put chains on the limbs of the slave, the other puts fetters on your soul."

"But I have an oath and I am going to keep it."

"Well, then; if you had been one of the party who swore to kill Paul you would either have killed him or starved to death."

"But I never did swear to kill a man."

"Perhaps not; but you did swear under penalty of having your throat cut, your breast torn open, etc., and in pretending that this is not so you charge Chas. G. Finney and other good men with lying."

"Oh! poor Finney! He did pretty well till he wrote that book in his dotage. It was the great mistake of his life."

"Do you deny his statements."

"No."

"Then they are true."

"You profess to be a minister of the Gospel. You come here and fill your mouth with billingsgate and slander and desecrate the Sabbath and the house of God by abusing the Masons."

"My friend this is not true. You would not say it if you had heard me. I spoke in the name of Christ, and I abused nobody."

"But we want to get up a revival of religion and you fanatics are in the way."

"No, we are not in the way. It is you who hinder a revival. So long as you adhere to and defend your profane obligations, you cannot expect a revival. Go first of all to the anxious seat and there humbly confess your sins to God and to his people, and then we can work together for Christ. Repent of your seven degrees of Masonry and may the Lord have mercy on your soul."

Such is the substance of an hour's talk before a mixed crowd. May the Lord use it to honor his holy name. Yours for Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

—Past Master Ronayne reports from Union City three promising meetings last week, the hall being crowded night after night. "Much good," he says, has been accomplished and many friends strengthened to be more bold in their opposition while hosts of men and women in this vicinity have now a clearer idea of this system and hence look upon it with aversion and disgust."

God is the only being who has time enough, but a prudent man who knows how to seize occasion, can commonly make shift to find as much as he needs.

Religious Intelligence.

—The revival work in Boston has assumed a very practical form. A large number of auxiliary prayer-meetings have been established and nearly every branch of business has its meeting—the dry goods dealers, grocers, marketmen, fish and furniture dealers and others, all have their gathering. The "press" prayer-meeting was opened on the 2d and is of especial interest. Arrangements have been made for a religious family visitation of the whole city.

—Besides the religious interest among the churches, Mr. Murphy's temperance revival is in progress with great power and marvelous results in Philadelphia. His work is in connection with the churches. During the two weeks he has been in the city he has received 2,300 signatures to the pledge.

—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America will meet on Thursday, May 17th, at 11 o'clock A. M. in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Ill., and be opened with a sermon by the Rev. Henry Van Dyke, D. D., the Moderator of the last Assembly.

—Rev. Wm. A. Muhlenberg died at St. Luke's Hospital in New York, Sabbath evening. He was widely known as a prominent clergyman of the Episcopal church and for his benevolence. He was the author of many well-known hymns, among them, "I would not live alway," "Shout the glad tidings," "Exultingly sing," and "Like Noah's weary dove."

"The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the Churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Home Circle.

The Springing Life.

Now fades the last long streak of snow,
Now bourgeons every maze of quick
About the flowering squares, and thick
By ashen roots the violets blow.

Now rings the woodland loud and long,
The distance takes a lovelier hue,
And drowned in yonder living blue
The lark becomes a sightless song.

Now dance the lights on lawn and lea,
The flocks are whiter down the vale,
And milkier every milky sail
On winding stream or distant sea.

Where now the sea mew pipes, or dives
In yonder greening gleam, and fly
The happy birds, that change their sky
To build and brood; that live their lives

From land to land; and in my breast
Spring wakens, too; and my regret
Becomes an April violet,
And buds and blossoms like the rest.

—Alfred Tennyson.

Consecration must be Followed by Faith.

Entire consecration has sometimes been represented to be the same thing as entire sanctification; but this is a mistake.

A soul may entirely consecrate itself, and do it repeatedly, without entering into the rest of faith, or the sanctified state. This is a matter of fact which can be established by the testimony of many witnesses.

I was clearly converted in the year 1830. After a sweet experience of a few months, I wandered gradually into a cold, dissatisfied, backslidden state, where I remained for seven or eight years, often making spasmodic efforts to get back again to Christ, but always sinking down with discouragement and failure. At length, through trials, God brought me back to himself. He gave me a spirit of prayer; and one day, ever memorable, he gave me such an ecstatic vision of the presence and glory of Jesus, as filled me with unutterable blessedness for about seven days. I then had fierce and fearful assaults of the adversary, under the pressure of which I looked away from Jesus, became fearful and doubting, and lost my blessedness. But the savor of it remained. I sought the Lord earnestly. Through the summer and into the fall, I had frequent days of fasting and prayer. One day, never to be forgotten, and memorable for its marked influence on my future life, I went into my study and prostrated myself on my face before God. When I began to pray I had no anticipation of what was to follow. But the Spirit of God led me on. For hours my inner being and my whole previous life was searched as with a lighted candle. My sins from childhood came up in review, so that I saw and abhorred myself. God graciously helped me, and with many a struggle I put my sins away—all of them—and vowed to God that I would make confession and restitution in a number of cases where it appeared to me those duties were required. It humbled me in the dust to look some of these things in the face and say, "I will confess that," and "I will restore that." I tried to avoid some of them, but it was of no use. I could not get along till I fully and clearly met every case with a solemn pledge to God that I would do as he required. Then I asked of the Lord: "Is there any thing else?" He showed me something. It was deeply humbling; but I said, "I will do it."

Again I asked: "Is there anything more between my soul and God?" Another thing came up in my mind. I tried not to see it, but I could not pray till I met it squarely, and promised God that I would do it. I promised the Lord that henceforth I would do every duty, be faithful to everybody in public and private, and bear all that he might be pleased to put upon me. I sought earnestly and diligently to know if I kept back anything. I rested in the conviction that all was given up. I had a deep, deep consciousness that so far as my own act was concerned, I was wholly devoted to God. I had been led thus far, and this was all I knew. I wanted acceptance with God. But I did not know that there was a definite promise in the Bible that God would accept of me when I gave myself wholly to him. I knew I had consecrated myself to him, but I did not know the way of faith. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Not having the knowledge of the promise, of course I could have no faith in it.

But there was another difficulty—I did not understand the nature of faith. I knew I had had faith about the things of God, for I was a Christian and had enjoyed religion; but I did not understand how to have faith in a definite promise. Yet my consecration was entire. I knew it was entire. I had the consciousness, sure and deep, that I did give up all things, known and unknown, to God, and the spirit of God witnessed with much assurance that it was so. After that, I had much precious experience, but it was unsteady. I did not know the rest of faith as a continuous experience. At times, and sometimes very frequently, and perhaps I ought to say with some little continuity, I knew that I was in Christ as a present experience. But I did not understand what it was to abide in him.

For nearly two years I lived in that way. I had no permanent rest. I labored earnestly and successfully. But my soul longed for what it did not understand nor possess. I read Mr. Finney's lectures on sanctification, and with increasing clearness saw that this was the blessing my soul had long sought, ignorantly groping in the obscurity for want of knowledge—and now I must have it. But the months rolled on, and I remained about where I was. At length I fell in with some of God's children who had received the blessing, and who gave their testimony in plain and direct terms. The main thing that interested me was, they told how they gave themselves up to God; then how they believed his word of promise; then how they waited believing, holding fast to the promise, "reckoning themselves dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord," just because his promise authorized them to; then they came into the rest of faith and the blessedness of a holy life.

Oh! how clearly I saw that when one consecrated himself to God, and doubted whether God received him, he was guilty of the sin which John calls "making God a liar." I saw the way, my duty, my privilege. With two dear brethren, both of whom are now in heaven, I kneeled down, and, in simple words, renewed my entire consecration to God. Thank God, I did not stop there, as I had ignorantly done before. I told the Lord that now I believed he received me, because I read of the promise in his word, and I would no more make him a liar by unbelief, and that I would continue to believe HIS WORD ALONE, even if I did not have any witness in my soul for a week or a month.

The great transaction was done. I had now fulfilled both conditions. I had consecrated myself, and I believed. Two years ago I had tried consecration thoroughly, and had proved that sanctification was not found by consecration. Now I had tried FAITH and I found that SANCTIFICATION IS BY FAITH. Consecration is a necessary preparation for faith, and faith cannot be exercised without that preparation. But they are two different things. The consecration may be, and MUST BE ENITRE AND COMPLETE, before we can believe that it is received by God. It is a contradiction in terms to say that the consecration, while incomplete, includes the faith that the offering is accepted. That would be the same as to say that God will accept an offering before it is offered. It would be requiring us to believe more than is promised.

For years past I have found many persons laboring under the same difficulties I had so long struggled with myself. They longed for sanctification and often consecrated themselves to God, but found no deliverance. After examining into their case and finding that they had no hesitancy in making entire consecration, I have explained to them the nature of faith, presented the promise of God's word and encouraged them to believe it. Sometimes very promptly, but usually with more or less hesitation, they have trusted in God's promise. Sometimes there has been an immediate manifestation of the Spirit, producing great joy in their souls. More commonly they have had their faith tried for a little while, perhaps a few days, and have been obliged to hold on to Christ as they received him, by faith alone without any marked or perceived manifestation of the Spirit. When people make entire consecration of themselves to God, they do not by so doing fulfil all the conditions required for sanctification so as to become immediately sanctified.—Selected.

The God of the Mormons and his Priesthood.

The power of Brigham Young, the head of this system, has been and is to-day absolute over eighty thousand souls. We fear that we shall hardly be credited when we say that he claims not only to be a "prophet, revelator and seer," but one of the subordinate deities, of which the Mormons believe there are many. Said Heber C. Kimball, one of his twelve apostles, "Brigham Young is God—the God of his people, and the only God with whom you will ever have to do;" and the poor, ignorant and superstitious people that have been gathered from the lowest grades of humanity believe it. The Mormon priesthood, composed of his subordinates and tools, extends down through the "twelve," the "seventies," the "bishops," "elders," "deacons," and "teachers," which last have the supervision each of a few families, and whose authority and power in their respective stations, subject only to Brigham, is absolute. Their system of espionage is the most complete ever devised by wicked men; their doctrines the most absurd and ridiculous ever propagated, and their morals fearfully low.

Such an institution, founded upon fraud and seeking only the gratification of lust and avarice, can, as a matter of course, be productive only of enormous evils. Polygamy, bad as it is, is only one of the many and — strange as it may seem—not the worst. The marriage of one man to grandmother, mother and daughter has occurred—the marriage of brother to half-sister has been frequent, and the marriage of brother and sister advocated. Lying, deception, theft and murder may become imperative duties if the interests of the church can be thereby served; while profanity, Sabbath-breaking and intemperance are as common as in the most degraded portions of your large cities east.

The tithing system has robbed the people and kept them poor; the antagonism of Brigham and his priesthood to free schools has kept them ignorant; and their system of family life and government has caused the children to grow up without discipline or culture.

We are not overdrawing this picture. It would be impossible to do so, and we do not need to do so if we were disposed and had the power. And yet, with all this, there are grand openings for the Gospel and the agencies of civilization. The rich mines are drawing to the territory large numbers of "Gentiles," i. e., non-Mormons. The recent attempts of Brigham to perpetrate that gigantic swindle called the "Order of Enoch," has shaken the faith of many sincere Mormons. The better class of his followers begin to realize that this is not the Kingdom of God, and are ready to listen to the few missionaries that are here proclaiming a pure gospel. The higher culture of the "Eastern" people brought here by the railroad impresses the young people, and they begin to utterly refuse to disgrace themselves before the world by entering into polygamy. Especially is there getting to be a great demand for schools. The few schools permitted by the church and sustained by enormous prices of tuition for the benefit of the priesthood, are miserable affairs, and there are thousands of Mormon parents who are sufficiently shaken in their allegiance to the church to patronize "Gentile" schools could they be made available.—New York Witness.

"Cut it Short."

People nowadays must pack all they have got to say in as small a space as possible, or they will fail of having an audience. This is the rule in private as well as in public. Mr. Greville, in his memoirs, tells us about a bishop who rose to speak in the House of Lords, and announced that he should divide what he had to say into twelve parts, when the duke of Wharton interrupted him and begged indulgence for a few minutes, as he had a story to tell which he could only introduce at that moment. A drunken fellow was passing by St. Pauls at night, and heard the clock slowly chime twelve. He counted the strokes, and then looked up to the clock and said, "Why couldn't you give us all that at once?" The story put an end to the bishop's speech.

Voltaire boasted that, with one hand, he would overthrow that edifice of Christianity which required the hands of twelve apostles to build up. His press at Ferney was afterwards employed in printing the Holy Scriptures. The first meeting of a Bible society at Edinburgh was held in the room in which Hume, he infidel, died.

No man ever served God by doing things to-morrow; if we honor Christ and are blest, it is by the things which we do to-day. Whatever you do for Christ throw your whole soul into it.

A Cold Water Boy.

"Why, Neddy, didn't you get the sugar?" asked a lady whose hands were in a pan of flour.

"No, ma, I couldn't," said Ned. "Little Sammy that made the paint out of beet juice, and painted my primer, told me 'don't go in that near store,' 'cause that man sells rum, and beer, and cider, and all sort of drunk things. Sammy is a cold water boy, and so'm I going to be all my life."

"What's a cold water boy?" asked his mamma.

"It's a boy that won't go into a rum store to buy sugar; and won't taste wine, nor cider; and shuts his lips tight—this way—when grandma gives him mince pies with rum in 'em, and pudding with rum in the sauce; and won't touch 'em, fear he'll grow into a drunk man. And cold water boys are sorry for poor Teddy Charry, and give him shoes and clothes, and lend him their balls and marbles, and hide him in their houses when his father is drunk and cross to him."

"Oh, but I want that sugar in such a hurry, Neddy!" said his mother.

"We'll send way off far, to a cold water store, but I don't want to go into a rum grocer, 'cause may be just one drop of rum might get into the sugar barrel, and we might buy it! I'm going to have all my sugar cold water sugar, 'cause I m a cold water boy; and we'll be all cold water folks in this house."

"So we will, dear," said his mother; "and never put wine in our sauce, nor brandy in our pies."—Ex.

Praying and Watching.

A little boy in one of the schools in Edinburgh, who attended a prayer-meeting, said to his teacher:

"Teacher, I wish my sister could be got to read the Bible; she never reads it."

"Why, Johnny, should your sister read the Bible?"

"Because, if she once read it, I am sure it would do her good, and she would be converted and saved."

"Do you think so, Johnny?"

"Yes, I do, sir; and I wish the next time there is a prayer-meeeting you would ask the people to pray for my sister, that she may begin to read the Bible."

"Well, well; it shall be done, John."

So the teacher gave out that a little boy was anxious that prayer should be offered that his sister might read her Bible. John was observed to get up and go out. The teacher thought it very rude of the boy to disturb the people in a crowded room, and so the next day, when the lad came, he said:

"John, I thought it very rude of you to get up in the prayer-meetiug and go out. You ought not to have done so."

"Oh, sir," said the boy, "I did not mean to be rude, but I thought I should like to go home and see my sister reading the Bible for the first time."

Thus we ought to watch with expectation for answers to our prayers. Do not say, "Lord, turn my darkness into light!" and then go out with your candle, as though you expected to find it dark.—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Animal Language.

Some animals live in society, others travel in flocks. In such aggregations there is plainly developed a sort of language adapted for establishing concert of action among the individuals. In building their lodges how could beavers make a regular division of labor, and so perfectly co-ordinate their work, if they were unable to understand one another? The marmot, acting as a sentinel, could not warn its fellows of the approach of danger, if it did not possess the power of giving a signal, the meaning of which they understood.

When swallows are about to migrate some of them appear to be concerned about the performance of their periodical voyage some time before the rest; they flock together and utter their call; they flit hither and thither to summon individuals who, in their folly, take no note of the temperature. Is it not plain that these know how to say, "It is time to be gone?"

But in all probability the language of animals gives expression only to very simple impressions and ideas. But, inasmuch as we do not understand it, we cannot define either its extent or its true character. Some persons have the power of imitating the calls and songs of birds; and birds, in turn, repeat human language, without however, understanding its sense; it is only very rarely that we can recognize in the phrase uttered by the inhabitants of a cage the expression of a desire. Man and dog, close friends though they are, understand one another only by means of a sort of pantomime. Eventually the dog understands some of the words spoken by his master, and the man understands some of the vocal expressions of his trusty friend; and this is the highest result of long association. It appears as though, by a Supreme Will, an insurmountable obstacle had been opposed to all close communication between man and animals.—Popular Science Monthly.

Puzzle Drawer.

Northfield, Summit Co., O., March 26, 1877.

Dear Editor:—I will send a puzzle that if you think worth publishing you will please publish it in your paper.

The answer that Ella and Sophie Young got for the piece of poetry in the paper March 1st is correct. But the other verse I do not know anything about.

My brother and a young gentleman of our school spoke that piece that was in the Cynosure, "A Chat about Freemasonry," from the Glasgow paper, at our school the last day; and therefore caused some Freemasons that were there to make some remarks, telling how good the Freemasons were and so on, condemning the paper.

I am composed of ten letters.
My first is in cold but not in warm.
My second is in leaving but not in gone.
My third is in black but not in white.
My fourth is in ignorance but not in knowledge.
My fifth is in friend but not in enemy.
My sixth is in Sophie but not in Ella.
My seventh is in fresh but not in salt.
My eighth is in furnace but not in stove.
My ninth is in children but not in men.
My tenth is in parent but not in friend.
My whole is a State

Maggie Z. Richey.

Marine City, Mich., Mar., 30, 1877.

Er. Editor:—I submit the following to the young readers of the Cynosure, and I hope there are many of them: Where in the Old Testament is it said that the Lord will make the earth empty, waste, upside down, scatter the inhabitants, utterly broken down, clean dissolved, moved exceedingly, reel to and fro like a drunkard, removed like a cottage, it shall fall and not rise again?

Christ says, 'No man when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel,' etc. But when the Masons have brought a man in the light by a few lamps or candles and a good many oaths, he, the poor blind dupe, must conceal all the light they have given him, or they will cut his throat. I am afraid this is too long to print.

Yours for the True Light,
Emma Wood, aged 15 years.

P. S.—'Ezra A Cook," is the answer to P. E. Poole's puzzle. E. W.

Home and Farm.

The Druggists' Circular tell how lean women may grow fleshy, as follows: A pint of milk taken before retiring at night will cover the scrawniest bones. There are many lean and lank females who sigh for the fashionable measure of plumpness, and who would be vastly improved in health could their figures be rounded with good, solid flesh. In cases of fever and summer complaints milk is now given, with excellent results. The idea that milk is feverish has exploded. It is a great mistake to scrimp the milk-pitcher.

A Massachusetts farmer says: "My cattle will follow me until I leave the lot, and on the way up to the barn-yard in the evening, stop and call for a lock of hay." Smithson says there is nothing at all remarkable about that. He went into a barn-yard in the country one day last week, where he had not the slightest acquaintance with the cattle; an old bull not only followed him until he left the lot, but took the gate off the hinges, and raced with him to the house in the most familiar way possible. Smithson says he has no doubt that the old fellow would have called for something if he had waited a little while, but he didn't want to keep the folks waiting dinner; so he hung one tail of his coat and a piece of his pants on the bull's horns, and went into the house.

House or Fence Whitewash.—The United States Treasury Department has sent out a receipt for whitewashing which is said to answer on wood or brick almost as well as oil paint, and to be much cheaper: Slake half a bushel of unslacked lime with boiling water, keeping it covered during the process. Strain it, and add a peck of salt, dissolved in warm water; three pounds of ground rice, put in boiling water and boiled to a thin paste; one-half pound powdered Spanish whiting and a pound of clear glue dissolved in warm water, mix these well together, and let the mixture stand for several days. Keep the wash thus prepared in a kettle or portable furnace, and when used put it on as hot as possible with either painters' or whitewash brushes.

Purification of Hen-houses.—As the season advances, poultry keepers should not neglect the purification of the fowl houses. Proper sanitary measures must be taken, or health and successful poultry raising cannot be expected, nor is it deserved. Lime is an excellent purifier, and, when carbolic acid is added to the whitewash, will effectually keep away vermin from the walls. After every cleaning of the floor it should be sprinkled with carbolic acid; dilution, twenty of water to one of acid. This is one of the best disinfectants and antiseptics known, and is not used as much as it deserves. The roosts should be sprinkled with it every week. This whitewashing should be done twice at least, better three times, a year. The nests of sitting hens should be sprinkled with carbolic acid to keep off vermin; and the coops also, where young broods are kept for a time, should be purified in this way. If a hen gets lousy, the dilute acid will destroy the lice, if put under the wings, and on the head and neck. Wood ashes are excellent to be kept in fowl houses for hens to dust themselves with. They are much more effectual than sand; but sand should be kept for a bath. Without proper attention to these matters, poultry keepers cannot expect to succeed.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

Mr. Moody's Question Drawer.

The hour for this exercise in the Boston Convention having arrived, Mr. Moody announced the first question which had been sent to him as relating to the matter of praying for the Spirit: Does not the continued seeking after the Holy Spirit blunt the sense of what we have? If a man is full he can hold no more. Praying for power differs from praying for the indwelling of the Spirit. There is little danger that Christians will become so full of the Spirit that they need no power.

Q. Why don't you teach baptism? A. That is none of our business. Some men would have this work broken up in six weeks or six days if they had their way. Suppose I should teach baptism by sprinkling, away would go Mr. Pentecost. (Mr. Pentecost—No I wouldn't.) If I taught baptism by immersion away would go Dr. Webb. Let us see what we can meet on. Let ministers indoctrinate these converts as they please. Evangelists are just to proclaim the Gospel; they just want to keep out of those controverted questions. When June comes it will be four years since Mr. Sankey and I have been together in meetings, and we have yet to hear the first word of discord. I can have my views of baptism, and if I had a church I could teach the people what I believe, but in these meetings it would be unfair to do it.

Q. How can the churches of New England be revived? A. If I were in a town of four or five churches I would see the ministers and see if they would agree, If two of them agreed I would say, "Why can't we work together?" Then we would meet and pray. Suppose there were no more than twelve persons come together for prayer, if they hold on faithfully there will be a revival. If you can get three churches to join all the better. Our work is always in proportion to the number of churches interested in the movement. If the whole church is not aroused it is no sign that we should not be quickened and aroused personally. If there is one man aroused there will be anxious souls around that man. We have to act in this world as if there were not another man or woman in it. If we are cold ourselves we are apt to think every one else is cold. What we want is to get our own hearts on fire, and there will be a revival.

Q. Would you hurry the people into the church as soon as they are converted? A. No, I wouldn't. I usued to think that as soon as a man is converted he should join the church, but I have grown more conservative. Some people get into the church very easy and it's hard to get them out. Sometimes they break it up.

Q. What is the best way to conduct evangelical meetings? A. I would have them short, not more than an hour in length, with plenty of singing. Then I'd have a second meeting for prayer, and an inquiry meeting.

Q. Isn't it better to get all the inquirers together? A. I like to get the inquirers off alone and talk with them from the Word of God, pray with them, try to remove their doubts and calm their fears. Then send them home to think quietly over the matter in their minds. The duty of Christians is to work among those around them at religious meetings. It is a good deal better to begin now, make a beginning and then you can work better as you get into it. You can't expect a boy to learn the lumber trade without spoiling some lumber. It generally takes about a month to get Christians really to work, and to understand how to deal with inquirers, and then the work spreads and goes forward. If while Dr. Taylor was preaching here last night there were a thousand Christians in the audience watching for souls, and, when the meeting was over if had they just spoken to some one right around them, we would have had from a hundred to a thousand inquirers in this meeting last night. It is a good thing for you Christians to bring your Bibles with you. There was a Christian lady in London got into one of the buses, and a person in the bus saw her get in and saw she had a Bible in her hand, and so she got up from the seat where she was sitting—she was sitting on the other side of the bus—and got a seat close to her, sat right down side of her and she says to the lady, "Are you a Christian?" "Yes, I am!" "I thought you was because you had a Bible. I am very anxious about my soul. Tell me what I must do to be saved?" And they had an inquiry meeting right there in the bus. There are a good many in this town who want to be stirred up; they want to learn the way of life, and there ought to be a good many Christians ready to point these souls the way to God.

Q. How to deal with infidels in the inquiry room? A. Well, pray with them. Argument don't do any good. Down on your knees and pray with them and convert them to God. A good, many infidels have been converted but not by argument.

Q. Would you talk with inquirers if they are not interested? A. Well, they must be a little interested if they are inquirers. I suppose the inquirer means, Would you talk with persons who are not deeply convicted of sin? Well, the thirteenth chapter of Romans is a good chapter to read to such persons, where it says: "There are none righteous, no, not one." You must be convicted of sin first, before any good can be done. Conviction comes first and then conversion. There is no use crying peace, peace, before we know we are really at war with God. But when we are convicted of sin then is the time for the blessing to come.

Q. Would you tell inquirers they are saved? A. No, let God tell them. The record is kept on high. I think it is very wrong to tell inquirers they are saved. They can be saved by putting their trust in the Lord God of Heaven. But when the act takes place God must reveal to them in his own way whether they are saved or not.

Q. Is it best to give them a tract or a book after you have got done with them? A. Sometimes a book in the hand is a great help. But the best book I have ever seen is the Bible. Bring them right to the Word of God and let them put their trust in that. That is better than anything else.

Q. Would you tell them to go home and pray? A. No; I wouldn't tell them that. They might die on the way home. But pray now. Don't put it off. You don't know what may happen. Bring them right to the Lord now. That is your work. If you send them home to pray it may be difficult to do anything with them afterwards. They may lean too much on their prayers and prayer won't save them.

Q. Would you have inquiry meetings after the regular meeting? A. It seems to me, after I had preached the Gospel I would be sure and pull the net in to see if I had caught anything. A good many ministers never look to see if they are successful in their ministry. They are like men out fishing who keep throwing their nets into the water and never look to see if they have got anything in them. After you have preached the Gospel you onght to look for the results. There is simple instruction and teaching, and then there is preaching the Gospel; they ought not to be kept separate. When you proclaim the Gospel it is bringing men to Christ, and you want to keep them there. We would have a hundred-fold more in the work of God if we only expected more. A minister wanted me to preach for him once, and there was quite a good audience there, and he said he was surprised; he didn't think anybody would come. Let us aim at great and immediate results, and we will get them.

Q. Would you encourage little children to go to church? A. Certainly I would. It is better to let them commence as soon as they can. Let them begin so young that they cannot tell when they begin. Some people think that little children disturb the congregation. I don't see why they should be disturbed by a baby in church more than at home. I like to hear them. I don't see why a whole audience should be disturbed by a little child crying. Mothers who don't have any servants to take care of their children ought to be encouraged to come and bring their children. I think we should have them here a great deal more then. If they are not reached, I don't know what will become of the masses, because the masses of the people are not able to hire servants. When a mother has five or six children, and she is encouraged to bring them to church, they get in the habit of coming then, and that is a good thing.

Q. How are we to get more life into our prayer-meetings? A. Get more into yourselves first. If there is no life in a man it is hard work for him to put any into others. Get out of the old ruts and have a change. In some prayer-meetings it is the custom to have Deacon Jones or White pray, and then the minister reads some great long chapter and before he gets through he talks all the spirit out of the meeting and then they go home. It's no wonder young people don't come to prayer-meetings. Have variety—new hymns, once in a while. Get people close together. I have seen many a meeting lost by the people being scattered. People scatter away from the minister as if they were afraid they would catch some disease near him. There is no power at all in such meetings. Have a live meeting and get the people right up near you. If they don't come have a pulpit on wheels and roll it right down among them. Don't have one of these great box affairs where they can't see you. If you can't do any better take a chair and stand upon that. And then just let them all gather around and have perfect freedom and sympathy. Our meetings are cold and stiff and formal; they are apt to drive people from Christ instead of drawing them in. Some young people say if they become Christians they will have to attend the prayer-meetings and they don't want to go. They must be made interesting. Then have the place of meeting well ventilated. Sometimes the janitors forget to open the windows. I have been in some of them when it seemed as though there was the same air there that there was twenty years ago. People who have been working out in the open air all day come in there and they feel just like going to sleep, and they lay it on the minister. Have the room ventilated, and warm and light and cheerful. Have short prayers. If any one prays five minutes just go up to him after the meeting is over and say, "Brother Jones," or whatever his name is, "I wish you wouldn't pray so long to-morrow night." I say five minutes, some pray fifteen minutes; I don't know any meeting that can stand that. If you can't pray short, don't pray at all. These men who make long prayers are generally the ones who pray least at home. They are generally prayerless prayers, and they take the spirit right out of the meeting. You ought to make the prayer-meeting the most attractive meeting in the church during the week.

Q. Is it a good thing to have new speakers in evangelical meetings? A. No; it don't succeed. We tried that once in Chicago. We had a hall open every afternoon for thirty days; and then we went out and got people to come in. And we got thirty of the leading ministers in Chicago to preach, a different one every night. And at the end of the thirty days I think one man was converted. And it has always been a wonder to me that he was converted. The trouble was they didn't stick together. They got used to one man's way and then another man came and the interest was divided. If we had any one man of the thirty preach all the time I think the result would have been different. If you have four or five ministers in the town let one man preach for two weeks, and he will get in the way of presenting one line of truth and be successful; and then secure another, and in that way much good will come.

Q. How would you get a church to work? A. Well, first, I would go to work myself. Some are always telling others to go to work, and they don't go themselves. Get a few men blest and others will come and want to go to work. I never saw a working Christian yet but what he was a rejoicing one. When you are working you are not troubled with doubts. Christians wonder why they have so many doubts. It is because they are all the time occupied with themselves. We must work for others, and if we work for others we shall ourselves be blest. "He that watereth shall himself be watered." I once heard of a man who had his leg broken, and he was obliged to stay in the house, and some one brought him in the first cluster of grapes from his vine; and he told his wife, "I can't eat that cluster. I am going to send it to a neighbor of mine who is sick." I will call him neighbor Jones. So he sent them to neighbor Jones, but neighbor Jones said, "I can't eat these grapes. It was very kind of my neighbor to send them. I will send them to neighbor White as he is sick." So the grapes were sent on from one to another, and they got wonderfully blessed in sending them on in that way. And the last man they were sent to said, "I hear that Mr. So-and-so has got his leg broken. Poor fellow; I think I'll send these grapes to him." And so he sent them back to the one who sent them first. So he got his grapes back again and a blessing too. If we bless others the blessing always comes back to ourselves at last.

Q. Do you think it best to get children to sign a covenant that they will not lie, swear, steal, drink, etc.? A. Well, I did, but I have got over it. I don't think much of covenants. I would not say anything against signing the pledge, but I think the only hope is in Christ. They must renounce their own strength, give up their own resolutions and lean on Christ, and then sign the pledge and it may do some good. It is a good deal better just to teach them Jesus Christ is the only hope. If they sign the pledge they will come to lean on the pledge. Take Christ as the Saviour of the world. Just hold to that. We are holding up most every substitute except Jesus Christ. We must hold Christ up to them the same as Moses in the wilderness presented the brazen serpent, and it healed them. He didn't have any roots or herbs, but they were healed then. Lean on Christ's strength.

The doors were then opened while the audience sang, "I Need Thee Every Hour." At the close of the singing Mr. Moody again opened the "question drawer," and took ftom it the following questions, which he proceeded to answer. He said: I have received a great many questions in regard to the matter of fairs, theatricals, etc., in the church. I don't think I have time to go into it this morning, except to lift up a solemn protest against it. We can draw young people in that way, but we don't draw them to Christ; and after we have got them we don't know what to do with them. We don't have the power over them we should have. There was a time when religious men used to go into the world to see what the world was doing. The cry was, "Keep the church from the world," but now the world is coming into the church. They must be kept separate. The world has come in and eaten out the piety from the churches, and they have not the power they once had. We must keep up the standard and draw the world up to it, not lower it to the world's level. I never heard of any one who had any influence in that way. I have heard of wives going to the theatre with their husbands, with the understanding that their husbands would go to church with them the next Sabbath. But I don't know of a Christian woman who did it but she lost her influence over her husband. Instead of lifting him up, he brought her down. The idea is, now-a-days, that a person cannot be a Christian without growing up in the world. But if we are Christians we don't care for it. That is the way God deals with his people, instead of saying you shan't do this or that he takes away all desire for worldly things. He gives us that which is best and we don't desire other things. What we want is a real religious life in the church. These theatricals in connection with churches do a great deal of harm. This raising money to pay off church debts in that way is an abominable thing. I think there is a great deal better way to raise money than that.

Q. In a time when the religious interest is beginning to increase in a congregation, is there any danger of preaching too much to careless churchmen, and too little to the unconverted? A. I should go for the careless ones first, and then I would attend to the unconverted. When Spurgeon went up to London to preach, he said: "You could fire a cannon-ball right through the church and not hit anyone." So he preached, Sunday after Sunday, right to the elders. Finally they said: "Don't you think you had better leave us alone and preach to the unconverted?" And he said: "I must preach to you first, and get you right with God." And when he got them stirred up, he went to the church members, and then his work began with the unconverted, and it has been going on ever since. You must get the church thoroughly alive first, and then you can have power over the unconverted.

Rev. W. J. Erdman in his Bible reading on Afflictions, at the Chicago Avenue church, last Sabbath morning, divided the sorrows of Christians into four classes:

First, the casualties or troubles of life which are common to all mankind, Christian and sinner alike, for which the sufferers are in no degree responsible.

Second, blameworthy sufferings. Sufferings caused by the failure on the part of the afflicted ones to do their duty.

Third, chastisements which our loving Father puts upon his children for their purification.

Fourth, sufferings with Christ for the sake of his body, the church. Such sufferings as Paul speaks of in Colossians 1: 24. "And fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ."

A Universalist Minister struck dumb.

Dr. Wescott gives the following incidents, and has the name of the parties and the locality where they occurred:

At an appointment where the dominant faith was Universalism, he had been successful in leading a few souls to Christ; so, in due time, the Universalist minister came on with his panacea, and he had previously notified the people of what they might expect in his line. He took as his text the words, "Who will show us any good?" and then, as if in reply, said, "I am the man to show you good. I am not the man to advocate immorality, and I will not do it; but I do say that if you lie, or cheat, or steal, or swear, or commit adultery, or any other crime, you will be punished on the spot, and at death you will go straight to heaven." He paused and the people looked and waited for him to proceed, but in vain. He uttered not another word, and for nine years never spoke a loud word. Two of those nine years Dr. Wescott lived neighbor to him. When he recovered his speech, and was spoken to about the singular event, he could never be induced to say a word about it.—Am. Wesleyan.

News of the Week.

—The Philadelphia and Reading railroad has issued a circular to its engineers declaring that it will henceforth employ no men who are members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

—Pres. Hayes has issued an order directing the withdrawal of the United States troops from the state house at Columbia, S. C. His support being gone, Gov. Chamberlain has no strength compared to his rival. He has, however, determined to hold on to the office on the ground that there has been no legal inauguration since the election.

—A New York merchant threw a bomb-shell at his partner, last week, which exploded, killing him and wounding another man in the office. The perpetrator of the atrocity, himself wounded, then shot himself and died soon after.

—The proposed legislative action in Massachusetts growing out of the Boston and Maine railroad strike has been anticipated by the more expeditious Connecticut body and is now followed in Delaware. It is made a penal offense for an engineer to abandon his engine on the road in case of a strike, to refuse to transport cars received from connecting roads, or to bribe or coerce fellow-employes into abandoning the railroad company's service.

—Mr. Gladstone has published a pamphlet in which he shows that the conduct of the porte toward the authors of the Bulgarian outrages is a distinct encouragement to a repetition of the horrors. The guilt of the Turkish government is fully proved. United Europe should at least impose such restraints upon the Turkish administration as Europe has declared indispensable. The proposal to grant Turkey a year of grace simply means another year of debasement and misery for Turkish subjects. Mr. Gladstone concludes: "I ask England to redeem the pledge given by the Crimean war to the subjects of Turkey."

—Edward R. Hurst, an engineer on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road, saw a child three years old on the track the other day. Springing through the cab window, he reached the pilot in time to catch the child and throw it into the arms of a yard watchman. A train passing the other way struck Hurst's arm, breaking it in three places, and necessitating amputation of the hand.

—They have established a terrible precedent in France. In December last, two trains on a French railroad collided, and nine passengers were killed and fourteen wounded. The chief of the station has been tried, adjudged guilty of homicide, and condemned to three years imprisonment because of his inattention to and failure to execute the rules of the company. The company was also declared legally responsible.

—The dispute between Russian and Turk is yet unsettled. The protocol has been finally signed by England and is being considered by the new Turkish Parliament. England is influencing the Turkish ministry in favor of peace, but it is thought that war will be declared by Russia on some pretext. Montenegro still continues in revolt against Turkey and is supported by the Czar.

TRACT NO. 1:

HISTORY OF MASONRY.

BY PRESIDENT J. BLANCHARD, OF WHEATON COLLEGE.

This is now published in three tracts of four pages each. Price of each, 50 cents per 100; $4 per 1000.

TRACT. NO. 5:

Extracts From Masonic Oaths and Penalties, as Sworn to by the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island.

This tract is a reprint of a tract published in 1834, and is a very weighty document. A 4-page tract at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 6:

Hon. John Quincy Adams' Letter.

Giving His and His Father's Opinion of Freemasonry (1831.);

AND

Hon. James Madison's Letter,

Giving His Opinion of Freemasonry (1832).

Both of these letters, in one 4-page tract, at 50 cents per 100: $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 7:

SATAN'S CABLE-TOW.

A 4-page tract. This is a careful analysis of the character of Masonic oaths, and shows them to be most blasphemous and unchristian; and the Masonic Cable Tow is clearly shown to be the cable Tow by which Satan is leading thousands to eternal death. 5 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 8:

Is a 2-page double tract, "ILLUSTRATED." The first page represents a Mason proclaiming the wonderful wisdom and benevolence of the order, with an article below, entitled "Freemasonry is only 152 Years Old," and gives the time and place of its birth.

The second side is entitled, "Murder and Treason not Excepted," and shows that the Masonic order is treasonable in its constitution, and is both anti-Republican and anti-Christian. Price 25 cents per 100; $2 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 9, ILLUSTRATED:

FREEMASONRY IN THE CHURCH.

Copy of a petition for the higher degrees of Freemasonry, in which Blasphemous and Despotic Titles are enumerated and prayed for. TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE.

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this institution A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT No. 22.

LINUS CHITTENDEN ON FREEMASONRY.

The Author a Seceding Master Mason states his objection to the Lodge, drawn both from experience and observation, in a clear concise and forcible style,

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100, $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

Cynosure Tract No. 28.

FREEMASONRY REVEALED.

A LEGAL ATTESTATION BY EDMOND RONAYNE

To the correctiness of the published expositions of Freemasonry. The author very briefly states the mode of preparation and initiation in the various degrees, with the mock murder and resurrection of the candidate in the personification of Hiram Abiff in the 3d, degree and the penalties of each.

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100. $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100: $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100, TRACTS FREE.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year 1876 were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAPBOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Good News.

Two clubs of ten for a year each and two of five for a year each and one of four for a year and two for six months each together with several smaller clubs received during the past week.

P. P. Perry, Fort Scott, Kan., sends a club of ten and writes: "I expected to be able to get up a club the first of the year, but was disappointed until this week."

Are there not others who can send in clubs now, who were disappointed about sending them earlier?

Cyrus Clingman, Danville, Iowa, assisted by one or two others, sends a club of ten for a year.

James Currie, Clifton, Iowa, sends a club of five for one year each, and expects to add to the list. He has recently been much afflicted by the sickness and death of his wife.

J. H. Fake, Cherry Valley, Ill., sends a club of four for a year and two for six months.

N. P. Eddy, Sheffield, Ill., sends a club of five for a year. He secured these in a locality where another friend of the cause thought none could be obtained. Will not this fact strengthen the faith of some who think that nothing can be done. "According to thy faith (showed by works) be it unto thee" is an unfailing promise.

Nothing desirable is accomplished as a rule, without an effort equal to the importance of the object in view. If the control of the country goes to the Masons, Catholics and Infidels, as many prophesy that it will, it will be because Christians fail to meet their responsibilities. Let us courageously strengthen the Cynosure and other movements for truth and righteousness.

IOWA AND SECRETISM.—The Iowa State Convention, opposed to secret societies, will meet at Oskaloosa, April 24. This place is a stronghold of Masonry, and the writer hopes the churches and societies will be fully represented, and that everybody will come who can come. Let not the enemy laugh at our insignificant numbers. It is desired that all who intend coming will send in their names in due time, so that arrangements can be made for entertainment. Delegates as they arrive will please report immediately at the U. P. church east of the public square. A committee will be in attendance to wait on them. Address R. A. MCAYEAL,
Oskaloosa, Iowa.

MCHENRY COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

A call for a "county convention opposed to secret societies" having been widely circulated, and numerously signed by prominent citizens, we hereby announce such a convention to be held in the Independent church at Marengo, Ills., commencing at 2 P. M., Wednesday, April 25th, and continuing through that and the following day, and earnestly invite a general attendance. Entertainment furnished for all who come.
P. C. TEEPLE, Pres.

REFORMERS OF MICHIGAN, ATTENTION!

There is to be a quarterly meeting of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies to be held in Howell, Livingston county, April 24th and 25th, commencing at 2 P. M. Tuesday, the 24th. All reformers are expected to be in attendance. Preparations are being made to accommodate all with a home who are from a distance. By order of COMMITTEE.

Topics of the Time.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers has added another to the list of proofs that secret orders exist for selfish ends instead of those put forward by them, as benevolence, temperance, support of the widow and orphan, etc. The Philadelphia and Reading railroad company, resolving not to be caught by such a strike as befel the Boston and Maine road, gave notice that it would employ no members of the "Brotherhood," offering at the same time to establish and endow a benefit association for all members who left the order. This proposition struck at the very existence of the secret order, for the benefit in case of accident or death is about the only apology for it. If the company would provide such a system the order would lose its vocation. Hence a convention, widely representative of the Brotherhood, on Sabbath of last week in Philadelphia, to make arrangements for a strike. Under the circumstances that final appeal could hardly fail of victory to the company, for many of the engineers have accepted its offer and will not allow themselves to be dragged about for the sake of preserving the temporary authority and power of a centralized, domineering association.

St. Louis furnished a horror last week which at first promised more terrible loss than even the Brooklyn Theatre fire or Ashtabula bridge; that it is otherwise the whole land should thank a merciful Providence. Early Wednesday morning the terrible news came that the Southern Hotel, the largest and finest in the city, was on fire beyond control and hundreds were vainly imploring help from the elevated windows of the upper stories. Later it was thought that from one to two hundred were lost in the holocaust of flame; but as we go to press the number is reduced to thirteen, most of whom perished by jumping or falling from the windows. The catastrophe occurred in dead of night soon after one o'clock, and the rapid spread of the fire seemed to cut off the escape of scores in the upper stories, nearly all of whom were rescued who could be persuaded to wait for ropes and ladders. This lesson will be heeded by the hotel proprietors, who must now cater to the fears of the traveling public as well as to their luxurious habits, or they may rent their upper floors to rats. The simplest means of escape would seem to be by a broad easy passage to the roof, where fixtures might be stored for escape to the ground or to adjacent buildings.

The refusal of the Porte to accept the protocol signed by Russia, France, Prussia, Austria, Italy and England, on the last day of March, has, as was expected, raised the war fever again; and the certainty of a proclamation of hostilities by Russia on Turkey is announced as we go to press. The Czar is expected on the southwestern border of his domain this week to give personal direction and the Grand Duke Nicholas reviewed the army of the Pruth on Saturday. In the event of war, now so well assured, the advantage must be conceded to Russia. Her army numbers a million and a half, divided equally for offense and defense. The army of the South, already probably across the Pruth, numbers 250,000; the army of the Caucassus, ready for a decisive flank movement, numbers 150,000; while in immediate reserve are more than 300,000. Roumania, Servia, Montenegro and Greece will undoubtedly join with 200,000 more. Against this force the Turks can oppose a force estimated at from 500,000 to 900,000, the former number probably most correct. The navy of Turkey is the most powerful, but this war will be decided south of the Balkan mountains and not on the Black Sea, and the wretched people of the northern provinces will reap again the desolations of countermarching armies. Their freedom, if given them at the end, will be dearly purchased.

The diplomacy of Russia in preparing for this encounter has been ably conducted. When the conference failed through the smart promises of the Porte, the Czar sent his best man around among the capitals with a protocol, which refers to the interest of Europe in the Christians of the Provinces; and its recognition of the reforms promised and of the peace made with Servia. The Powers invite Turkey to place her army on a peace footing and grant a little territory to Montenegro, and make no delay in carrying out her good intentions. They meanwhile will watch and wait, and if Turkey again fails, "they think it right to declare that such a state of affairs would be incompatible with their interests and those of Europe in general." Having prevented any alliance of Europe with Turkey by this means, and being sure of Greece and the Provinces, and it is said even of the aid of Persia, the Czar has made a clear field between him and his old time enemy. No Crimean war is preparing now. And in the event of war, unless this treaty is broken and other Powers do not interfere there can be but one result—the collapse of the Turkish Empire.

When a Christian goes into the world because he sees in it his call, yet, while he also feels it his cross, it will not hurt him.

WHAT IS FREEMASONRY?—No. 3.

To the W. M., Wardens and Brethren of Keystone Lodge No. 639, A. F. and A. M.

CHICAGO, March 20, 1877.

BRETHREN:—In the last letter in which it was my privilege to address you (letter No. 2) I called your attention to the fact that Freemasonry claims to be "a religious institution, "a science," "the science of sciences," an institution of such vast importance and conferring upon its different members such incalculable benefits that "it cannot be conceived that anything be suggested more which the soul of man requires," and hence that it is of all others "the institution that is exactly most needed in this age;" and in prosecuting this portion of our investigation I brought on the witness stand and took the depositions of the highest standard Masonic authorities now in existence, such as Mackey, McCoy, Sickels, Pierson and Webb, the latter republished and annotated by the celebrated Dr. Rob. Morris, P. G. M. of Kentucky. Leaving the pretended scientific claim of Freemasonry to be considered at a future time, and especially as it will come in more appropriately when we come to discuss the second or Fellow Craft degree I shall now direct your attention once more to Freemasonry as "a religious institution," and shall retain of course the same living witnesses to bear undisputed testimony as to what as a system of religious philosophy it proposes to accomplish for its affiliated members, irrespective of country, creed or previous condition.

Allow me then to refer you once more to Mackey's Lexicon, page 336, under the word "Order," where we read as follows: "An order is defined by Johnson to be, among other things, a 'regular government, a society of dignified persons, distinguished by marks of honor, and a religious fraternity.' In all of these senses Masonry may be styled an order," or in plain language Masonry is a religious fraternity.

Again, from Webb's Monitor, page 13: "No lodge can be regularly opened or closed without religious services of some sort;" and further, on page 231, "The Master of the lodge is its priest and the director of its religious ceremonies." Add to this, if need be, that "the floor of the lodge is holy ground," that the Master Mason's lodge is the "holy of holies," that Masonry has its altars, its priests, its high priests, its prayers, its hymns or sacred songs, its burial service, and, above all that, "the speculative Mason is engaged in the construction of a spiritual temple in his heart, pure and spotless,' and you are furnished with an accumulation of evidence at once so authoritative and convincing that not a man among you all dare deny for a single moment that Freemasonry is a religious institution. And now my brethren, as we have demonstrated beyond the possibility of a doubt that Masonry is a religion or a religious institution, let us next inquire, What sort of a religion is Freemasonry? In Mackey's Lexicon, page 404, under the word "Religion," we read as follows: "The religion of Masonry is pure theism on which its members engraft their own peculiar opinions, but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry." Now observe here: 1st, What is the religion of Freemasonry? It is pure theism. 2d, That "its different members are not permitted to introduce their peculiar religious opinions into the lodge; and 3d, That whether these religious opinions be true or false they must not "connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry," or in other words, if a man is a Christian at the time of his becoming a Mason he must not introduce his Christianity or any truth or principle thereof into the Masonic lodge; he must never pray to or in the name of Jesus Christ while in the lodge, and he must never, on any account connect the truth of any Christian doctrine with the pretended truth of Masonry. What a lamentable, what a terrible position for a minister of Christ to place himself in, binding himself by an oath to be a pure theist, to practice pure theism in the Masonic lodge, and never, under any circumstances whatever, to approach the throne of grace through Jesus Christ while within the tyled recesses of the lodge room.

But again, I turn to the oldest Masonic document now in existence, being the first that was ever published. I refer to "The Charges of a Freemason," by James Anderson and John Theophulus Desaguliers, London, 1723, (see Mackey's Manual) page 215, "Concerning God and Religion." "Though in ancient times Masons were charged in every country to be of the religion of that country or nation whatever it was, it is now thought more expedient only to oblige (compel) them to that religion in which all men agree." Now pray what religion is that? Is it Judaism? Is it Christianity? Is it Mohammedanism? Is it Mormonism? No; all men don't agree in any one or all of these. Then what can the religion of Freemasonry be? Well, whatever it is since it cannot possibly be the religion of Christ, Masonic ministers must be either hypocrites to Masonry or else hypocrites to Christianity, for most assuredly they cannot acceptably serve two masters. They have taken a solemn oath "to stand to and abide by" the religion in which all men agree, the "pure theism" of Masonry, and hence they have forsworn all allegiance to Christianity, and by so doing have become interlopers within the fold of Christ, wolves in sheep's clothing, "who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness and denying the only Lord God and our Lord Jesus Christ." —Jude iv.

Now then, having settled this second point, as to what sort of a religion Freemasonry is, let us next consider what spiritual benefits accrue from a connection with this wonderful system of "pure theism," this "religion in which all men agree." I turn again to Mackey's Lexicon, page 16, under the word "Acacian," "A term * * * signifying a Mason who by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity is FREE FROM SIN." Here you will perceive that it is emphatically stated that if a Mason "lives in strict obedience to the precepts and obligations" of the "religious fraternity" known as Freemasonry he shall be free from sin. Hence Masonry must undoubtedly cleanse the soul from sin. There can be no mistake about this. If the above language don't mean this it means nothing. But we have already seen that the name of Jesus Christ cannot and dare not, without a gross violation of Masonic law, be introduced into the lodge or be connected in any way with any of its ceremonies, and hence we must conclude again that Masonry cleanses from all sin without any reference whatever to Jesus Christ or to the all-sufficient atonement he has made on the cross. This I conceive to be simply blasphemous, and I have no doubt, my brethren, that many of you will soon see it in the same light and will flee from this terrible monster of iniquity and high-sounding hypocrisy as you would from the bite of a rattlesnake or the deadly embrace of the cobra. But again, in Mackey's Manual page 235 we find this remarkable language: "The Speculative Mason is engaged in the construction of a spiritual temple in his heart pure and spotless and fit for the dwelling place of him who is the author of purity, where God is to be worshiped in spirit and in truth, and whence every evil thought and unruly passion are to be banished." But how is this wonderful temple to be constructed in the heart? Simply by initiation. By being made a Mason, by being passed and by being raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason.

And now, my brethren, can you tell me of a single Mason in this city in all your lodges who is "constructing a spiritual temple in his heart pure and spotless?" There is not one. Did you ever know an affiliated Mason who was thus engaged? You never did, and what is more you never will. Tell me which of you is "constructing a spiritual temple in his heart." Not one of you. If the question was upon the construction of a spiritual temple or something of that sort in your stomachs, then you are aware that I could not make out such a good case against you, but when it is spiritnality "in the heart" you know only too well that such a claim on the part of Masonry is a gigantic fraud, and that you yourselves are simply arrant hypocrites if you pretend to believe any such nonsense. But who are they who may engage in this very laudable and praiseworthy practice of building up spiritual temples in their hearts? Who are they who are eligible to be made Masons? We turn to Sickels' General Ahiman Rezon, page 15: "Hence many advantages are gained (by being a Mason); the distant Chinese, the wild Arab and the American savage will embrace a brother Briton, and know that besides the common ties of humanity there is still a stronger obligation to induce him to kind and friendly offices." And again, in Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, page 207: "The Jews, the Chinese, the Turks, each reject either the New Testament or the Old or both, and yet we see no good reason why they should not be made Masons." Hence the "distant Chinese," "the wild Arab," "the American savage," and "the Turk," according to Masonic law and usage, may become free and accepted Masons, and go to work at once in building up "spiritual temples" in their hearts, and "by living in strict obedience to the precepts and obligations of the fraternity," they, each of them, at last may become "free from sin," and so at the hour death be fit to enter into the "Grand Lodge above," where Freemasonry at last proposes to land them, and all this without any reference whatever to the finished and free salvation offered by and through the Lord Jesus Christ. This is a very nice arrangement indeed. A man, no matter what country or clime he may hail from, and regardless of his civilized or savage state, may become a Freemason and thus receive "light," experience the "new birth," be made "free from sin," build a "spiritual temple in his heart," and be at last transferred to the "Grand Lodge above." What a great pity that such a noble system, such a wonderful institution as Masonry should not be made more universal so that it may include within its outstretched and loving arms the entire family of man, and that women, children, old men, cripples, colored men, poor men, the deaf, the blind, and the outcast may experience the wonderful soul-saving influences of the blue lodge and chapter. Let me briefly sum up the result of our investigation thus far, that we may see at a glance just how far we have progressed and thus be better able to understand the examination that must now follow when we enter upon a discussion of the immediate working of Masonry in the lodge. We have investigated and authoratitively answered the following questions: 1st. What is Masonry? "A religious institution." 2d. What is the religion of Masonry? "Pure theism;" "the religion in which all men agree." 3d. What does Masonry profess to accomplish for its adhering members? "A Mason by living in strict in obedience to the precepts and obligations of the fraternity is free from sin." 4th. Who are eligible to be made Masons and hence to be thus freed from sin? Not the intelligent, well educated, well-bred, refined American lady; not the aged saint or the pious crippled boy, but "distant Chinese, the wild Arab, the American savage," and the Turk as well as the brother Briton or the brother American. 5th. In what relation do we stand to this religious system? We are sworn to conform to and abide by all its laws, rules and regulations, whether "right or wrong." Bearing these facts in mind then, and remembering that every point has been proven beyond the possibility of a doubt, I shall in my next, and in all my future letters, call your attention to the secret work of the lodge, beginning at the preparation room, so that we may be able to fully understand in what manner Freemasonry proposes to accomplish this wonderful work. In the meantime I am very respectfully and sincerely your friend now as ever,

EDMOND RONAYNE

THE BIBLE AND AMERICAN PRINCIPLES.

Editor Cynosure:—At a late meeting of the Illinois State Teachers' Association, the culture of conscience was an important topic. "The moral nature comes to school with the intellectual." What was defective in the discussion, if any thing was so, was that although the Bible is mentioned as one of the agencies needed in moral culture, "yet if it were not there, at any rate its spirit and principles should be." This is very true. But as all teachers are not so wise nor such "living examples of the morality as they are [or ought to be expected] to teach, would this vital interest of moral culture be so well provided for, and guarded as it ought to be, without the Bible itself? Besides teachers are so frequently changed that it would seem wise to put the moral culture on a permanent basis, and that would be the actual presence of the Bible and its teachings in every school." Nobody has a right "to legislate it out." It is not a matter of small consequence whether "Tweeds or Washingtons are produced." Therefore from the beginning of settlements in this country the Bible has been the foundation of morals in the schools, and our republican government was the fruit. Now it is said, "Our republican institutions are quaking with the shocks of Romanist and infidel conspiracies and assaults against our Bible, our schools and our civil and religious freedom."

The sentiments of the wise and leading men of our nation one hundred years ago were very different from those who are endeavoring to control these important interests now. Such men and patriots as Washington, Adams, Justice Catron of the Supreme Court, held that religion is necessary to good government, and a religious education too. So did the Congress of 1787, which made it the duty of the people and States of the Northwestern Territory "forever to encourage schools and the means of education by legislation, because religion, morality and knowledge are necessary to good government." The American Congress also, soon after the Declaration of Independence passed the following resolution:

WHEREAS, True religion and good morals are the only solid foundation of public liberty and happiness;

Resolved, That it be earnestly recommended to the several States to take the most effectual measures for the encouragement thereof.

Elements, therefore, of such vital interest in a republican government as religion and morality ought to go hand in hand with knowledge; and so it was intended by the wise and patriotic men who laid the foundation of the American government. It is hoped the time is not distant when all true Americans will see the error of listening for a moment to the demand for a secular education or a secular government. We must not forget that Dr. Franklin's saying is true, that "God governs in the affairs of men." He has something to do in the progress of civil government in the world. Ours was begun in advance of all others upon the "principles of civil and religious liberty," and with these principles declared and defined in the Constitution and in the ordinance of 1787 according to the wisdom of our forefathers. These let us hold up as a light to the nations of the old world; some of whom are groping their way to find some solid foundation for a free republican government.

For a few years past the fraudulent rings, many of them connected with high governmental positions, have been a blur upon our national character, and strongly indicate the spirit now so active in undermining the original principles of moral and religious culture. And if this experiment of free government shall fail, it is hoped that foreign nations will attribute it to its true cause—a departure from the principles of good government as laid down and often insisted on by its founders. Surely, if we drive religion from our schools and from our government we shall be left destitute of what our Congress and former leading men declared to be "the only solid foundation of public liberty and happiness."

Now a word upon our primary law and State obligation. It is in these words: "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." This notwithstanding the various efforts to evade its force is easily understood: 1st, The States of the Northwestern Territory were required to adopt it in order to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States. 2d, It was declared to be unalterable without common consent. 3d, The provisions of this ordinance of 1787 are held to be as obligatory as the State constitutions (5 Ohio R. 410). 4th, "These articles are paramount to all State constitutions" (Walker's American Law). 5th, "No amendment can be made contrary to the ordinance" (Walker's American Law). Then let us get the Bible back into the schools and hold on to original institutions.

THE CROSS OF REFORMERS.

"It is a sore thing to the flesh," said an old Scotch minister, "for a man to have more light than his brethren." The history of the world demonstrates the correctness of this statement. Wherever men have been stirred by the impulses of divine life, and have gone forth in the strength of God to live out the principles which God had implanted within them, they have naturally and inevitably met with opposition, trial and reproach. A spirited writer has well said:

"There is nothing which the world resents so much as an attempt to carry out a better measure than existed before. A man who would benefit the world must take leave of his own reputation first; for the world never let a man bless it but it fought him first; it never let him give it a boon without first giving him a buffet. If, with one effort, you should raise a tree twenty feet high, you would not do more violence to its roots than you do to society when you attempt suddenly to elevate it above its former level. If there were a hundred violins together, all playing below concert pitch, and I should take a real Cremona, and with the hand of a Paganini should bring it strongly up to the true key, and then should sweep my bow across it like a storm, and make it sound forth clear and resonant, what a demoniacal discord would the rest of the playing seem! Yet the other musicians would be enraged at me. They would think all the dissonance was mine, and I should be to them a demoniac. So it is with reformers. The world thinks the discord is with them and not in its own false playing. All those rosy philosophers who go dancing along the ways of life, expecting to reform men through ease and pleasure, and are surprised when at first snow flakes are thrown at them, and then icicles, and then avalanches, had better fold their gauzy wings at once. They are not wanted. They are not of that heroic race who advance the world."

Those men whom God has called to lead the van-guard in the fight of faith, must necessarily fight alone; must take the brunt and force of the battle, and bear the trials which their position imposes. The men who stand upon the watch-tower, and, gazing afar, catch the first dawning of the coming glory, or watch for approaching danger, or the assault of foes, can not expect to mingle with the purblind dwellers in the shadowy vales below; their position on the watch-tower is one of isolation; they must accept their lot and bear their burdens without a murmur.

But though the night be long, and the hours seem chill and drear: though the lonely watch may not compare in pleasantness with the quiet slumbers or the midnight revels in the camp beneath, yet He who hath set His watchmen on the walls of Zion, and bidden them not to hold their peace day nor night, and hath made them answerable for the blood of any who may be slain unwarned around them, has, with the imposition of such grave responsibilities, placed before them, also, hopes that are full of gladness and of glory. Their hour of joy shall come, their night of weariness shall pass away, the day-star shall arise, and the light of morning shall greet them with its gladdening beams. And when the day of peace shall dawn, and all the scenes of sorrow shall be passed, "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion."

Be patient, then, ye followers of the Lord; you whose anointed eyes see things beyond the ken of common mortals; you who dwell alone in solitude and sorrow, who weep while others rejoice, who pray while others repose, and who watch while others sleep; your time of toil shall not be long; the rest will come, and in the Great Day your joy shall more than compensate for all the sorrows of this world.—The Christian.

THE GREAT REFORMING POWER.

One may be politically or rationtionally an Anti-mason, but that is not enough. We need mighty faith and prevailing prayer in this work of turning men from the ways of darkness. More than else we need the help of the Holy Spirit. The following circumstances will illustrate:

Wm. Goldring was a member of four or five secret societies. He joined the Free Methodist a year or two ago, and it was supposed that he then and there renounced secretism. While preaching on Sunday I felt strongly impressed to relate the experience of an acquaintance. While doing so, Goldring became deeply affected, and wept as though the great deep of his heart was broken up. That night I had a curious dream. I will relate the substance of it, though I cannot make it seem to others as it did to me. I seemed to be led in a very unaccountable way into a sort of labyrinth. I had the impression that I was in a forbidden place, and with a cautiousness, awe and tranquility not to be described, I moved along till I reached the farther limit of the cavern-like place, where was a man at work with a chisel and mallet, apparently extending the excavation in the solid rock. It now seemed that mystery pervaded the surroundings. It seemed neither light nor dark. The man left off his work as soon as he saw me. He seemed to know that my presence was a risk, as if forbidden by some law, but he silently followed me out. Reaching the door, I took hold of a mysterious object that seemed to be an essential appendage of this abode of terror and mystery, when it crumbled to dust. The dream so affected me that I told my wife in the morning that God was about to use me in saving some one from the lodge.

That night Goldring came several miles to meeting and told the congregation what had taken place. So far as Masonry is concerned, it was in substance like this: When he joined the Free Methodists he kept all of his lodge jewels, badges and papers, thinking he might have occasion sometime to return to the lodge. But for a while he had felt troubled, and on the Sunday referred to the Lord got hold of him in such a way that he could not rest till he went home, and in the presence of his wife and Br. S., he burned up all his lodge trinkets, and made a clean sweep of it, casting off forever the works of darkness.—Iowa Freeman.

FUNERAL ORATIONS REVIEWED.

It is taught by the Masonic preachers of Warren, Illinois, that Masons, by and through Masonry, are entitled to and will have a happy home in heaven, whose pearly gates are lifted high to welcome them. This will appear from two addresses, one delivered at Darlington, Wisconsin, January 23, 1877, by Rev. J. Crummer, pastor of the M. E. church of Warren; the other at Warren, January 31st, by Hon. P. A. Orton, and called a Masonic memorial service, on the death of companion Chas. E. Brunner. From these we make the following extracts showing the religion of Masonry:

"Companion Brunner," Mr. Orton goes on to say, "was a man of great mental energy and power. He did not always adhere to logic, but arrived at conclusions by instinct or intuition. He was always the champion of the weak, and despised sycophancy. He was by nature a Mason. He was prepared in his heart."

This would indicate that he belonged to the class that Paul spoke of, that "knew God but glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations and their foolish hearts were darkened."

He says again, that "he loved Masonry for its pure morals and broad charity; naturally a religious man, yet not a professor, he belonged to no church; he loved Christian character but despised hypocrisy. Faith cannot be obtained without evidence. Facts are needful for faith. Without satisfactory evidence he would not make a profession."

Here we have a specimen of Masonic religion: a man by nature a Mason, and naturally religious; and loving Christian character but could find no evidence that there was a Christ, or Christianity; no facts to predicate his faith upon. He loved Masonry for its pure morals, but could not discover any pure morals in Christianity. He says again:

"Shall men who live pure and blameless lives be tried by the dogmas of the church? The church has no monopoly to the road to heaven. Man is not all bad. The human heart is good. Companion Brunner was a good Mason. He is entitled to a happy home, and heaven lifts high her gates and bids the pure in heart come in and enjoy."

Those pure, blameless Masons disdain to be tried by God's Word and declare that it has no right to say that man's heart is corrupt and desperately wicked, nor to require faith in Christ in order to be saved; but the good Mason can go direct from the lodge to the pearly gates of heaven that are "lifted high" and enter in, but the poor wife could not be permitted to taste the sweets of those pure morals and the broad charity of Masonry that fits and prepares the heart for the happy home, but is left to work her way in the dark, as best she can without Masonic light, with a husband who deems her unfit to share the benefits of Masonry. It is shocking to the Christian to see the infidel and unbeliever thus perverting and rejecting God's Word, but more fearful still to see professors of Christianity join hand and voice with the unbeliever to propagate infidelity or a Christless religion. It is especially so when these claim to be preachers of the Gospel of Christ. The Rev. Mr. Crummer says of a natural Mason and a natural religionist:

"We meet here as Masons. It is good for us thus to meet together, to sympathize with the bereaved, speak of the virtues of the departed, and look with the eye of faith to the great beyond. Let us inquire, Shall Companion Brunner, wife, son and daughter live again? Inspiration answers this great question satisfactorily, and says the dead shall rise. The great apostle to the gentiles says: 'We shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.' This is comforting to those who weep. They weep not as those who have no hope. This grand truth is proclaimed by Jesus Christ, and God's power is omniponent. He can collect those scattered fragments of those bodies and raise them to everlasting immortality."

The votaries of Masonry make no distinction between the righteous and the wicked, as declared in God's Word. He makes the Apostle Paul say that the dead unbeliever shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. Paul says, we believers in Christ, not in Masonry, which are alive shall be changed, and also them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him, but no Bible to show that a Mason or natural religionist that rejects Christ shall be raised to everlasting life, and it belies the Bible to tell the world that God can or will do any such thing. THE WORLD FOR CHRIST.

BY REV. N. R. LUCE.

That this was and is the design of God there can remain no possible doubt, and that this should be the motto of every true Christian seems an indispensable part of his aggressive theory, but at present, while there exists such a mania for secret conclaves and vile associations, and so little desire for the ways of God, there needs to be a very thorough awakening on the part of those who are the true disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ.

That this mania for lodge associations grows out of a morbid moral state there can be no doubt. When any man or set of men get cold in religion; when they lose their hold on divine assistance, then it is like Saul and Ahab and others, they go and do wickedly and provoke the mighty God of Israel, and his servants being sorely grieved, lift, like Elijah, their voices to the God of Israel, who will stay the showers of heaven to bring a wicked and rebellious people to Christ; pursued by the divine spirit the rebellious are most likely to "wax worse and worse" for a time at least.

Before the fall of any man or set of men Satan will undertake to do his worst in and by them, and this unmeasured rage of secretists and secrecy denotes most plainly its fall. Without intimidation we should raise our banners anew, and in living letters inscribe thereon, The World for Christ. But we shall never do our part in winning the world for Christ unless we go at it and do something to effect this. It is in our hands to-day. "Ye are the light of the world;" we are the "laborers in the vineyard." We must break up the "fallow ground," and "sow not among thorns." Break up the lodges, expose them; break up saloons and liquor shops, and every conceivable form and order of iniquity. The very first work in reform always is to depose a faulty system, not undertake to sow wheat on greensward, or among thistles, brush and weeds, but go at it and "break up" the ground, and never will any set of men as gospel reformers succeed in raising a glorious harvest of souls to Christ until we go at it and break up, among other things, lodge-idolatry. We must, and by the help of God we will, break up the lodge system that is upon the world. Every stalk, every plant, every seed, the last and least, must be rooted out. The world will not be for Christ until it is done, and no minister in the church is true to his calling until he ruptures faithfully the hoodwinked dissemblings of the lodge. Let him hide his head with shame if he fails to do his duty here.

The world for Christ and him alone. Let that be our motto. Turn and overturn until it is accomplished. The leaven of truth is now at work, through the Cynosure, Telescope and a goodly number of other periodicals it also shines; books and tracts in abundance are on the wing, a printing house in Chicago, and soon others will be in operation to help break up the fallow ground. The Lord speed the day when every lodge will be torn down, every vice subdued, and the world given to Christ.

THE NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION.

ADDRESS BY PROF. C. A. BLANCHARD, WHEATON COLLEGE.

CAN A NATION SIN?

There is a wide-spread and reasonable prejudice against frequent changes in the constitution of a people.

It is better to endure many limitations of personal freedom than to have no law, and it is better to have a constitution which is defective than to alter one so often as to subject it to popular contempt.

In asking as we do for a religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States we meet, of course, this general feeling as well as the hostility which some have to the special change proposed.

Every reasonable mind must however admit that there may be now as there have been heretofore, defects in this instrument which should be remedied, and which, by their importance demand all the time, labor and trouble necessary to effect a change. If our experience had not been sufficiently bitter to teach us this lesson we could learn it from reason alone. From the first settlements in the (now) United States to the adoption of the present Constitution was something over one hundred and fifty years. During all these days our fathers were fighting a battle for bread. Their cabins were to be built, forests to be cleared, streams to be bridged, their sick to be nursed and their dead to be buried.

This period of settlement ended with a seven years war. This contest forced on them by the injustice of the mother land, was fought by a handful of people against the most powerful nation on the globe. By a handful of people trained to the ax and the plow against men whose strength had been tried on battlefields in every part of the world. By a handful of people without recognition or alliances; without an army or navy; without credit or currency against a government that was mistress of the seas and arbiter to the civilized and commercial nations of the earth.

WHAT WAS THE RESULT?

When this struggle was ended our ancestors had secured a belt of land lying along the Atlantic coast from Maine to Florida 800,000 square miles in area. They were oppressed by debts contracted during the war. Their currency was worthless. They returned from battle to build the homes which the savage had burned, to re-establish the commerce which had been driven from the seas, and to plant with corn the fields of Monmouth and Germantown and Bunker Hill. Their first and most pressing need was a national platform. The articles of confederation had barely sufficed to hold them together while a British soldier or a Hessian stood at every door. Of course such a bond would be a rope of sand when the pressure of danger was removed. The great men who manned the ship of state in that tempestuous time were compelled to make their own chart. They sailed an unexplored sea. They boldly and successfully did what no other legislators ever dared attempt. They founded their government upon man. The world had had its republics, but they were founded upon intellect, or arms, or race, or wealth. Never before 1789 had a government dared to say with Sir Wm. Hamilton, "There is nothing great in the world but man; there is nothing great in man but mind." Planting themselves boldly on such a principle at a time when king and priest had held mind and body in chains for a thousand years, is it strange that they should have made some mistakes? Is it not sufficient praise to say, that those grand old men who had conquered in a struggle with the most powerful nation of the earth, had closed up the record of a past all stained with blood and tears, vocal with clanking chain and dungeon groan, and had opened a new book wherein the unfettered hand of a freeman might record the progress of mankind.

THE END CROWNS THE WORK.

If the old proverb "Finis opus coronat," be true we need not be afraid that honest criticism will lessen our respect for these Patricians of American institutions. During the one hundred years which have passed since this constitution was made law, our national domain has increased nearly fourfold, so that to-day our flag floats over more than three million square miles of territory, or nearly as much as all Europe; that cluster of empires, Russia, Prussia, Turkey, Austria, Italy, Spain, France and England. Our country has to-day more miles of railroad and telegraph than all the world besides. American cottons are sold in Manchester, and American iron and steel in Birmingham. A rebellion, the most carefully planned and strongly executed, has been suppressed, and the most magnificent industrial exhibition the world has ever seen has shut the door on the century gone.

I repeat: Is it not sufficient praise to say that our fathers devised the most perfect scheme of government that has ever been known? Is it not enough to admit that they gave an impulse to popular institutions that is felt in the farthest and darkest corners of the earth to-day? They gave the lie to five thousand years of history and made good the charge. Is it any discredit to men who have performed this greater than Herculean task to say that in the blinding crash and whirl of events they lost sight of certain principles which are essential to our permanent prosperity? When we intimate that our Constitution is defective in certain particulars do we insult the shades of the illustrious dead? Because we are children of men whose battle axes went crashing through the skull of helmeted oppession are we bound to be blind to their errors and to worship their mistakes? or are we bound to see farther and more clearly than they? Do we reverence them most when we take up the work they left and carry it on to its consummation or when we bow down in lazy and stupid admiration of their achievements?

DOES THE CONSTITUTION NEED A RELIGIOUS AMENDMENT?

We believe that it does, since it now contains no recognition of the moral character of the nation.

It has been plainly declared that the present Constitution would not require the insertion or omission of a single line if we were to become a nation of Mohammedans or pagans. "We the people" "do ordain." "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." "Congress shall pass no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." These things are susceptible of only one interpretation. God is to be eliminated from the national life. The nation

Rev. J. L. Barlow.

"Owe no man anything, but to love one another."

To the Friends of Moral Reform in Michigan:

The man whose name stands at the head of this appeal, being well known to you all needs no formal introduction. I trust it will be enough for me now to say, that Bro. Barlow having labored earnestly, faithfully and profitably with us last year as lecturer for the Anti-secret Association of the State, was engaged, and would have continued another year but for the stern realities of sickness in his family. At our recent State Convention, the showings were, that more than one half of Bro. Barlow's salary was at that time unpaid! Whereupon he in the kindness of his heart made the proposition, that if the friends of the Association would pay him one hundred dollars, he would release them of the remainder. Of course this proposition was readily accepted; but there still remains sixty dollars of this unpaid. Bro. Barlow, in a late communication to me, states that both himself and wife are now sick and under the doctor's care. Himself with congestion of the lungs and wife with consumption; that his expenses are great, and but few pennies at his command! Now dear friends don't wait, but send relief immediately to this faithful servant of God. The book of Divine Providence is now open, let us make a record in it. The book of personal account will soon be open! Send remittances to Rev. J. L. Barlow, Fentonville, Mich.

H. D. Inman.

President of Michigan State Anti-secret Association.

Ronayne in Union City, Mich.

April 10, 1877.

Editor Cynosure:—At the request of many, one Edmond Ronayne, a star fallen from the bright constellation of the blue lodge of Chicago, on the 4th of April came and proved that which was posted in the bills, which said, "Masonry a gigantic humbug." The masses came to hear an expose of the folly of trusting that rotten old ship that promises to carry safely every man that is found worthy to the "Grand Lodge above."

The first night's work Ronayne made an Entered Apprentice, the second night a Fellow Craft, quietly and in good style. On the third night we saw a Master Mason neither naked nor clothed, but to our astonishment we saw one Jubela lay hands on him demanding the password, on refusing he was met by one Jubelo, and then by another, Jubelum, who with a blow from a hammer knocked him down. Here we saw the Fellow Crafts wickedly kill a worthy Master Mason right in the lodge-room. No wonder that Masons want to keep all hid from the outside world! Then a resurrection of this dead brother took place. Then was heard "Why, John, was that the reason you came home last night with your shirt wrong side before, without your pants, in so great a hurry, almost frightened out of your wits?" Some laughed and some were just a little mad, but I think some women were ashamed for their husbands. Take it all together we had a great time and the largest crowd that was ever in D. R. Cooley's Hall. Some of our good Masons said that it was unfair to tell all the bad and leave out all the good there was in Masonry. But I think it would take somebody a little smarter than a Philadelphia lawyer to find any good in the institution.

We are truly thankful to the noble and daring Edmond Ronayne for all that he has said and done to expose the works of darkness in this our flourishing town.

The Editor of the "Iowa Freeman" on the Rostrum.

Castalia, Ia., Apr. 7, 1877.

Editor Cynosure:—J. H. Vandever, of Mason City, lectured on Freemasonry at Mount Grove and Hardin on this circuit; at the latter place creating considerable of a stir among the craft and their friends. The village of Hardin has two religious societies, Methodist Episcopal and United Brethren, and when the lecturer asserted that a majority of the ministers of the former church were Masons and had been cable-towed and hood-wicked and taken the wicked and cruel oaths of Masonry, the Methodist Episcopal people were seen to be in active opposition to the discussion of the question. One would think to hear them talk that the revelation of the disgusting work of the lodge was a blow at the M. E. church instead of against Freemasonry. The lecture was able and well delivered, and the people of Hardin will long remember this first opening of this discussion among them. I was not present at Mount Grove, but understand that the attendance was good and the impression favorable. I pray God to help us move on in this reform until the powers of darkness are put to flight, and Christ shall be all in all.

Correspondence.

The Congregational Church of Wakeman, Ohio, and Freemasonry.

Dear Bro. K.:—Wakeman is a thriving village in Huron Co., Ohio, on the Lake Shore railroad, and its Congregational church is one of the oldest and most prosperous in that region. They have recently had a revival of religion, resulting in the addition of forty-two members to the church, and they are about to build a new house of worship, their present one having become too small for the growing congregation. Their talented young pastor, Rev. C. C. Cragau, is a seceding Odd-fellow and has no sympathy with secretism. There are two non-affiliating Masons who have for some years belonged to the church, and one Mason has just been received; nearly all the rest are professedly Anti-masonic, several being subscribers to the Cynosure.

I recently gave two lectures in the church on secretism, and ten extra copies of the Cynosure have been subscribed for and circulated among the members, so that they have, at least, had a chance to be informed on this subject.

Sometime since Mr. A. C. Hall, a prominent member of the church, gave notice that he would offer a resolution to exclude adhering Freemasons. Quite a flutter was caused among the more conservative members, lest the discussion should offend the Masons and interfere with the plan of building the new church. Dr. Leonard Bacon was written to for advice, and replied by saying that he was opposed to all secret organizations, but thought that Christian character should be the only condition of church membership. He thought that the character of any obligations assumed by a member of a secret society were to be ascertained by inquiry of such member, and that a refusal to testify should be considered a sufficient ground for the rejection of such candidate as unworthy of Christian fellowship. This was certainly sound advice, provided all members of secret societies would fully disclose all the facts in reference to secret societies, (i. e., cease to be secret societies) so that the church could form an intelligent judgment as to their character, but if such lodge member merely gave his opinion of the character of his obligation without telling what it was, it amounted to no more than this, that if any person charged with wrong doing justifies himself, then he is to be received to the church without further question. Such advice was certainly most indefinite and misleading.

On the 31st of March the resolution was presented to the church, and though the day was stormy the attendance was large, and all came expecting a discussion of the question. But on the resolution being presented, no one was found to second it, and of course no action was taken. This was regarded as an easy triumph for the lodge. They had not only prevented any action, but what they dreaded most, a discussion. An article in the Cleveland Herald, full of falsehood and scurrility, showed how the matter was regarded by the Masons. And now, with the hope that some of the professed Anti-masons in that church may review and reconsider their action, I wish to call their attention to the practical results of what they did at that church meeting.

1st. The church, with a single exception, testified that Freemasonry, with all its profane obligations and its Christ-excluding religion, was not unworthy of Christian fellowship. They said this under the light, and emphasised their testimony by proceeding at once to admit a Freemason.

2d. They neglected an opportunity to put on record a testimony against Freemasonry in which a large majority of the church would have concurred, and which would have defined their position as an Anti-masonic church.

3d. They suppressed all discussion on a question vitally affecting the interests of the church and the interests of Christianity throughout the land.

4th. They virtually said to those forty-two young people who came into the church, that this subject was unworthy of their investigation; that the faithful warnings of Pres. Finney and others were wholly uncalled for, and that whatever men might do in the lodge or elsewhere, if they only swore that they would always conceal it, then such conduct should be no bar to church fellowship.

5th. They sent joy into every lodge and saloon where the knowledge of their action shall come; and humiliation and sorrow to all who believe in the wisdom which is first pure and then peaceable, and who are waiting for the kingdom of Christ.

With none but the kindest feelings and much personal respect for many of the members of the church in Wakeman, I am sorrowfully yours. H. H. Hinman.

Record of Another Seceder.

Romulus, N. Y., April 6, 1877.

John Evans died of consumption last June. Some seven or eight years ago he joined the Masonic fraternity at Somerset, No. 639. He took three degrees, became disgusted and left them. A Methodist minister was the master of the lodge at the time he was raised to the "sublime degree" of Master Mason and we should judge that he calculated to make him keep the great secret for all time, as the blow from the setting maul laid him out stark and stiff for three hours. They thought they had done the business for him to perfection. At all events Evans was satisfied with what Masonry he had and concluded to enter the lodge no more forever. He betrayed no secrets, but like an honest man he warned his fellow men to beware of Masonry. From that time on he knew what it was to suffer persecution. A notice was served on him by the lodge to appear before them and be tried for unmasonic conduct. Of course he paid no attention to the summons, but left Somerset a little more than two years ago. He attended brother Barlow's lecture while in Romulus, (as Mr. Barlow made some telling hits on the ancient institution in this place.) Mr. Evans was asked by a friend if what Barlow said was true. He replied, "Every word is true as the Gospel."

We believe that brother John Evans was a sincere and earnest Christian, and therefore his testimony is in every way entitled to belief. Hoping that I may live to see the day that the pure light of the Gospel may permeate every heart and drive out all the secret works of darkness is my fervent prayer. Yours truly,

J. V. ADAIR.

"WHEREAS I WAS BLIND NOW I SEE."

PERRYSVILLE, Ind., Apr. 6, 1877.

Editor Cynosure:—I was made a Mason in the spring of 1868, in the Lexington Lodge, No. 482, and demited from the lodge March 16, 1874, and still hold my demit. I not only demited but have renounced and denounced, and I am exposing the thing as far as I went, to the Master Mason's degree. I was traveling as an itinerant minister in the United Brethren church when I became a Mason. They got me out of the church. I thought the church wrong then, but, upon a careful examination of Masonry, I find its position is right and I am now back in the church and traveling as an itinerant and mean to fight it out on this line; and whereas I once opposed you and the paper, I now endorse the Cynosure and the anti-secret movement, and bid you God speed in the good work, and will do you all the good I can.

I am yours in Christ,

HENRY JOHNS.

THE LATEST PHASE OF GRANGISM.

Editor Cynosure:—DEAR SIR: The following special dispatch appears in the Cincinnati Enquirer of April 7th, sent by its correspondent at Washington, Guernsey county, Ohio:

"The grangers in the northern part of the county have begun to tire of reading papers on the wrongs perpetrated by middlemen, and have started other amusements to while away the time. The latest is the rat-hunt, where all the grangers in a neighborhood combine to exterminate all the rats they have at one time."

This, perhaps, would be a far less demoralizing occupation in which the "well-tried, true and trusty sons of Grand Master Hiram" might engage, than is their ceaseless work of moulding the "rough" into the "perfect ashlar" by the tricks of Masonic art. It is recommended to their special attention. Let them try it for the sake of victimized humanity. Why not learn to skin rats rather than their unsuspecting fellow citizens? QUID NUNC.

ON THE WAR PATH.

DEAR BRETHREN:—About two years ago, after reading an article in the Christian Cynosure, by one who had once been a victim of the lodge, setting forth the errors of Masonry, it seemed right to me to send that article to a minister of the London Presbytery, Ont. He had declared himself to be a Mason of thirty-six years standing. You may judge of my surprise when, at the last meeting of Presbytery, on the 20th of March, I heard the Rev. James B. Duncan rise in his place and refer to that communication in language to the following effect:

"Mr. Donaldson has a morbid mind. He is given to slander. He is in habit and repute a slanderer, He wrote me sometime ago a long letter, charging me with the most fearful crimes. He is undoubtedly insane." I wished to reply, but the moderator would not allow me to defend myself. At the close of the Presbytery I met Mr. D. on the sidewalk before some of the members of the court, and asked him to repeat his charge that I was insane. He replied that he had never called me insane; that though others had said I was, he never believed it.

I reminded him it was all very well for him to address me as he had done in court, surrounded as he was by the minions of the lodge, and defended by the wing of a "time-serving" moderator, but why did he not tell those Protestant churches in the United States who had excommunicated him from the fellowship of Christ's church and deposed him from the office of the holy ministry that they "were all insane;" "were slanderers in habit and repute," and that they neither knew what they said nor whereof they affirmed? I said, moreover, that his conduct was only such as we might expect of "a man who had broken God's law to become a Mason, and was living in the habitual violation of that law by remaining in fellowship with Masonry."

At this he turned back with a number of others, saying, "If you do not prove these charges I shall have you libelled for slander and deposed from the ministry. Your proof, sir."

"Does not Jesus say, 'Thou shalt not foreswear thyself, but perform unto the Lord thine oaths?'" "Yes." "Are you not a Freemason?" "Yes." "You could not be a Mason unless you had foresworn yourself. I have proven my first charge." "How do you prove that I must break God's commands to remain a Mason?" "Does not Jesus say, 'Thou shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths?'" "Yes." "Can you as a Christian minister perform your Masonic oath and obligation to the God of the Bible who is the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? No, sir, you cannot. You dare not say you can. Now go and libel me for slander if you please." He went away saying, "Mr. Donaldson, I will send the Masons after you."

What will become of him if I send the Masons after him. About four years ago I stated the difficulties I had in saving my church from the snares of Masonry. Mrs. Duncan then asked me in open court if I could give the obligation of an Entered Apprentice. I gave it. Many voices were heard—for our presbytery is a very large one—"Yes, Mr. Donaldson does know something about Masonry." Mr. Duncan was standing, having the floor: "Yes, Mr. Moderator, Mr. Donaldson does know something of Masonry." Query. Did he not then violate his Masonic obligation; perjure himself, and so forfeit his life? Time he would think on it, ere the knife of the executioner cut his throat from ear to ear, and pull his tongue out by the roots, and leave him lying as another was found not many days ago in this province, with a knife in his hand, while the jury returned the verdict, "a suicide!"

We pray that Jesus may make this blind slave of the lodge a free man, and give him grace to repent of his sin, confess it, and find forgiveness, that so his last days may be better than his first, is the sincere prayer of

Yours for the war,

JAMES DONALDSON.

OUR REFORM AND ITS POWER.

VIOLA, Ill.

Editor Cynosure:—I have just received a package of friend Chalfant's "Court House Ring," "Secret Empire," and "Reasons against Secret Societies," for distribution. They make an excellent addition to the already grand army of tracts and leaflets, and add another peal to the loud call for a "tract fund" to give these faithful messengers wings.

A voice just now whispers, "And yet you need more!" Somewhat astonished I instinctively asked, "What more can be said? We have faithful exposes, confessions, experiences, philosophical and religious treatises, histories drawn from the 'Secret Empire's' own records, and a long list of faithful sermons from God-fearing ministers who give no uncertain sound on the Gospel trumpet. What can be said to arouse a morally dead world if they will not hear these peals of thunder already playing all around this mount of human depravity—secret societies."

The voice whispered again: "See Milton's Paradise Lost. How Michael with his host of the mighty cherubim and seraphim fought with Satan and his host—and fought in vain. Though using every known weapon their hands could employ; even hurling rocks, hills, mountains and whole promontories on the devoted heads of the arch fiends, still they survived; though damaged, yet not conquered, nor driven from the sacred precincts of heaven." "What shall be done? Must the throne of heaven fall?"

God, the King, turned to his Son, well beloved and heir of his throne, to whom all power and might and dominion is given, and said: "To you it is given, O Son! to conquer and subdue." And one blast of his righteous fury hurled the rebel crew from heaven, after a long and fruitless fight by Michael and his seraphim band, God rewarding their faithfulness.

Ah! yes, I see. That war was brought on especially against the Son of God. Satan would not acknowledge allegiance to him; claimed priority to him, and superior merit; and for this reason contested his right to the throne of heaven. Nor could he be turned from his purpose though argued with, reasoned with, plead with and warned of what would follow his treasonable rebellion, by seraph's tongue. The Son of God alone had power to quell that rebellion.

Yes, I see. Christ's reign on earth is contested now, and on the same old ground of "priority of age," "superiority of power," foot-prints of the same arch-fiend, Satan, again attempting to dethrone God himself and by the same means, and for himself to claim ominipotence, and worship.

Are not these they which are spoken of in Revelations as "making war with the Lamb, and the Lamb overcame them for he is Lord of lords and King of kings."

Yes, we need yet more to be said. Perhaps it is brother Ronayne's convention of seceders from the lodge, together with all that fear God, and honor Christ as man's Redeemer. We need to raise an ensign for Christ, inscribed "Lord of lords and King of kings," as our battle-flag and go forth to battle against the dark legions of Satan under his black flag of "secrecy or death." Yes, we need to swing out this great light of heaven to go before the camp of Israel as a cloud by day and as a fire by night, that all nations may distinguish between the Lord's hosts, and his enemies. May this soon be done.

Still, let all these "lower lights" be kept burning.

Court-house rings, election frauds, salary grabs, and a criminal palliation of treason are but the legitimate out-growths from hearts where Christ is dethroned and Satan crowned thrice illustrious all puissant. J. C. GRAHAM.

OUR MAIL.

Preston Allen, West Newton, Ind., writes:

"I must save my own papers. I think I will get them bound in a book. They are too valuable to tear up or be lost. I wish every family in the United States could have a copy of the Cynosure."

George Head, St. Louis, Mo., writes:

"I discovered during the past three or four years that there was something wrong in the Christian churches generally, as far as my acquaintance and observation went. But to solve the problem I was not able. One thing I have remarked to my brethren, that a man or woman or child, who has chosen the Lord for their example to prepare in this life to enjoy his blessedness in life to come, cannot look upon iniquity with the least degree of allowance, any more than Christ can. And who, as a Christian, can forswear himself and not defile his heart which he has consecrated to Christ's service, being made a temple of God for the indwelling of his Holy Spirit. O brethren, my soul cries out in your behalf to him who is able to keep you and establish you in every good word and work."

A. Shelley, McPherson, Kan., writes:

"I have just returned from Chase county. While there I learned that there were thirteen votes cast for the American ticket in that county."

G. M. Elliott, Selma, Ala., writes:

"Your paper is highly appreciated among us, and is, we trust being a great source of good. After we read it we send it to other parts of the country to be read and have its influence. We hope the hall that is started rolling may continue till its effects may be felt throughout this entire land, and men may be ashamed of their deeds of darkness and turn from them."

A. W. Curtis, Coldwater, Mich., writes:

"I highly prize the Cynosure and shall endeavor to extend its circulation."

M. Liscomb, Goodrich, Mich., orders the Cynosure sent to Rev. T. McCroy of Goodrich, and writes:

"He said (after D. P. Rathbun's lecture) for his part he thought that Masonry had been haudled with silk gloves on about long enough; that he should not handle it in that way ary longer."

S. E. Farwell, Waverly, Iowa, writes:

"I never have belonged to any secret society, nor I never have applied to join, neither have I wanted to. I think what lectures we have had here by Mr. A. Smith and Mr. Ronayne, has been the cause of a good many not joining the Masonic lodge."

S. A. Reynolds, Waverly, Pa., writes:

"To-day while riding along the road a man got in to ride with me, and speaking of Masonry, he said he once worked for a high Mason who gave him free access to his library. Among other books he found one upon Masonry, which he read about half through, and then it was missing. But he had learned enough of the signs and grips to pass as a Mason, and has been many times recognized as such by giving and receiving signs in answer. But still they tell us Masonry has never been revealed."

Rufus Northway, Orwell, O., writes:

"I like the principles your paper advocates and can bid you Go ! speed in your noble work. I am an old man, seventy-seven years old, but intend to fight the harlot while the good Lord spares my life."

M. L. Stinson, Norwich, Vt., writes:

"In the Faculty at Dartmouth College we have one anti secret professor, Prof. J. K. Lord, and he has this winter attempted to begin a reform in the college on that subject. His method, as I understand it, was to convince the members of the Freshman class, that the secret literary societies were opposed to their best interests as students and to persuade them to establish an open class society for literary purposes. I am afraid he has failed to attain so desirable a result, but perhaps the attention of that class having been turned to that subject, the circulation of tracts containing candid and truthful examinations of the character and principles of secret societies may make a few staunch opposers of the existing system of college societies. I am going to do my part toward the attainment of such a result."

P. Woodring, Sumner, Iowa, writes:

"The people are slowly getting their eyes open on this subject. I had a talk with a lawyer of our town who said that he meets Masonry in much of his practice, and advised me never to go to law with a Mason if I could avoid it, as I could not get justice. Yet when I pressed home to him the necessity of doing something to check or counteract this usurper, he said he was willing to let it alone if it let him alone. I told him it did not let him nor me alone if it was as he had just stated. And it was just as it was with the rebels of the South when they fired on Fort Sumpter. They attacked the government, interfered with the law, and how many were willing to let them alone, if they themselves were let alone? Masonry says 'Let us alone,' while it has its bloody hand upon our courts, legislatures, treasury and churches. Said I, 'I don't believe in the let alone policy.'"

A gentleman from Three Rivers, Mich., writes:

"I have contemplated joining some of the secret orders of this place, either the Freemasons or the Odd-fellows, but having some doubts in my mind whether it is altogether right, I have (since a good many friends belonging to either order, are trying to persuade me to join, and again there are some Christian friends trying to keep me back,) concluded to send to your house for the exposures of these orders, as I happened this morning to find out your address, and that you sold such books. I know that if I know what is going on in their lodges, I shall not feel tempted any longer to join either of them, as I rather think that curiosity will be put to rest, and I will be able to walk straight without any secrecy clinging to me."

John J. Swan, Viroqua, Wis., writes:

"There is a Masonic lodge, and an Odd-fellow and grange lodge here, all in a thriving condition (as they say) and unmolested, have things all their own way. I think it time the work of reform began in Viroqua."

L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, Cal., who is writing Anti-masonic articles for the largest paper in that place, writes:

"My heart is in the work and I sympathize with your every movement."

A. I. J. Jackson, Brownsville, Mich., writes:

"I highly congratulate you in the decided stand that you have taken against the prophets of Baal and works of darkness. I came across your dear paper 25 or 30 miles from home in the house of an Anti-mason brother, and on reading the testimonies of those Christian heroes (whose philanthropy seems to have had an eternal grip on the golden rule) I was struck forcibly with the answer of the angel to Elijah that the Lord had left him 7,000 in Israel whose knee had not bowed to the image of Baal nor kissed his feet. May the Lord our God foster the grand army of sacred truth or of his Word, I pray."

Hiram Hough, New Garden, Ind., writes:

"In the death of Wm. Hough we have lost a fast friend of our cause. * * I expect to count the Cynosure a part of my living. For two reasons I expect to continue to take it. In the first place I think the cause needs the support of all true friends of reform, and in the second place I should feel like I had parted with an old and true friend. I always receive it as a welcome visitor."

Rev. A. L. Morey, Lancaster, N. H., writes:

"Fight on against error and superstition—the day cometh."

Thomas Relyea, Watertown, N. Y., writes:

"Freemasonry and other secret societies carry high heads in this place. I voted the American ticket, but it was cast out like all other scattering tickets. I give the papers to those I think will read them and drop them in the book-stores and reading rooms of the city."

Geo. Johnston, Raymond, Iowa, mentions several names, and writes:

"These persons will renew. I know of no other paper that will fill the place of the Cynosure."

We will be glad to receive the renewals of those whose names you send us.

J. S. Shock, Cromwell, Ind., writes:

"I have also long since consecrated myself and substance to the cause of the reformation in which your paper is engaged, viz., opposition to lodge rule and corruption. My health is poor and my financial resources limited, but my confidence is in the God of truth, and I pray that he may guide us to certain victory."

O. C. Stoughton, Maquoketa, Iowa, writes:

"The good work is moving steadily on here."

"A Chip of the Old Block," Oxford, Mich., writes:

"Father is getting old and so it falls to my lot to write you a few lines by request. We are in a secret society town. We have Odd-fellows, grangers and Masons amongst us. Father takes your paper, reads it and then hands it to others."

LESSON XVII.—APRIL 29, 1877.—ELISHA AT DOTHAN.

SCRIPTURE.—2 Kings 6. 8–18. Commit 15–18. Primary Verse, 17.

8. Then the king of Syria warred against Israel, and took counsel with his servants, saying, In such and such a place shall be my camp.

9. And the man of God sent unto the king of Israel, saying, Beware that thou pass not such a place; for thither the Syrians are come down.

10. And the king of Israel sent to the place which the man of God told him and warned him of, and saved himself there, not once nor twice.

11. Therefore the heart of the king of Syria was sore troubled for this thing, and he called his servants, and said unto them, Will ye not shew me which of us is for the king of Israel?

12. And one of his servants said, None, my lord, O king: but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bedchamber.

13. And he said, Go and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him saying, Behold, he is in Dothan.

14. Therefore sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a great host; and they came by night, and compassed the city about.

15. And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, a host compassed the city both with horses and chariots. And his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! how shall we do?

16. And he answered, Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them.

17. And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha.

18. And when they came down to him, Elisha prayed unto the Lord, and said, Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindness. And he smote them with blindness according to the word of Elisha.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them."—2 Kings 6: 16.

TOPIC—"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."—Ps. 34: 7.

Though there be now no Elisha to inform us of danger from the enemy, yet we have one more faithful than he, more keen-sighted, more absolutely possessed of the intentions of the adversary of our souls—and that one is the Holy Spirit. He it is that shall teach us all things and fit us for our warfare. Mark 13: 11; Luke 21: 14, 15; Rom. 8: 26; Eph. 3: 16; 6: 17, 18; 2 Tim. 1: 14; Heb. 4: 12; 1 John 2: 20–27.

How many times has each Christian who has trusted in the Lord Jesus Christ been saved from the snares of the enemy! Not once nor twice—but many, many times. Ps. 34: 17; 1 Cor. 15: 54–57; 2 Cor. 12: 9; Rom. 8: 37; Heb. 2: 14, 15, 18; 1 John 5: 4, 5; Jude 24, 25; Rev. 12: 11.

The hearts that are stayed upon God are kept in perfect peace. It is only the evil plotters that are "sore troubled." "There is no peace, saith the Lord, to the wicked." Job. 15: 20; Prov. 4: 16; Is. 26: 3; 48: 22; 57: 20; John 14: 27; 16: 33; Rom. 3: 16, 17; Phil. 4: 7.

Let us comfort ourselves with the thought that we are not alone—that around us are hosts of unseen spirits battling in our behalf. And when we are delivered, let us not rejoice in our victory as wrought by our own arm, but remember that, "the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them." Gen. 19: 15; 32: 1, 2; Ps. 34: 7; 91: 11, 12; Dan. 6: 22; Is. 63: 9; Acts 10: 1-6; 12: 7.

Elisha's humane and bloodless victory accomplished more for Israel than the most sanguinary triumph could have done. Love conquers more completely than force. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst give him drink, for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." Lev. 19: 18; Prov. 20: 22; 25: 21, 22; Matt. 5: 44; Luke 6: 35, 36; 23: 34; Rom. 12: 14, 20, 21; 1 Cor. 4: 12, 13; Col. 3: 12; 1 Thess. 5: 15; 1 Pet. 3: 9. —Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

The Christian Cynosure

CHICAGO. THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 1877.

"AN IMPOSSIBLE PROPOSITION."

Under this heading the Chicago Tribune, reviewing the National Reform Convention, gives what seems to us, after careful reading, a weak, illogical and imperfect, though labored view of this movement.

Take the following statement of the object of the Convention. The Editor says:

"The object was to insist upon retaining the compulsory reading of the Bible in the public schools, * * * to enforce Sabbath laws, as religious enactments; and to secure an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which shall distinctly make Christianity the recognized legal religion of the land, and certain of its supposed institutions enforceable by law."

This statement would have been much nearer the truth had it run thus: The object was to resist the compulsory banishment of the Bible from the schools by a small minority of infidels, politicians and weak Christians; to rescue our American Sabbath from utter abrogation by the same parties; and to recognize, by a Constitutional amendment the fact that ours is a Christian and not a heathen land.

The Tribune's statement falsifies history to make the National Reformers appear the assailing, instead of the assailed party; it weakly strains in its statement the ground of those whom it wishes to oppose, and affects a contempt which it proves it does not feel by understating numbers in attendance, and by conflicting and self-confuting propositions. As specimens take these two: "Nobody but themselves feel any deep interest in the object." And yet in a few lines he avers: "The proposition to make a religious amendment to the Constitution meets with opposition from the majority of the Christian people." If there was a "slim attendance" on the late convention the attendance on the anti-slavery reform meetings in the old City Hall of Chicago used to be far more slim. Yet that reform grew popular, and the Tribune itself rode into power and patronage on its popularity. Is there no person about the "Tribune building" who remembers the meetings of those "impracticables" James H. Collins, Philo Carpenter, Dr. Dyer, Flavel Bascom and the rest of us in that old smutty City Hall? Has even Gov. Bross forgotten that he was once an abolitionist?

Let us see who are the impracticables now, the Tribune or we? It says:

"Surely it is sufficient that fundamental morals are acknowledged (by the Constitution) as necessary to civil society, * * and that equal protection is insured to the various religious sects."

But what are "fundamental morals" in a Constitution without any God and where all religions are on a level? We opine that the Tribune editor will find more difficulty in acknowledging "fundamental morals" without God, than the Jew did in getting his pound of flesh off a living man without drawing blood. Does he mean fundamental Mormon morals? That means polygamy and assassinating the enemies of the church. John D. Lee, as his confession shows, was sworn in the Endowment House to obey Brigham Young, and he did obey him in the Mountain Meadow massacre, as the Danite did who slew the Governor of Missouri. Does the Tribune mean "fundamental" Chinese "morals?" That means not marriage but a harem; as also do the morals of the Turk. Supreme love to God is of course dropped from the Tribune's moral code. But is equal love to man also? If not, what justice? what reciprocity? what "do as you would be done by" remains in a community after Christ's doctrine of marriage is taken away? What is the morality of wills and the descent of property where each man gets as many wives as he wishes? Who are widows and who are orphans in such a community? Or does the Tribune's "fundamental morals" care nothing for widows and orphans? Fundamental morals outside the Christian religion on this earth is the morality of the bowstring, the stiletto, or the sword, —the morality of mere brute force. And to omit God and the Bible from government and instruction, is to omit all that the Tribune can rationally mean by "fundamental morals."

Nor is its idea of constitutional "protection to the various religious sects," a whit more practical or rational. It must mean as in Spain, protecting Papists in suppressing the "various sects;" because our Constitution does not protect Papists in suppressing heretics, they hate it as Protestant, and complain that they are not protected in their religion. It means protecting moral opposites and antagonisms, polygamy and monogamy, child-murder and motherhood, hospitals for widows and burning widows, Bible-reading and expelling Bibles, oaths in courts and no oaths, chaplains and no chaplains, Sabbaths and no Sabbaths, loving enemies and stabbing them,—all these stand shouldering in loving harmony under the Tribune's "protection to various religious sects," for they are all practiced in the name of religion.

No; the Tribune, and not the convention it reviews, is harboring an impossible idea, viz., a constitution indifferent to all religions, and protecting all alike. Its attempt to put the true religion on a level with false religions, is to deny that there is any true religion; for there is no true religion which is on a level with false religions, neither can there be such an absurdity. When the Tribune affects to put the Lord Jesus Christ on a constitutional level with the image in a Chinese pagod at San Francisco it not only insults the Saviour of men, but it supports the falsehood that the two are equal. And if that paper has not yet reached the Ingersoll level of dispensing with oaths and religious sanctions altogether in civil government, it must either soon do so or return to the clear and substantial ground of our Fathers, laid down as the first plank in our American platform, to wit: "That ours is a Christian and not a heathen Government;" and that the most that false religions can justly demand of our American Constitution and laws is, that we wholly abstain from coercing their consciences or their conduct even, until they commit crime and call it religion. It is surely to be hoped that the Tribune will review its ground, which is worse than ordinary atheism. For putting the true God on a level with idols, since there is no such Being, is not only to deny his existence, but to insult him by such a degrading companionship.

SATURDAY AND SUNDAY.

"God requires and man needs a Sabbath."—Am. Platform, Art. 2d.

We have letters from Prof. E. G. Paine, Wasioja, Minn., and Mr. Geo. W. Hills, of Dodge county, in that State, concerning the above article of our American Platform; also numbers of the Sabbath Recorder and Sabbath Memorial containing able arguments in favor of Saturday instead of Sunday as the Christian Sabbath. The Recorder is the organ of the Seventh-day Baptists and an earnest and able paper. It has sought to draw the Cynosure into the discussion of the question whether Saturday or Sunday is our Sabbath, which we have steadily declined as aside from our special work and promise to our readers.

The above article of our platform was purposely drawn so as to include Seventh-day Baptist in our movement, and leave the issue between them and other Christians to be settled on its own merits. We hope our good and true brother Hills will see that he can accept the American Platform without prejudice to the denomination which he loves. Complaint is made that the Seventh-day Baptists are fined under the Sunday laws of some States for working on that day. The Cynosure is opposed to fining people for obeying their consciences, Baptists or others. Meantime, if we were in a country where the vast majority kept Saturday, we should try and disturb them at their worship on that day as little as possible. With us the particular day kept is not a point of conscience. When God gave the law from Sinai, he gave it to people inhabiting a round globe, whose poles have days six months long. No two men living sixty miles apart East and West, now keep, or can keep, the same twenty-four hours for Sabbath. And it takes just forty-eight hours, i. e. Saturday and Sunday, to keep Sabbath around the globe if the people should begin at any point on Saturday. In this state of the case and question, we cannot but think that the holiness inheres in the INSTITUTION and not in the TIME: and, therefore, if we were in a land of Seventh-day Baptists we should join them, and expect God to approve and meet with us in our worship. One thing our Brother Hills must see. If, being convinced, we become conscientious in the belief that all who receive and keep Sunday break the law of God, we must instantly give up the Cynosure or expect the miracle of the instant conversion of its readers into Seventh-day Christians. This we would do if we believed God and the truth required it, but we do not, and hope that he does not wish us to drop the movement against secret societies. Let us stand shoulder to shoulder on the glorious declaration that God requires and man needs a Sabbath. This proposition helps every man who honestly keeps the Sabbath, whatever the day.

THE NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION.

The convention of the Northwestern States in aid of the religious reform in the Constitution was held last Tuesday and Wednesday in Farwell Hall. It was the first meeting of the kind here, and though well attended by delegates from abroad the apparent indifference of the churches and people here gave the Tribune another opportunity of holding up Chicago as not an American city, but wholly given over in its morals, so far as they may be regulated by votes, to European customs. Five States were represented by one hundred and twenty-five delegates, but instead of an overflowing audience of thousands, of which the subjects discussed and the ability of the speakers were worthy, Chicago was represented by but a few hundreds. It is to be hoped that the means taken to inform and enlist Christian people in this reform will be so successful as to make us forget this feature of the first convention or refer to only with satisfaction at the progress made.

Rev. David McAllister of Philadelphia, the Secretary of the National Reform Association, was properly most active in the Convention, and his address at the opening and subsequent remarks, excited only admiration for his ability, eloquence and tact in carrying forward the meeting He was ably seconded by the secretary, Rev. Dr. Cannon of Wisconsin; by Dr. Jonathan Edwards of Peoria, the chairman; and Rev. Dr. Everts of this city, who, as temporary chairman and vice-president, as well as by an able address on the Bible in schools, showed his hearty co-operation in the objects of the Convention. Other important addresses were made by Rev. Dr. Edwards on taking the chair, and by Rev. M. M. Parkhurst of this city, Rev. Mr.

Williamson of Iowa, and Prof. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College. (A copy of this last address we have obtained and print the first part this week. It deserves a careful reading and none will find it lacking in interest.) During the progress of the Convention brief addresses were made by Rev. J. W. Bain and Hon. J. Y. Scammon of Chicago, Pres. Wallace of Monmouth, and Pres. Blanchard of Wheaton. The best of these were made in reply to the remarks of an objector on the second day, and in discussing the resolutions which were adopted as follows:

Resolved. 1. That it is of the utmost importance in the present stage of our national history to emphasize the fact that this country was settled by Christians who came hither with a free and open Bible and founded free institutions of government on the basis of the principles of the Christian religion.

2. That the most vital national issues of to day involve the relations of Christianity and the state; and that the truth which Christianity teaches concerning these relations never demanded clearer assertion than now, viz: That Almighty God is the ultimate source of all authority in civil government; that Jesus Christ as ruler of nations has given a moral standard for their conduct, and that the standard of his Word is the supreme law.

3. That we perceive with grave apprehensions the determined and often successful attempts which are made to expel the Bible from our public schools, to abolish the oath, prayer in our national and state legislatures, days of fasting and thanksgiving, and other Christian institutions of our State and nation, and so to divorce the American government from all connection with Christianity.

4. That a written constitution, as fundamental law, ought to provide an explicit and undeniable basis for the vital institutions of the nation for which it is formed; and the fact that the Constitution of the United States may be, and is used against the existing institutions of our government constitutes the best of reasons for a religious amendment.

5. That such an amendment of our national constitution, harmonizing as it would with all the precedents of our early history, and with religious acknowledgements in many of our State constitutions, could not conflict with any individual rights of conscience, just as the establishment of State education does not conflict with the rights of citizens who believe that education belongs only to the family and the church, or the constitutional authentication of the war power does not conflict with the rights of those who denounce even defensive war as sin; and, further, if there be any plea for rights of conscience it must be extended against the Christian laws and institutions rather than against a constitutional basis on which they might rest.

6. That the indifference of many professing Christians as well as the assaults of open enemies, call imperatively on all who discern the danger that threatens our Christian institutions of government, to unite and labor earnestly for their maintainance; and that, taking courage from a review of the past, and pledging ourselves to God and to one another, we shall use all means in our power to uphold, perfect and hand down to posterity the inheritance bequeathed to us by our fathers.

—The General Agent and Secretary is now in central and southern Illinois. We shall hear of his labors in due time.

— Bro. Hinman returned last Thursday much encouraged with many developments of the work during his prolonged stay in Indiana and Ohio. He has responded to calls from Iowa and will speak in Baxter and other points, attending the State Convention at Oskaloosa, which promises to be a meeting of more than usual interest.

—Leaving Union City, where the meetings are reported in this number Past Master Ronayne went to Sherwood and Berlin last week, where the three degrees were fully spread before many wondering eyes, among them not the least astonished were the Freemasons themselves. Bro. R. earnestly desires the prayers of Christian people to follow and and bring a blessing on his work. Pray that his labors may be more and more effectual in redeeming his fellows from the yoke of Freemasonry.

—Week after week we have published the renunciations of men for a greater or less time under this soul bondage. It is one of the most encouraging features of the reform, that the truth is thus at length by the grace of God having its proper effect — making more distinct the lines between Christ and the lodge and giving courage to the soul to take its rightful place before its Maker and Redeemer. Let every effort be made to swell the ranks of these "converts."

—In this connection it is not only an act of justice but of satisfaction also, to state that Rev. M. M. Parkurst of the First M. E. church of this city, though having taken many degrees in Freemasonry, has practically given up the order, having been led to see its inconsistency with the profession and walk of a follower of Jesus Christ. We understand that it is some seven years since he has attended the lodge. As his name has appeared once or twice in our columns, it is just that he should have the benefit of this explanation.

—One of the victims of the appalling catastrophe in St. Louis, last week, was Mr. Geo. Frank Gouley, "Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Missouri," and publisher of the Freemason until it was absorbed in the Voice of Masonry of this city. Though strenuous as a partisan of the lodge, and holding, with other leading Masonic writers, those views of the order which distinctly set it forth as a grand religious system most nearly described by Baal-worship, he was, beyond many of his compeers, respectful towards those who held fast to the faith and Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ in opposition to the paganism of Freemasonry, and received the Cynosure to the time of his death.

—The "Council of Nine" was lately referred to in these notes as operating in California against the Chinese after the primitive method of Cain. A dispatch to the daily press gives the following information:

This "Council of Nine" was a committee elected by the Labor Union for the trial of members for offenses against the order. As vacancies occurred the council filled them. It thus became independent of the order, and commanded obedience of members. It was soon found that the members were congenial spirits, and then came suggestions for the commission of the crimes which have since come to light, and many more that were never carried into execution. All the members of the council are now under arrest. Many members of the Labor Union evidently know nothing of the crimes of the "Council of Nine," and believe the order to be only to discourage the employment of Chinese labor by all lawful means.

The oath administered in initiating members to the Labor Union is as follows:

I do solemnly swear that I will keep the secrets of the Order. I further swear that I will assist any brother in need or distress so far as I am able. I further swear that I will aid in executing the laws of the United States of America, so help me God.

There is a secondary degree in the Order, to which the oath is as follows:

I swear before God Almighty that I will carry out and obey all orders of the Council of Nine, whatever they may be. If I do not do so my life is forfeited, and I may be put to death by this Council of Nine.

Not all the members are taken into that degree. The oath administered to a member of the Council of Nine has not yet been obtained, but it is understood to be of the most strict, iron-clad order.

A few simple rules for the arrangement of flower beds may materially enhance the effect produced. Avoid placing rose colored next to scarlet, orange, or violet. Do not place orange next to yellow, or blue next to violet. White relieves any color, but do not place it next to yellow. Orange goes well with blue, and yellow with violet. Rose color and purple always go well together.

The Home Circle.

Considering Thyself.

Look thou with pity on a brother's fall,
But dwell not with stern anger on his fault;
The grace of God alone holds thee, holds all;
Were that withdrawn, thou too wouldst swerve and halt.

Consider thou the frailty of thy flesh,
Thy failures, errors and each secret sin;
Let his sad downfall melt thy heart afresh:
Pity his weakness, seek his soul to win.

Lead back the wanderer to the Saviour's fold;
That were an action worthy of a saint;
But not in malice let the crime be told,
Nor publish to the world the evil taint.

The Saviour suffers when his children slide;
Then is his holy name by men blasphemed,
And he afresh is mocked and crucified
Even by those his bitter death redeemed.

Rebuke the sin, but yet in love rebuke,
Feel as one member in another's pain;
Win back the soul that his fair path forsook,
And mighty and eternal is the gain.

Extent of Gospel Salvation.

"He shall save his people from their sins."

Salvation in all its depths and heights of meaning is a wonderful word. Salvation means "making safe." But safety implies the existence of something from which to be saved, some calamity, danger or evil.

There are many evils in the world —evils physical, moral, domestic, social, and political—but the great source and centre of all human evil is sin: sin in its malignant principle: sin in its envenomed essence; sin in its tyrannical power; sin in its soul-damning guilt; sin in its blighting consequences.

Who may portray the darkness of sin, the discord of sin, the bondage of sin, the impunity of sin, the power of sin, the horrors of sin?

Sin is the mortal disease of the human soul.

All the human race confesses the disease. All systems of philosophy and morals, ancient and modern, recognizes the dire evil.

Now, Christianity comes professedly to cure this disease, and comes for no other purpose. It then becomes a question of supreme importance whether the remedy is adequate to the emergency. What is the extent of this salvation? How far does Christ propose to save men in this world? We answer:

1. He does not propose to save us from trials and tribulations, but to give grace to brave and bear all serenely. He concedes and confesses that 'in the world ye shall have tribulation," but promises, "in me ye shall have peace."

2. He does not propose to save us from temptation, but to save us in temptation, and with the temptation make "a way of escape."

3. He does not propose to save us from errors of intellect, or mistakes of judgment, or wanderings of mind, but to save us from errors of the heart, and wanderings of the will.

4. He does not propose to give us grace that we cannot sin, but grace by which we need not sin. If the words of John's epistle be thought to suggest an impeccable state, "He cannot commit sin because he is born of God," it must be remembered that the word "cannot" is a moral cannot. The word is used here as by Luther when before the hostile assembly of Catholic priests, bishops, and princes, he dared to do right, and said "I cannot do otherwise." The same sense of the word was used by the boy George Washington when he said, "I cannot tell a lie." The word is used in the same sense when we say, of some magnanimous man, "he cannot do a mean thing." By this use of "cannot," we mean that the person is averse to doing a certain thing; it is against the current of his nature —he is not inclined or disposed to do it. This sense of "cannot" is common and unmistakable. In this sense, the holy man "cannot commit sin;" he is averse to it; his whole soul abhors and dreads sin. But still he may sin, by permitting himself to contemplate sin unguardingly, or by approaching sin too near, so as to be blinded or fascinated by it. A person says very consistently, "I cannot look directly over the brink of Table rock at Niagara." And yet he may, in an unguarded moment, approach so near the brink as to fall over! Thus, while Christ does not give us grace by which we absolutely cannot sin, he gives us grace by which we need not sin, and such "a heart in every thought renewed," that we shall have the greatest horror of sin, and consequently the greatest safeguard against sin.

5. Christ does not promise to save us from our ignorance of many things in nature and the Bible, but to so illuminate our minds that we need not and shall not "abide in darkness" respecting our personal salvation.

6. Christ does not promise such maturity that there cannot be any further growth, but such purity of soul as is the necessary condition of normal growth toward maturity.

Maturity of the soul is distant as the end of immortality, but purity is a possible and promised state of the believer here on earth.

The miraculous atonement washes "whiter than snow." The blood of the atonement "cleanseth from all unrighteousness." These terms are absolute.

If the question still be pressed, what is the extent of the promised salvation? we answer affirmatively:

1. This salvation meets and matches the guilt of sin by pardon or justification, free, full, absolute, and eternal.

2. This salvation meets and masters the moral death of sin in the soul, by regeneration, radical, miraculous, divine.

This salvation meets and destroys the envenomed essence of sin in the heart by sanctification entire and spotless.

4. This salvation meets and nullifies the penal consequences of sin by closing the gates of punishment, and opening the gates of the paradise of God to the saved soul.

The salvation then is adequate—is co-extensive with the disease—is perfect.

All the attributes of God unite in a supreme argument for full, free, and final salvation. This will appear when we remember that God commands all men, "be ye holy," and in so commanding he assumes the obligation and responsibility of rendering it practicable for all men to be holy.

And now, when it is announced, "thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins," who will dare mar the music of this divine name, and say, "He shall save his people partially or imperfectly from their sins?"

No, we will not impeach the great Redeemer and declare him incompetent for his self-assumed office. We dare not in secret prayer at the solemn mercy seat whisper, "save me Lord, partly from my sins." The holiness and omnipotence of the enthroned Mediator would rebuke our profane prayer. Nor can any soul, however widely it may reason or rebel, tell the exalted Saviour to his face that he cannot fulfill his promise and pledge to "save his people from their sins."

Do objections, difficulties, and doubts still seem to hedge up the way? Then remember hopefully, joyfully remember that "my God shall supply all you need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

"Now unto God and our Father be glory forever and ever! Amen!" —Guide to Holiness.

How Many would be Left.

A writers asks the following pungent questions: When the following classes are taken out of our churches how many would be left?

All who will not pay just debts.

All who are hypocritical.

All who are deceitful, and talk about others behind their backs.

All who go into debt without a prospect of paying the same.

All who are proud and scornful, holding themselves above their fellow-men, and shunning those who are less fortunate than themselves.

All who worship money more than they do their Creator.

All who speculate on the ignorance of others.

All who are tattlers.

All who think more of a wicked rich man than they do of a pious poor one.

All who oppress the poor.

All who make long prayers for the sake of being heard and seen of men.

All who are vain and self-conceited.

When these, and a good many others that could be mentioned, are taken out, some churches will be left without a member. The religion of Jesus does not have any of the above defects. It makes the true convert cheerful, hopeful and charitable; disposed to visit the widow and orphan, and to keep unspotted from the world. It does not make one proud, scornful, but on the contrary, makes one desirous of doing good to the weak and humble. and to be kind to all as opportunity may offer. O that we had less pretension in our churches, and more genuine Christianity!—Tenn. Baptist.

Colors.

As, lately, I was busily engaged blowing soap bubbles with a clay pipe, for the amusement of a little girl, and drawing her attention to the beautiful play of colors, it occurred to me, in connection with this little circumstance, that there might indeed be many older persons who are accustomed to regard such effects from the same point of view as did this little child. Schiller has said, " There is often lofty thought in childish play," and so I will say a few words which may attach more interest to this subject. It is a well known fact that all objects are of themselves colorless, and that it is only through their peculiar relation to the light that colors are apparent to the eye. The different shades of color depend upon certain principal conditions of the object; thus, for example, in the plumage of the bird, the difference of coloring is conditional upon the sex, age, and habits. Formerly it was generally received that the color of the plumage was produced by granules of pigment which collected in the cells of the feather. Researches in physics have shown, however, that even the most brilliant coloring materials, such as carmine and cinnabar, are also entirely colorless. Now, the familiar brilliant feathers on the neck of the humming bird only appear purple and gold in a reflected light, but seem of a yellowish brown and dull hue when the rays fall directly through. But, although the colors, in the former sense, are not produced by the granules referred to, they are the result of the chemical and physical nature of the molecules, and the mechanical arrangement in connection with their relation to light; wherefore, by certain changes in the particles, or variations in the rays of light, another appearance is presented. The surface of the feathers is not smooth, but rough, scaly, and ribbed; so that the rays of light are in different ways reflected, broken or arrested, and thus prismatic phenomena arise, since the white light is relieved of its dark rays, and these are then thrown back. Now, in this manner, the appearances of color are produced in the soap bubble, in a glass of water held to the sunlight, in the gloss of hair, the rainbow, fragments of glass, mother of pearl, in all objects, indeed, in which the colors, as such, do not exist, but are produced by the combined reciprocal relation and effect of the substance and light. In burnished, metallic looking plumage, there is as little copper, silver or gold as is contained in the equally beautiful sheath of many beetles or scales of butterflies, etc. Painters produce the most beautiful golden appearance by laying a coat of varnish upon carmine, which produces a purely optical effect.—From the German.

TWO GENTLEMEN.—There are no distinctions of rank when people are in need. Here is one incident of many which pleasantly illustrates this: An old Scotchman was taking his grist to mill in sacks thrown across the back of his horse, when the animal stumbled, and the grain fell to the ground. He had not strength to raise it, being an aged man, but he saw a horseman riding along, and thought he would appeal to him for help. But the horseman proved to be a nobleman who lived hard by, and the farmer could not muster courage to ask a favor of him. But the nobleman was a gentleman, also, and, not waiting to be asked, he quickly dismounted, and between them they lifted the grain to the horse's back. John—for he was a gentleman too—lifted his Kilmarnock bonnet, and said:

"My lord, how shall I ever thank you for your kindness?"

"Very easily, John," replied the nobleman. "Whenever you see another man in the same plight as you were in just now, help him, and that will be thanking me."

Children's Corner

A CHILD'S HYMN.

Oh, how sweet to know that Jesus
Such a faithful shepherd is—
He can tell if one sheep wanders,
Counts the lambkins too as his!

From the flock that seeks his guidance
Never turns he one away;
Folds them by the quiet waters,
Watches them by night and day.

Even I, so small and helpless,
I can come and claim his care;
He will hear my cry and lead me
To those pastures green and fair.

If on earth we love and serve him
Till our little lives are o'er,
Then in heaven his lambs will nestle
Close beside him evermore!

THE FARMER'S PARROT; OR, KEEP OUT OF BAD COMPANY.

One beautiful spring a farmer after working busily for several weeks succeeded in planting one of his largest fields with corn. But the neighboring crows, not having the fear of the law in their hearts, and being anything but teetotallers, found their way to the farmer's corn-field, and departed frequently corned. The farmer not being willing that the germs of a future crop should be destroyed by either fair or foul means, determined to drive the bold marauders to their nests. Accordingly he loaded his rusty gun, with the intention of giving them, upon their next visit, a warm reception.

Now the farmer had a parrot, as talkative and mischievous as those birds usually are; and being very tame it was allowed its freedom, to come and go at pleasure. Strolling around sometime after the farmer's declaration of war against birds in general and crows in particular, whom should it see but a number of those old black robbers engaged industriously in the farmer-like occupation of raising corn. "Pretty Poll" being a lover of company without much caring whether good or bad, hopped over all obstructions, and was soon engaged with them in what I suppose was quite an interesting conversation on the many advantages of a country over a city life. Their friendly talk might have been prolonged had not a passing wind wafted it to the ears of the farmer, who was leisurely smoking his calumet by the cozy fireside.

Up started he, breaking in his hurry the "pipe of peace"—a bad omen for the crows—and with his gun he sallied forth. Reaching his corn-field at length, he saw at a glance (though he overlooked the parrot) the state of affairs. Leveling his gun he fired, and with the report was heard the death scream of three crows and an agonizing shriek from poor Poll.

As the farmer advanced to see what execution he had done, the unwounded crows rose in the air, loudly pleading their cause as they departed. On looking among the murdered crows, great was his surprise to see stretched upon the ground his mischievous parrot, with feathers sadly ruffled and a broken leg.

"You foolish bird," cried the farmer, "this comes of keeping bad company!"

The parrot did not reply—probably because it did not know exactly what to say; but it looked very solemn, which answered just as well. On carrying it to the house the children, seeing its wounded leg, exclaimed:

"What did it, papa? What hurt our pretty Poll?"

"Bad company—bad company!" answered the parrot in a solemn voice.

"Ay, that it was," said the farmer. "Poll was with those wicked crows when I fired, and received a shot intended for them. Remember the parrot's fate, children, and beware of bad company."

With these words the farmer turned round, and with the aid of his wife bandaged the broken leg, and in a few weeks the parrot was as lively as ever, but never forgot its adventure in the cornfield; and if ever the farmer's children engaged in play with quarrelsome companions it invariably dispersed them with its cry, "Bad company—bad company!"—Little Pilgrim.

THE EYE OF AN EAGLE.

The eyes of all birds have a peculiarity of structure which enables them to see near or distant objects equally well, and this wonderful power is carried to the greatest perfection in the bird of prey. When we recollect that an eagle will ascend more than a mile in perpendicular height, and from that enormous elevation will perceive its unsuspecting prey, and pounce on it with unerring certainty; and when we see the same bird scrutinizing, with almost miscrocopic nicety, an object close at hand, we shall at once perceive that he possesses a power of accommodating his sight to a distance, in a manner to which our eye is unfitted, and of which it is totally incapable. If we take a printed page, we shall find that there is some particular distance, probably ten inches, at which we can read the words, and see each letter with perfect distinctness; but if we move this page to a distance of forty inches, or bring it within a distance of five inches, we shall find it impossible to read it at all. A scientific man, would, therefore, call ten inches the focus, or focal distance of our eyes. We cannot alter this focus except by the aid of spectacles.

But an eagle has the power of altering the focus of his eye just as he pleases; he has only to look at an object at the distance of two feet or two miles, in order to see it with perfect distinctness. Of course, the eagle knows nothing of the wonderful contrivance which God has supplied for his accommodation; he employs it instinctively, and because he cannot help it. The ball of his eye is surrounded by fifteen little plates, called sclerotic bones; they form a complete ring, and their edges slightly overlap each other. When he looks at a distant object, this little circle of bones expands, and the ball of the eye being relieved from the pressure, becomes flatter; and when he looks at a very near object, the little bones press together, and the ball of the eye is thus squeezed into a rounder or more convex form; the effect is very familiar to everybody; a person with very round eyes is near-sighted, and only sees clearly an object that is close to him; and a person with flat eyes, as in old age, can see nothing clearly except at a distance; the eagle by the mere will, can make his eyes round or flat, and see with equal clearness at any distance.

PUZZLE DRAWER.

RIDGE PRAIRIE, Ill., Apr. 8, 1877.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The answer to Miss Jennie E. Templeton's enigma is, "Search the Scriptures;" we ought also to obey them.

The answer to E. S. Caylor's enigma is "Rutherford B Hayes." We all hope that he is an Anti-mason.

In the Cynosure of March 29th Charles J. Miller sends an enigma which is composed of 32 letters, and the answer is "Meet on the level and part on the square." Send us another one, Charlie, we like long ones.

Your paper grows more and more interesting every week. We can hardly wait for the next. Mother sends your valuable paper to different ones; some like to read them and some dislike them May the time soon come that all secret societies will be crushed out entirely.

Will you please publish our enigma

It is composed of 9 letters.

My 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 is the name of a great man.

My 6 is a personal pronoun.

My 7 and 8 is an indefinite article.

My 9 is also an indefinite article.

My whole is the name of a State in the United States.

Ever your faithful friends,
E. & S. YOUNG.

VARICK, N. Y., April 4, 1877.

MR. EDITOR:—I send answers to the puzzles published March 29th.

I gave my life for thee
My precious blood I shed,
That thou mightst ransomed be,
And quickened from the dead;
I gave my life for thee,
What hast thou given for me?

O let thy life be given,
Thy years for me be spent,
World fetters all be riven,
And joy with suffering blent;
Give thou thyself to me,
And I will welcome thee.

Answer to the second: "Meet on the level and part on the square."

I also send a puzzle for the "Puzzle Drawer," and would like to see it in your paper.

Take a W, an N, S, P, R and a D,
Add two O's, and a spring flower you'll see.

Home and Farm.

A SENSIBLE PLACARD.—The French Minister of Finance has caused to be posted in the crossways of the forestal domains a placard which it would be wise for the citizens of all countries to have before their eyes:

MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE.—This placard is placed under the protection of good sense and decency.

Hedgehog—Lives on mice, small rodents, slugs, and grubs—animals hurtful to agriculture. Don't kill the hedgehog.

Toad—Farm-assistant: destroys from twenty to thirty insects an hour. Don't kill the toad.

Mole—Is continually destroying grubs, larvæ, palmer-worms, and insects injurious to agriculture. No trace of vegetation is ever found in its stomach. Does more good than harm. Don't kill the mole.

May Bug and its Larvæ or Grub—Mortal enemy of agriculture; lays from seventy to eighty eggs. Kill the May bug.

Birds—Each department loses several millions annually through insects. Birds are the only enemies able to contend against them victoriously. They are the great caterpillar-killers and agricultural assistants. Children, don't disturb their nests.

Children will be paid 25 centimes for every 500 May bugs placed in the hands of the garde-chappetre.

Children, or persons suffering from infectious diseases, should not be allowed to touch or fondle domestic animals, as cats and dogs, as these are frequently the means by which contagion is carried to others.

Scorches made by overheated flat irons can be removed from linen by spreading over the cloth a paste made of the juice pressed from two onions, one-half ounce white soap, two ounces fuller's earth, and one half pint vinegar. Mix, boil well and cool before using.

To remove freshly spilt ink from carpets, first take up as much as possible of the ink with a teaspoon. Then pour cold sweet milk upon the spot and take up as before, pouring on milk until at last it becomes only slightly tinged with black. Then wash with cold water, and absorb with a cloth without too much rubbing.

HOW TO TEST MILK.—The Country Gentleman advises its readers to test their milk by pouring a given quantity into a small cup arranged to be heated in a water bath. When the temperature of ninety degrees is reached the smell of garlic, putridity, fever or udder disease, will unmistakably manifest itself.

Red pepper is said to have a very beneficial effect on domestic fowls and cage birds. The article sold in the drug stores is not always fresh, but every one can cultivate the plant easily.

MILK IN THE LARDER.—A practice is prevalent in some parts of the country which shows the power possessed by milk to absorb the impurities of the atmosphere. It is that of placing a saucer of new milk in a larder to preserve meat or game from taint. It not only serves that purpose, but the milk at the end of a few hours becomes so impure that no animal will touch it.

BRILLIANT WHITEWASH.—A correspondent wishes the recipe given in this column some years ago for the whitewash used on the east end of the White house. For her benefit and the benefit of others it is repeated. Take one-half bushel of nice unslacked lime, slake it with boiling water; covering it during the process to keep in the steam. Strain the liquid through a fine sieve or strainer, and add a peck of salt, previously well dissolved in warm water; three pounds of ground rice, boiled to a thin paste; one-half pound of powdered Spanish whiting, and one pound of clean glue which has been previously dissolved by soaking it well, and then hang it over a slow fire in a small kettle within a larger one filled with water. Add five gallons of hot water to the mixture, stir it well, and let it stand for a few days covered from dust. It should be put on hot, and for this purpose it can be kept in a kettle on a portable furnace. It is said that about a pint of this mixture will cover a square yard upon the outside of a house if properly applied. Fine or coarse brushes may be used, according to the neatness of the job required. It answers as well as oil paint for wood, brick, or stone, and is cheaper. It retains its brilliancy for many years. There is nothing of the kind that will compare with it, either for inside or outside walls. Buildings or fences covered with it will take a much longer time to burn than if they were painted with oil paint. Coloring matter may be put in and made of any shade desired. Spanish brown will make a reddish pink, when stirred in, more or less deep, according to the quantity. A delicate tinge of this is very pretty for inside walls. Finely pulverized common clay, well mixed with Spanish brown, makes a reddish stone color; yellow ochre stirred in makes a yellow wash, but chrome goes further, and makes a color generally esteemed prettier. It is difficult to make rules, because tastes differ. It would be best to try experiments on a shingle and let it dry. Green must must not be mixed with lime; it destroys the color, and the color has an effect on the whitewash which makes it crack and peel.

SENSATIONAL PREACHING.—We have far too much of this irreverent and flippant handling of the Word of God in our American pulpit. Dogmatic contradiction of old truths and mirthful caricature of the Christian experience of former generations, for the sake of a smile or a laugh among the auditors, is not the Scriptural way of preaching the Gospel. Extravagant assertion of one's own opinion or theory in direct antagonism to the plain teachings of the Bible, is not the way to establish truth, honor God, or save souls. Picturesque word-painting of beautiful material scenery, or brilliant corruscations of fancy amid the stars and the flower gardens, however it may satisfy the yearnings and win the approval of the world, is not true pulpit eloquence. Moody, with his rough and homely phrase, but "blood-earnestness" and devotion, resting every utterance of his own on the testimony of God, is much nearer the true standard of Christian eloquence, as exemplified in such preachers as Paul, or Augustine, or Luther, or Chalmers, than all this garniture of art, intellect, and æsthetic culture, which, in many pulpits of our day, is employed rather to conceal than to expound the truth.—Interior.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

MISS F. E. WILLARD ON THE "I WILLS" OF CHRIST.

The following, reported in the Globe, is a Bible reading by Miss Willard in the Park-street church, Boston:

We associate the personal pronoun I with a great many of the cares and wants of life. We say, "I need," "I wish," "I hope," "I fear," "I love," but we do not utter —and every one of us knows it right well—any of these expressions with such a force behind them, with such a significance in them, with such a distinct emphasis upon them as when we say "I will." Scientific men, the more they examine into these wonderful things of nature, the more they affirm that there is but one force, that is, will force, God's will acting vividly, constantly on the matter which is in his hands. And your wills, little though they are, are made in the image of heaven, and your wills shall decide your everlasting destiny. I would ask you to consider some of the "I wills" of God. When God took upon him our form that he might become one of us and tell us that God is life, again and again we have these words "I will."

THE FIRST TIME THAT WE COME TO THEM is in the eighth of Matthew, and it is in the third verse:

"When he was come down from the mountain great multitudes followed him.

"And behold there came a leper and worshiped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

"And Jesus put forth his hand and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed."

Jesus had lived that wonderful life of subjectiou at Nazareth; he had been out in the wilderness tempted of the devil that he might be touched by the feeling of our infirmities, and he had bowed him to the Word of God. It was after this that we got the idea that all men's weal shall be all men's care. It seems to me there is something wonderfully significant in this "I will." The very first time that he uttered this word was to drive away the leprosy. The "leprosy" was a figure of speech representative of sin; that sin which his touch can drive out of every one of us. Do you not believe that there are diseased souls as well as diseased bodies? Do you not believe that there is such a thing as a SPIRITUAL PARALYTIC?

that there is such a thing as a person blinded spiritually? Do you not believe that there are ears spiritually deaf? tongues that are spiritually dumb. God can touch your blinded eyes and your deaf ears so that you can see spiritual things and hear spiritual sounds, and he can loosen the tongues that are dumb. Tongues which we have heard used in other places; tongues which in the social meetings and in other places we have heard used so frequently, with such alacrity, with so much of felicity, so untiringly, so incessantly and so constantly, whose voices have not been heard in the assemblies of the Lord. O, may he show to us that he wants these tongues loosened to-day! None has a voice more sweet, more gentle, than a woman's voice, and the Lord wants her to use it for him.

IT IS IN OUR POWER

to lay hold upon the word of God, and it is culpable on our part if we do not. Not to dwell longer upon this, let me turn to Mark and the first chapter and the seventh verse: "Come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men." It does not matter how successfully we cast the gospel net or how much we get in it. It is only with Christ to help us in the work in the river and in the mighty sea that we can ever "become fishers of men." Now let us look into John, who of all the evangelists was likened to an eagle. In the sixth chapter there are a number of "I wills" six, I think; and the first is in the fortieth verse.

"And this is the will of him that sent me, that every on which seeth the son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

None other can raise us up. Then in the forty-fourth verse. See how much importance he attributes to this. He repeats it:

"No man can come to me, except the Father, which has sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day."

Then in the fifty-fourth verse he repeats it again:

"Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

Christ is our food. How could he have represented himself more successfully to us? Food is the fibre of our fibre, the tissue of our tissues, the life of our life. As food is so intimately incorporated with what we are that we could not live a moment almost without it, and we are the result of assimilation in all outward appearances, he took that example, which by close communion with us would show us clearly that he was willing to have us vitally joined to him who is our safety. Now, in the fourteenth chapter of John, that most blessed chapter in the whole revelation, there is another "I will." It is in the third verse:

"And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also."

You will find other blessed "I wills" in this same chapter, and in the thirteenth, fourteenth and sixteenth verses:

"And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son."

"If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it."

"And I will pray the Father, and and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever."

CHRIST AS OUR PLEADER.

Yesterday, in the ladies' meeting in Pilgrim Hall, I saw one dear lady pray for the lady misssonaries in Turkey and India, now in such peril from war and famine; and as she prayed on, her soul became more and more engaged in prayer; and suddenly becoming faint, she said to Mrs. Bowker, "Finish the prayer for me." And Mrs. Bowker rose and said, "Let us sing 'What a Friend we have in Jesus.'" Ah, that was best! Let Christ finish the prayer; he who standeth at the right hand of God presents our prayers and adds to them his own. He knows all our prayers, and he presents them gladly to the Father. "I will pray the Father and he will give you another Comforter."

Then, in the eighteenth verse:

"I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you."

Then again, in the twenty-first verse:

"He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself unto him."

Then in the fifteenth chapter and twenty-sixth verse:

"But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."

And then again in the sixteenth chapter and seventh verse:

"Nevertheless, I tell you the truth: It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send him unto you."

Now look into the twenty-second verse of the same chapter:

"And ye now therefore have sorrow; but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you."

In the seventeenth chapter and twenty-fourth verse we read:

"Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me; for thou lovest me before the foundation of the world."

A LAST QUESTION OF CHRIST.

Now turn to the fifth chapter and the fortieth verse:

"And ye will not come to me that ye might have life."

Here is "will not," but it is not from the lips of Christ. "And ye will not come to me." Is there any one of us that will take that message to-day? Any one who will dare to take it as applying to himself? Now one last question of Christ. It is in Matthew, 20: 32: "And Jesus stood still and called them and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you?" As we read this, as we take it home to our souls, let us remember that he is standing here to-day, asking it to us: "What will ye that I shall do unto you?" Please notice that every time his declaration is "I will." It is radiating, it is benignant, it is self-forgetting. It is not for his own sake; it is for your sake and for my sake that he put aside the glory of his Father, and may you and I now ask the question: What sort of "I wills" are we uttering? Is it the "I will" of pleasure? Is it the "I will" of intellect? Is it the "I will" of the wayward, treacherous heart? or is it the "I will" that lays hold of eternal life? Whose "I will" shall it be? the "I will" of our mind, or the "I will" of God? Oh, may you pray, to-day, for what you want. May you pray that your eyes may receive sight, and if there is anybody here to-day, that don't believe this Bible, and can pray no other prayer pray this: "What shall I do?" and you and I who have been longer on the way, and are in danger of weariness, let us have this saying in answer to him: "Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean;" and he will answer, "Be thou clean." This Gospel presents to us a person, it is Christ; a presence, it is the Holy Spirit in our heart. May this spirit rest upon us, and may these "I wills" of Christ become to us our glory.

—Rev. S. B. Treat, for many years a secretary of the American Board died on Wednesday, the 28th ult., aged seventy three at his home in Boston.

NAT'L REFORM CONVENTION.

is to be wholly secular. It comes from, cares for, and is responsible to man only. Men are bound to confess God and obey him, but nations have nothing to do with him. The standard for laws, institutions and customs is not God's Word but man's opinion. The state cannot sin against God for it has no relations to him. This is the view of the state held by all those who are opposed to the Christian religion and by some who profess to favor it.

We hold on the contrary that government derives its just powers from God; that the magistrate fines, imprisons and hangs as a servant of God; that the nation is directly responsible to God first, and to man afterwards; that our nation is under obligation to establish a religion but bound not to establish a church; that the state is a moral agent or personality; that it is held by God's law,—what he commands it must do; what he forbids it must leave undone. In all its ways it must acknowledge him. Beyond the line of his law it dare not go. If it passes it then it sins.

HERE IS A DISTINCTION WITH A DIFFERENCE..

Is the state human or divine in its origin? Is the nation an agent or an instrument? Can it sin or is it morally irresponsible for its acts?

Take for example laws respecting Sabbath observance, profanity, gambling, Bible in schools, bigamy and others of like character. If now the state is a moral agent, deriving its power from God, it is entitled to pass laws prohibiting these acts because God makes it his minister for the express purpose of maintaining his honor. If on the other hand the state is purely secular it has no standard of right to which to appeal. If a majority think it expedient to rest one day in seven or ten they have a right to do so, but no right to require me to rest if I think otherwise. If certain men think it wrong to swear they need not, but they have no right to pass a law that I shall not be profane. If men wish to pay a minister or a priest they may do it but they have no right to tax me to support a chaplain in army or navy or prison. If men build a school of their own they may read the Bible in it as much as they choose but not one penny of my money have they a right to touch for such a purpose.

The state is human or divine. If it is human it is to be controlled by men. If it is of God his law is its law. There is no middle ground on which to stand, if the state can sin it must obey God's word. If the state is a mere human instrument without moral accountability it cannot sin.

Religious Intelligence

—The first Wesleyan Methodist church has been established in California under the labors of Rev. G. W. Townsend, formerly of Michigan. The little band is at Woodland, Yolo county, and numbers sixteen with cousiderable additions expected.

--According to their statistics for 1876 the ministers of the Brethren (Tunker) church in this country number nearly 1500.

—Spurgeon, the great London preacher, has been compelled to reliquish his pulpit for a while and rest for fear of severe brain disorder.

—American Bible Society has received the past year about $400,000 in donations and legacies. It issued 850,000 volumes and about 200,000 periodicals. The American Tract Society has received in the same time in donations and legacies about $100,000. It circulated nearly 300,000 volumes, about 6,000,000 tracts and 5,400,000 periodicals.

—Among the delegates to the General Conference of the U. B. church to meet at Westfield, Ill., May 10, are names well known to our reform as the following: Best, Kretzinger, Ambrose and Hurless from Illinois, Wright and Alwood from Ohio, Floyd, Shuck and Ervin from Indiana, Bell and Loggan from Kansas, Sherk from Canada, Luce from New York, Geeslin and Beauchamp from Missouri, Buchwalter and Drury from Iowa, and many others good and true.

—The Rev. Isaac E. Beach, who died recently at Bridgeport, Conn., in his seventy-fifth year, never rode on a railroad nor sailed on a steamboat, and was never outside the State of Connecticut. He read the Bible through in course ninety-nine times, each reading being noted on the fly-leaf of the copy most used.

—The Moravians have four churches in Philadelphia, two in New York, and one in Brooklyn. The largest number of communicants in one place is in Bethlehem, Pa., which is 1,200. The total number of communicants in the American Province is 9,212. being an increase for the past year of not quite 300.

—The Congregationalists will hold their next National Council at Detroit, Michigan, in November. The basis of representation in the council is one delegate from each local conference for every ten churches and major fraction thereof, besides one delegate from each State body, and one for each 10,000 communicants and major fraction thereof. The national benevolent societies and the theological seminaries are also represented by one honorary delegate each.

—While Rev. Mr. Murray does not honer his own pulpit by his worldliness, he does pay a tribute to real worth, whatever his sincerity, by the following declaration: "I believe in revivals. I have drawn most of my inspiration in preaching from such men as Lyman Beecher, Finney, Nettleton and Dr. Kirk. I believe sincerely in Mr. Moody's work."—Ex.

News of the Week.

—Two prominent physicians of this city died last week, Drs. Beebe and Freer. Both stood exceptionally high in their profession and both were connected with medical schools here.

—Ross Winans, a distingushed inventor and machinist, died at Baltimore on the 11th, aged 81 years. He was the inventor of many of the appliances now used in locomotives and cars. The heavy freight engine known as the "Camel's Back" was his invention, and it is also stated that he was the original inventor of the railroad coach as now constructed.

—The search in the ruins of the St Louis fire up to Monday morning had been unsatisfactory in finding any bodies. Much the larger part of the debris has been turned over, and the belief is general that there cannot be more than two or three bodies remaining in the ruins. This belief is strenghtened greatly by the fact that all the help of the hotel, excepting the head waiter and the girls known to have been killed have reported, and all guests excepting one been heard from.

—The latest from New Orleans indicates that enough members will go over from Packard to the Nicholls legislature to form a quorum, and thus virtually transfer the government quietly to the latter, leaving Packard no alternative but resignation.

—A telegram from Constantinople April 15th says: "A Russian yacht arrived to-day to take the members of the embassy to Odessa the moment they receive orders to quit Constautinople. The Porte believes that the rupture will be delayed until Russia has communicated her intentions to the Powers, but no hope of a peaceful settlement is entertained. Russian subjects in Turkey are to be placed under the protection of the German embassy. Constantinople will be declared in a state of siege immediately after the rupture."

Lord Derby has sent the following dispatch, dated April 12th, to the British Charge d'Affaires at Constantinople: "SIR: The Turkish Ambassador called to-day and left a copy of the circular on the subject of the protocol. I expressed my deep regret to Musurus Pasha at the view the Porte had taken. I thought it unnecessary to enter on any further discussion of a step which had been adopted by the Porte after full consideration, and could not be retraced. I said, however, it did not seem clear whether the Porte would send an ambassador to St. Petersburg or not to treat on the question of mutual disarmament. Musurus Pasha stated that Turkey was not prepared to adopt any such measure, and expressed the opinion that matters could not be settled satisfactorily unless the Powers should consent to annul the protocol. I replied that the divergence between the two governments appeared to be so wide as to render further discussion useless, and I said I did not see what further steps England could take to avert the war which appeared inevitable. Musurus Pasha answered that the attitude of his government was simply defensive, that they did not desire war, but they would prefer it to the sacrifice of national independence which appeared to be involved in an acceptance of the protocol."

—A telegram to the Daily News from Rome represents that the Vatican is elated at the prospect of war, and ardently hopes that the Russians may gain some preliminary advantages, in which case it has persuaded itself that the war would become geueral.

The Supreme Conclave of Heptasophs has been in session in New Orleans. What are the Heptasophs? It must mean either the seven wise men or the seven sophomores, but they have chosen a lot of "Supreme" officials, more than seven, a good deal. The relevancy of the "seven" is not apparent. It can't be that the members of the organization are college "sophs" and if they were wise men they would hardly have anything to do with a secret association of uncertain aims.—Boston Globe.

TRACT No. 23

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100. $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

Cynosure Tract No. 28.

FREEMASONRY REVEALED.

A LEGAL ATTESTATION BY EDMOND RONAYNE

To the correctiness of the published expositions of Freemasonry. The author very briefly states the mode of preparation and initiation in the various degrees, with the mock murder and resurrection of the candidate in the personification of Hiram Abiff in the 3d, degree and the penalties of each.

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100. $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year 1876 were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

In two weeks the circulation of the Cynosure will be published again.

Will all whose time is out in April who have not yet renewed do so at their earliest convenience?

The friends at Warren's Corners, New York, set their stake for a club of thirty subscribers this year. Mr. Warren sends the twenty-ninth through Mr. A. Eastman, who writes: "We'll add another if we have to make somebody a present."

Will those conventions that meet next week in Michigan, Iowa and Illinois appoint a committee early in the convention to secure subscriptions for the paper by private solicitation? A club of ten or twenty names is an excellent endorsement of a resolution commending the Cynosure.

We have several letters from friends who are at work for the Cynosure and trust that they will have good success.

NOTICE TO DIRECTORS N. C. A.—A meeting of the Board of Directors (see names on 9th page) will be held at 11 o'clock A. M., on Tuesday, May 1st next, in the hall of the Carpenter building, No. 221 West Madison street, Chicago, to make further arrangements for the annual Convention and transact any other business proper to come before said meeting. Every member is expected to be present.

By order of Chairman.

The Tenth National Convention to discuss, expose and oppose the inroads of secret lodges upon social, political and religious prosperity, upon individual and civil rights, will meet this year in Dayton, Ohio, probably in June. Definite time will soon be announced. Friends of this reform throughout the land should be preparing immediately; churches, town, county and State associations should appoint delegates and make such arrangements as they are able for the success of this meeting.

Topics of the Time.

The Louisiana arbitration committee reports little or nothing of its methods and doings to the public, but whether by them or some other cause a wonderful change has taken place in the situation in New Orleans during the past week. When Nicholls gained over a quorum of the legally elected legislators, one serious difficulty was out of his way. On Saturday the Packard Legislature was completely disintegrated, the members going almost entirely over to Nicholls, a few refusing. Some asked Packard's advice, and were told under the circumstances to go, though the parting with some of the colored members was most affecting. On the same day orders were issued for the removal of the troops at noon of the 24th, and meantime Packard is left alone with them and the metropolitan police, but retires from the unequal contest with the withdrawal of the troops. His ability and integrity are unquestioned even in New Orleans. He has maintained the fight in a manly way, believing that he was right, and his letters to the President prove his election equally with Mr. Hayes. While this is the case his authority was not self-sustaining nor was the State more likely to be peaceful than under his rival. Whether Nicholls will as faithfully carry out in spirit and letter the constitutional amendments respecting the freedmen, time will show. His promises are fair, and it is believed he will keep them.

Another feature of this settlement must be narrowly watched. Of the Masonic complexion of the committee of arbitrators we have no information except that General Harlan of Kentucky is a Mason and has gained much or most of his repute in politics through the dark arts of the lodge. If this be true Packard had nothing to appeal to in him that would exert a controlling influence if Nicholls plys the same unlawful trade in grips. Whether this vile spirit of the lodge has managed in the settlement of the Louisiana affairs will at some time appear. If so, the Commission had better have never reached New Orleans, for no settlement brought about on the Masonic plan can ever result in permanent peace.

However the President may succeed in his Southern reforms—and we wish him every honorable success—it must be acknowledged that Mrs. Hayes is a reformer of the best type, an energetic, quiet, resolute manager of those reforms that begin at home. No President of the United States under her administration will sit with his friends in the cool of the evening on the White House piazza smoking cigars. None will roll the nauseating quid or sip the besotting glass. She has made an innovation on White House receptions and wine is no more a part of them. She has defied Dame Fashion and discarded the scanty court dress. Call God's blessings upon her, American women, that she who presides in the first home in your land has the courage to show to the nations the sweet and simple manners of a Christian home.

A correspondent writes to the New York Times: "During the early part of this year I was in the Holy Land. Everywhere, from Dan to Beersheba, I saw evidence of the renewed energy and activity of the Jewish race. As a people the Jews are flocking back to the land of their forefathers in great numbers from all the countries in Europe. In Jerusalem and its neighborhood particularly, every plot of ground for sale is eagerly bought up by them." This remarkable movement of the Jews has been noticed by others and gains considerable significance in connection with the report circulated last fall of the establishment of the Jewish race in their fatherland through the medium of Russian battalions. The Caucasian army of the Czar is in motion and near the frontier of Asiatic Turkey. Its movements are unhindered by Turkish troops, and much less by the necessity of guarding against the jealousy of European powers. It may sweep across those historic plains of Armenia as did Alexander and Cyrus, accomplishing like them the will of the Ruler of nations and fulfilling the prophecies of his Word in the restoration of his long-scattered people.

Though Russia seemed days ago to promise an immediate proclamation of war to be followed by a quick hard blow, she yet lingers and again the first warlike note is threatened this week. Is she practicing the feline tactics of the old primer? or has there really begun to be a hearty dread of war among the nations? The Sultan and his advisers, we are told, are honest in their protestations of peace. They have reason for they have no money to keep up a month's struggle. But Russia does not wait for this. Why then is further communication needed with the European powers, which seem fast tied to neutrality by the terms of the protocol and their relations with the Porte? It is most hopeful if the horrid ruin of the business in which they are about to engage makes strong the dread of war. If any other path remains to the settlement, justly and honorably, of these Eastern questions let us hope it will be found before the final step is taken and the armies are precipitated against each other.

Man's love to his God is like the changing sand; his is like the solid rock. Man's love is like the passing meteor with its fitful gleam; his is like the fixed stars, shining far above, clear and serene, from age to age, in their own changeless firmament.—Rev. J. M'Duff.

WERE THE SAINTS JOHN MASONS?

[Concluded.]

Wife.—Well, husband, have you had an interview with Mr. Carlton yet?

Husband.—Yes; I have just returned from it.

W.—Do let me know the result. I am so anxious to learn what he can possibly say in proof that the Saints John were Masons.

H.—I will give you as accurate an account of our conference as is possible, soon; but first, I want to make a little confession which is due to myself as well as you. Notwithstanding the brave front I have always exhibited in your presence toward Masonry, I have long been disgusted with the institution, but I felt that I was hopelessly ensnared for life in a network of horrid oaths, and must make the best of it. Our conversation the other night opened my eyes to the startling fact that I was becoming a confirmed liar—indeed, I saw clearly that a Mason true to his vows must either equivocate or keep perfectly mum, which latter is not either polite or agreeable treatment to give any one, especially one's dear wife, who has of course a right to a kind answer to any proper question she may see fit to ask. I had felt before this that a wall of separation was rising up between us, and I hoped that the coming celebration, by its social features, might restore good feeling. But I found that you could not be blinded to a moral wrong by the prospect of a little selfish enjoyment, and I am glad you could not. Your argument about the Saints John seemed sound to me and I began to think the whole system one of fraud and deception and determined to find out of Mr. Carlton, as a representative of Christian Masons, what could be said in its defence. As a wise preliminary to conversing with a clergyman, I thought I would review my Biblical knowledge a little, and so took a Testament over to the office and read carefully the Gospel of St. John. I became deeply interested in it. A new light seemed to stream from the holy word. I had never before had any conception of what an exalted character the Saviour was. Now the Godhead seemed to shine forth at every step through the man. He seemed to speak "as never man spake," and to offer a salvation adequate to all our needs. How grandly he carried himself in the midst of the carping, self-righteous and malicious Jews! And when, on being arraigned before his enemies, the High Priest asked him of his doctrine, his noble reply, "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing," seemed a noble refutation for him and his disciples for all coming time of the charge of complicity with secret, oath-bound associations. I felt that the oaths of concealment that I had taken were sins to be repented of and forsaken, and that Christ had come to "set the captive free."

W.—This rejoices my heart. I feel that God has answered my unceasing prayer that you might know the truth as it is in Jesus.

H.—I now felt that Christ and his disciples lived in quite a different atmosphere from that of Masonry, and I did not care to have Mr. Carlton tell me to the contrary, but as I had told you I would see him I went to his study and the following is the substance of what passed between us:

H. to Mr. Carlton.—Mr. Carlton, since the appointment of our coming celebration some discussion has arisen as to whether the Saints John were really Masons. I thought you would be capable of throwing light on the subject if any one could, and so have called to make some inquiries.

Mr. C.—I shall be most happy to impart any information I may have on the subject. It is to be regretted that any obscurity should hang around these points, but owing to the great antiquity of the order and the want of modern facilities for handing down information from one age to another, oral tradition has had to be relied on largely. The Masonic mysteries were handed carefully down in this way. Numerous Masonic works speak of the Saints John as Masons and their orders are dedicated to them. I can refer you to some of their authors for farther light. The sacred duties of my profession have not admitted of my getting very deep into Masonic lore.

H.—Then I suppose there is no allusion to the fact outside of Masonic records. This seems strange, especially if what we sing is true:

"Hail Masonry divine, Glory of ages shine;"

and strangest of all that the sacred writers themselves make no allusion to it. Christ seems to have been the great central figure of the religion that the Saints John introduced and preached, indeed the acceptance or rejection of him is declared most emphatically and repeatedly by the Evangelist to decide a man's eternal state. Now I have been through three degrees of Masonry, and though we sing and pray and bury the dead, and are told that if good Masons we will all be taken to the "Grand Lodge above" when we die, I never heard the name of Christ mentioned in the lodge excepting in one instance, where a Methodist minister was corrected for closing a prayer in his name. Unmasonic, they said. Is one system compatible with the other?

Mr. C.—The great Christian graces, faith, hope and charity, are inculcated in the first orders, and when you become a Knight Templar, as I am, you will find that we swear to defend not only "innocent virgins, destitute widows, helpless orphans, but also the Christian religion."

H.—The large body of Masons never become Knight Templars. A system that pretends to save souls whether they exclude or defend Christ is certainly inconsistent with itself. But it seems to me there are some strange defenders of the Christian religion among the Knight Templars. There is Mr. A. the distiller, Mr. D. a notorious gambler, and Mr. H. a horse-racer. I don't know any who attend church regularly or meet with Christians for prayer, or interest themselves in the progress of Christ's kingdom. One would think that love of display was their predominant passion to see them on their fine steeds decked with plumes and regalia. Pardon me, sir, I forgot that you just said you were one of their number, and now I think of it there may be several of your church members also in the ranks. But really, sir, what possible juncture in church affairs does this trained secret order anticipate, or is it all a mere farce?

Mr. C.—It strikes me that you as a Mason are not living up very closely to your vows in speaking thus slightingly of the institution and its members.

H.—I desire simply to get at the truth. I want to see these discrepancies settled if possible.

Mr. C.—I do not pretend to justify everything connected with Masonry. I preach a much fuller system on the Sabbath. The Masonic body is a powerful one, and acting in secret has a controlling influence in the community. I do not feel called upon to array myself against it, either in a public or private capacity. They might do us much harm if I should; as it is, I am quite popular with them, and they prefer to have their wives and children come to our church and Sabbath school, rather than patronize those who stand in a different attitude toward them, and sometimes they come themselves. I approve of their charity and brotherly love and the morality they teach by their beautiful symbols, such as the all-seeing Eye, Bible, square, compass, etc.

H.—If the object of religion is merely to build up a large church organization and not to establish truth and righteousness in the earth, your course would seem a very plausible one, and will no doubt meet with present success. But what is gained to the cause of truth if error and false teaching are not opposed? On the same principle you are acting might not Stephen have saved his life by refraining from charging home upon the Jews the death of the "Holy One and the Just," and would it not have had a very soothing effect on the excited crowd at Ephesus, or rather prevented any commotion at all, if Paul had bought a quantity of silver shrines for the goddess Diana of Demetrius the silversmith, previous to preaching the Gospel? Indeed, why should there have been any martyrs? Couldn't they have compromised matters by worshiping occasionally in heathen temples? just to conciliate the heathen and draw them into their ranks?

Mr. C.—It is quite possible you might manage the affairs of my parish better than I do if they devolved upon you; but as it is, I only am responsible. Besides sir, I attach some sacredness to oaths, which seem to sit very lightly upon you.

H.—I would like to ask what is the nature and design of these oaths of secrecy, and what their necessity? The so-called benevolence of the order is blazoned abroad; the little stipend that is sometimes given to the widows of Masons, who have paid all their dues, to enable them to bury their dead and meet the expenses of sickness, is held up to the world as a wonderful example of charity. But as I said they make no secret of this, neither of their brotherly love or of their beautiful symbols, as you call them. These not being immoral do not need concealment. To say that oaths are necessary to confine the benefits of the order to those who are entitled to them, is too thin, though I admit the concentrated selfishness of the order would lead them to look well to this point. Any one can see that that end could be obtained in less objectionable ways. You know, sir, that we swear under pain of the most horrid penalties, to conceal the secrets of the brotherhood, murder and treason only excepted in the lower degrees, and these not excepted I am told, in the higher. What an engine for evil such an association may become in the hands of wicked and designing men the doings of the Knights of the Golden Circle, the Ku-Klux and the White Leaguers attest. Can you, sir, throw the sacred arms of your holy profession around them and baptize them in the name of the Saint Johns?

Mr. C.—(Taking out his watch). I see the time has come for me to fill an important appointment.

H.—Excuse me for staying so long. Good evening.

W.—So you did not get much light from the reverend divine?

H.—Christ says, "If the light that is in you be darkness, how great is that darkness." Hereafter I shall worship at his altar and leave forever the Masonic shrine. Here is room for us both and the children. Only think, that Masonic cheat was going to take me safely to the Grand Lodge above and leave you and our little ones to shift for yourselves, as best you might. H. W. P.

Peoria, Ill.

Dewitt Clinton, 'High Priest.'

Instruments of cruelty are in their habitations.

O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united: for in their anger they slew a man, and in their self will they digged down a wall.

Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel.—Gen. 49: 5–7.

For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy.—James 2: 13.

"A significant event transpired in Batavia on the 10th of August 1826. Governor Dewitt Clinton came to the village and called upon the Grand Commander of the Encampment—a political enemy—and after a short stay left abruptly."—Broken Seal, p. 41.

"A letter was introduced into the lodge, purporting to be a copy of a letter which Governor Dewitt Clinton had written, saying, in substance, 'You must suppress the secrets of Masonry at the expense of blood and treasure. Be careful to observe secrecy; but if you are detected you shall be protected. If you are convicted you shall be pardoned, for I have the pardoning power.'"—Ib. p. 48.

Of honored parentage and state,
And raised to high renown,
All those abilities so great,
In infamy went down,

And Dewitt Clinton's blackened fame
A warning yet should be,
To all who're covered with the shame
And pall of Masonry.

He doubtless cheered the murderers on
To crimes of deepest dye;
And raised to heaven's eternal throne,
Of guiltless blood the cry.

Shall such as he again abuse
The people's trusting grace?
Or dare so wickedly to use
The seals of power and place?

But when the last loud trump shall sound,
And rend all earthly things,
And fires dissolve the monument
That 'hove his ashes springs;

Then will that murdered victim stand,
In martyr glory shine;
An angel, high at God's right hand,
Sharer of bliss divine.

No pinioned, fettered limbs betide,
Nor dungeon's dread unrest,
Nor bleeding mouth, gagged open wide,
At Masonry's behest.

While many looked, such misery
To mock, but none to save—
Vain, mute appeals—consigned was he
To the dark river's wave.

And Morgan's blood now drips from all
Adhering Masons' hands;
They answer the same murderer's call,
And echo its commands.

Where is the gain of such a course
When dreadful billows roll
Eternal, wrathful, fiery force
Over the guilty soul;

Where cleansing blood can never apply,
But filthiness remains;
For aye the worm shall never die,
Nor quenched be fiery pains?

NOTE.—The seventh, and eighth verses of the above are founded on the description given by a person who saw Morgan while he was in the hands of the Masons on the Canada side of the Niagara river. It was in this way: A boy about fourteen years old, who was in the employ of an older brother, was sent to the Falls with a load of produce to market. He drove his team to a tavern to rest and feed, and while waiting observed that the hall door was open and little companies of men went up the stairs, and in a little while came down again and went off, to be succeeded by other companies, which were sometimes quite large and at others small going up and coming down. He had seen a good many such companies go up and come down, when there was a stop of the proceedings and nobody was in sight. He slipped stealthily up the stairs and saw a room at the head with the door open, and in the room a man pinioned, fettered and gagged, with blood and spittle running down his breast. He made a few constrained motions to coax the boy to him, but he, frightened and astonished, fled back, was discovered and driven off in a rough way. In a day or two the papers brought news of the abduction of Morgan, and then it was fully believed that he was the man that was seen by the boy. The boy lived a useful life, and now is resting in his final rest in our grave yard.

Glances at the Past.

The State of Vermont had no State Prison until 1808. The corner stone of one was laid in that year, not exactly with Masonic mummeries, but with great demonstrations of joy, firing of cannon, etc.; for the people were delighted to know that they were to have this means of protecting themselves against rogues and knaves. The very next year, in 1809, twenty-four convicts were committed to this prison, fifteen of whom were found guilty of counterfeiting.

It was a great breach of public confidence and of good faith between man and man, to be falsifying the currency, especially at a time when there was but little money in the country, hardly enough for the transaction of its business. It was therefore the policy of the State, as well as the dictate of common honesty and of religious sentiment, that the crime of counterfeiting should be severely discountenanced. So strong did the popular sentiment become against that crime that it would have brought a blush to any man's cheek to have been suspected of carrying counterfeit money in his pocket-book, however innocent he might be in happening to offer such in trade.

The effect of impressing deeply upon men's minds respect for a true currency does not stop at a mere suppression of counterfeiting, it tends to make a people honest in all their dealings; not only in their financial affairs and banking concerns, but in all others. Vermont was never much troubled, if any, with wild-cat banks, as the West has been; nor does it therefore regard greenbacks as a means of financial confidence, as many in the West are disposed to do.

The early legislation of Vermont sprung from a religious source; for almost everybody went to church, and hence all measures for establishing and preserving confidence between men and faith in the laws were inculcated with comparative ease.

But things have changed very much since the year 1809; and there are other causes now at work much more potent for destroying the faith of men in each other and in the laws than counterfeiting the currency. There is another kind of counterfeiting carried on which is dealt in even by church members themselves, to which almost all politicians resort for getting office, and which is infinitely worse to the interests of society than the mere falsifying of the currency could be.

This new kind of counterfeiting to which we allude is the counterfeiting of the religion of the State by substituting the false teachings of the Masonic lodge in its place. Thousands of the young men of Vermont, once so religious and law-abiding, are now taught by politicians that Masonry is a good substitute for religion; and the State has become flooded with these false ideas. The very source of all honesty, not in the currency alone, but in everything else, is thus struck at; and the consequences that must follow are plain to be foreseen, viz., a loss of faith between man and man, and in the justice or necessity of the laws.

Some twenty years or more after the State of Vermont had laid the corner stone of its State prison, the legislature enacted a law for the the supression of Freemasonry, rendering it a penal offense to administer the secret, extra-judicial oaths that are imposed by the Masonic officials of the lodge. The satisfaction throughout the State with the passage of this law was as great, though not as noisy, perhaps, as that which had been displayed over the corner stone of the prison; for it was understood, that he who counterfeited those oaths on which justice and confidence between man and man are supposed to depend, might be incarcerated in the same prison that had served such a good purpose in breaking up knots of counterfeiters of the currency. Men were comparatively honest in those days; and it was supposed that the law against Masonry would prove effective for the end proposed, which was to abolish the lodge forever.

But though Jesuitry has often been put out of states and kingdoms it sometimes returns again with seven other spirits worse than the first. The lodge-Jesuit has returned to Vermont, and with a sharpness of appetite that no law but that of the ballot box can resist. The law of the State against Masonry is trampled upon with perfect contempt; and of course no other law can be held more sacred. The laws against federal officers sitting in the Legislature, or of acting as Presidential electors are unheeded. The some ten thousand Masons of the State—one-sixth of her voters—seem to have the idea that the lodge abolished slavery, and hence there is no end to the privileges due to it for this good work, however destructive of law these privileges may be. Even the chairman of the Republican committee of the State is said to have decided that the Constitutional provision prohibiting federal officers from being Presidential electors was a matter of no consequence!

The lodge controls the political interests of the State; and so unresisted has it been by the people that, in its presumption and arrogance, its next step may be to haul up and try some of the people before Masonic courts! The people seem willing to admit the preposterous claim that the lodge hints at of having saved the country, and that it has, therefore, a right to control the state when the facts are that the lodge was a drag and impediment to the war from beginning to end.

Of course where religion is counterfeited every other interest in life must degenerate. Where hardly one person in five attends church, the lodge is likely to thrive, and the more that thrives the more the honest interests of society must decline. The farms of Vermont may run down, and house after house may be met with along the road in some quarters, abandoned and going to decay, yet nothing in the State presents so sad a spectacle as the flourishing condition of the lodge, because neither pure religion nor republican government can long exist where that is the case.

The lodge was the worthy handmaid of slavery; the politicians of Vermont have made it the handmaid of republicanism, which is the old Jesuitical expedient over again of serving a good end by foul means.

More Light.

Address given by Rev. A. Osgood at the Organization of Hope Township Christian Association, April 31, 1877.

The object of this meeting is to obtain light. Let us not depend upon lighted tapers in a secret chamber to guide us in our duties toward God and our country, but with open doors, and our windows unvailed toward the East, that the Sun of Righteousness may shine in our midst to guide us in transacting business. The example of Him who said, "In secret have I said nothing," will be safe to follow. Truth and right need no covering. We invite criticism on our proceedings. Men may smile at our small beginning; but all great reforms commenced with a few. Look at Luther preaching against the evils of his day, and a Wilberforce, and a John the Baptist, not in secret, but in the streets, crying "Repent ye." These were small beginnings, but they caused the world to tremble. As people become informed of the character and doings of secret societies they become alarmed for the safety of the institutions of our country. It is the duty of every individual to watch and expose their secret plots. A man doing an honorable business does not want stained and curtained windows. But evil doers choose darkness in preference to light. They know that honest and sensible men would never unite with them if they knew beforehand the principles they embrace and the practices they engage in.

"But," inquires one, "why do so many good men continue with them?" I answer, Why did so many good men continue to buy and sell and own slaves in previous years in our country? For the same reason that good and timid men now continue to fellowship with oath-bound societies. Fear of wicked men who were sworn to ruin and persecute them if they left their ranks. Thank God, the day of slavery is past. Good men will not support slavery to-day. Would you vote for an adhering slaveholder for office to-day? Far be it from you. Neither should you vote for any man for public office who is bound, by oath, to favor one of his craft when in the discharge of his official duties. With the offices in the hands of such men government becomes a farce; criminals belonging to their craft go unpunished; our laws are disregarded; our lives and property a prey to cut-throats and mobocrats. We must take a firm stand and not give support to any who uphold these midnight dens of evil-doers. These secret clans are sapping the foundation of the institutions of our country. Shall we sit still and not attempt to stay the ruin that a triumph of their principles will bring upon us? Far be it from us. But let us press forward in the work, and, in the name of Israel's God aid in exposing their doings to the world, for they cannot stand the light.

Moral Law Applied.

Everything which involves moral principle is right or wrong. All moral beings are under moral law, and by it bound to do right and refrain from wrong. Men are moral beings. That men may know what is right from what is wrong and act accordingly, God has endowed them with the faculties of judgment and conscience. By his judgment man is to compare all matters of a moral nature in which he is to be a party, with the principles of moral law under which he acts, and to decide as to what is and what is not right. By his conscience he is prompted to act in harmony with the decisions of his judgment.

The freest possible exercise of these two faculties is demanded to promote right and prevent wrong. All the inventions of men which prevent the free use of these faculties, and lead men to act independently of them, are contrary to the moral law, or immoral. These propositions are all self-evident, and no man will so stultify his common sense as to deny it. Now let us apply these features of moral science to

ALL SECRET SOCIETIES.

Though these are not alike in every respect, they are alike in the one particular which renders them all secret societies. They all require a pledge, obligation or oath, binding a candidate for membership to keep secrets which are not yet revealed to him. No secret society exists which does not make such a requirement, nor is it possible for one to exist without it. A society without this principle at its threshold would not be placed among the societies now universally known, by friends and foes, as secret societies.

But these societies, one and all, require their members to bind themselves to perform certain things, before the things to be performed are submitted to the conscience and judgment; and hence bind them to act without the exercise of these faculties in relation to the things to which they are bound. So that, so far as the judgments and consciences of the persons thus bound are concerned, they are as liable to be wrong as right. It is to prevent just such hap-hazard work as this that men are endowed with individual judgment and conscience, which God will never justify them in surrendering to any association of men. To recapitulate:

1. Moral law requires the full and free exercise of judgment and conscience in relation to all that involves moral action.

2. That which prevents such an exercise of these faculties is in conflict with moral law and is immoral.

3. The obligation required by all secret societies prevents such an exercise of these faculties.

4. Therefore, the obligations required by these societies are in conflict with moral law, and immoral.

But again: These immoral obligations are essential to the existence of a secret society. Now,

1. Associations which depend for their existence upon obligations contrary to moral law, are themselves contrary to moral law.

2. Secret societies depend for existence upon obligations which are contrary to moral law.

3. Therefore, the existence of secret societies is contrary to moral law.—Am. Wesleyan.

Will they Tell us?

The time was, according to history, when it might have appeared expedient to Jews, Mohammedans, sceptics and various other religionists, to form new leagues offensive and defensive, for their own safety and aggrandizement; or to enter into secret and benevolent associations for the promotion of their individual interest, honor or happiness. But why Christians in this, the nineteenth century, should, after they have tasted the sweet influences and blessings of the kingdom of Christ, seek admission through all the pledges, oaths and obligations of secrecy into the societies of Freemasons and Odd-fellows is a difficult and perplexing problem.

Being unable to understand the reason or motive predisposing to such an initiation to clubs and associations of men of the world, men of all religions, and of no religion, I feel strongly inclined to request some of those who are members of the body of Christ, and also members of those societies, to disclose to us, not the secrets which they are sworn to keep, but the reasons and experiences which induced them to seek admission into the fraternal equalities of such a motley brotherhood.

There are some of high intelligence and virtue among us, that are compelled in their own practical and direct mode of reasoning, to regard the mere fact of seeking admission to such a mongrel community of all sorts of faith and morality is equivalent to a frank and explicit acknowledgment on the part of such applicant that they have not found rest and satisfaction to their souls in the Messiah and his institutions; that they are disappointed in their union with Christ and his church; that they feel a vacuum of soul that Christ and the church cannot fill, and which can be filled and satisfied only and alone with the rites and ceremonies, approbations and the brotherhood of Masons and Odd-fellows.

Now we want no controversy with anyone, out of the body of Christ—the church. This is, emphatically, a free country, and our constitution guarantees anything and everything anyone chooses, that can, in his opinion, promote his own happiness without injuring that of his neighbor. But we would say to those who have taken the oath of allegiance to the King of kings and Lord of lords, please tell us what deficiency in Christianity is supplied in your secret society. Tell us one new truth, or one new revelation; is the Spirit of God imparted to you in a greater degree by any of these modern inventions? Do you love your parents better? Do you love your brothers, sisters or neighbors better than you did before you took this blind leap into the inner temple of these institutions? Do you love the Lord more? or have you become more spiritually minded than before you gave in your adhesion to the ribbon, the apron or the mystic symbols of the secret conclave? Does the new center around which your affections move, radiate more light, more love, more peace, more joy and more prosperity than can be drawn from the glorious Son of righteousness? We will wait patiently for a reply, let it be in a few words and to the point; if the answer is plain and satisfactory, I will, with your permission, become a candidate for admission; if not, I may say a few more words, prompted and dictated by Christ and the Holy Twelve.—Franklin (Iowa) Enterprise.

Religious Intelligence.

—As Rev. J. W. Bain was absent at Oskaloosa from his church, the United Presbyterian, in this city last Sabbath, his pulpit was filled in the forenoon by Prof. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, who also preached in Moody's church, the North Side Tabernacle, in the evening.

—Rev. L. A. Wicky, an earnest advocate of our reform, lately stationed at Franklintown, Pa., has removed to Eshcol, Perry Co., in the same State, where he may be addressed.

—Rev. J. P. Saukey, late pastor of the United Presbyterian church in Rochester, N. Y., has accepted an invitation to the Charles Street church, New York city, whose pastorate was left vacant by the death of Rev. H. H. Blair.

—It is announced that Mr. Moody closes his work in Boston on next Lord's day and the meetings are all filling up with the rush of those who have put off attending them. Last Friday was given up to a sort of Temperance convention, at which John B. Gough was a leading speaker. This branch of the revival work has been carried forward with uniform and unusual success in the Boston revival. The various meetings held daily about noon throughout the city, are reaching hundreds who would not come to the central meeting, and it is believed that great as was the result in Chicago in the salvation of multitudes, the glory of this latter work will be far greater.

—The Chicago West Side Christian Union prayer-meeting held in the Carpenter building, completed its first three months last Wednesday. The occasion was made a special one, and many of the West Side pastors attended and were well pleased with the good report of work done through this instrumentality.

—In Boston the following Congregational pastors have been in their present charges for more than forty years: Dr. Lothrop settled in 1834; Rev. Chandler Robbins in 1833; Rev. Geo. W. Blagden in 1836; Rev. Rollin H. Neale in 1837; Rev. Nehemiah Adams 1834. The four largest Congregational churches in Massachusetts are the First, in Lowell, with 724 members; First, in Springfield, 675; First, in Chelsea, 674; Park Street, in Boston, 600.

—During the coming year the Oberlin Theological Seminary will have courses of lectures from Rev. Wm. M. Taylor, D.D., of New York, on Ministerial Work; Rev. A. H. Clapp, D.D., of New York, on Home Missions; Rev. Samuel Wolcott, D.D., of Cleveland, on the Topography of the Holy Land.

—Persecution of the Jews in the Danubian Principalities has broken out again. The prefect of one of the Moldavian villages, Vaslin, put himself at the head of a mob to drive the Jews out of the houses which they had hired. Three hundred of these poor victims, without regard to age or sex, were sent out into the street, where some of them died of exposure. No reason was given except that the sufferers were Jews, and so outlaws. Sympathy is wasted on Christians of this kind.

—Dr. Schaff writes from Cairo to the Evangelist that "Presbyterianism is the only form of Protestantism which has taken root among the natives of Egypt. It is the evangelical pioneer church. But there are a few English and German churches in Alexandria and Cairo, for the foreign population in these large cities. There is also an admirable educational work of a missionary character, though without church organization, going on under the care of Miss M. L. Whately, the daughter of the celebrated Archbishop of Dublin. She has been devoting the last fifteen years to this noble and self-denying task. Its school is near the railroad station, and numbers one hundred and fifty girls and two hundred and fifty boys, divided into half a dozen classes. The Scriptures are read and explained. And it seems Mohammedan parents do not object to it. Miss Whately told me, however, that none of her pupils would dare to profess Christianity and submit to baptism, which would at once provoke persecution."

The service of God should be heart service; that of the lips is only abomination. We are to "call upon our souls"—to rouse the whole nature in praising and glorifying our Creator and Saviour. He whose heart is full of thanksgiving is living near heaven.

Reform News.

Central and Southern Illinois.

Centralia, Ill., Apr. 17, 1877.

I have been in this city nearly twelve hours, and thus far have found little knowledge of or active sympathy with our cause. This is emphatically a railroad town, as the pastor of the Presbyterian church assures me, and as everything indicates. It is, however, prettily located and just now in its gala-day dress. Peach and pear trees are in full bloom, lawns carpeted with green, and front yards beautiful with early spring flowers. The day is fine and the roads in excellent condition, but many of the sidewalks sadly out of repair. This is easily accounted for by the numerous saloons that occupy the western portion of the town to the exclusion of almost all other traffic. Passing along the rickety walks on the west of the square and looking into the wretched "holes," one would be strongly inclined to think that a considerable portion of the people here lived by drinking rather than by eating, were it not a well established physiological fact that death and not life is in the cup. This sad feature is somewhat mitigated when you pass to the other side and find the more substantial buildings occupied by men engaged in legitimate employments.

On our way from Bloomington last night we encountered a severe storm which was at its height about the time we reached Decatur. The rain was intense and the lightning almost incessant, accompanied by short, sharp reports, indicating that the stroke had fallen very near; but He who "hath his way in the whirlwind" brought us safely to this haven at 12 M., where I found comfortable quarters at the "Centralia House," which I regret to learn is not a strictly temperance hotel.

At Bloomington I was made glad and cheered by an interview with our valued and venerable friend, Oliver March, whose generous impulse toward any good cause does not allow its advocates to depart without something more substantial than a "Be ye warmed and be ye fed." Bro. Geo. O. Robinson showed me great kindness, giving me such legal counsel as I required; and then after a generous meal and a two hours' chat with his interesting family, took me in his carriage to points of interest in the city. Bloomington is a truly beautiful inland city, and far exceeds my expectations in point of commercial importance. Bro. Taylor, of Wheaton, may be interested to know that I visited his old home and found the house and premises apparently in good repair and "beautifully situated," although the flock he once fed and cared for is scattered as sheep having no shepherd, and the church in which he preached is now occupied for "mass" in a foreign tongue. Bro. Bohrer, now in his 86th year, I found at work in his garden, and full in the faith. Said the old man, "If I live four years more I am going to vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick again."

The Sabbath I spent at Wenona, preaching morning and evening in the Presbyterian church. Bro. Bellville, the pastor, was absent and the morning congregation small. In the evening the house was well filled, and whatever is true of the preaching the singing was much better at the second than at the first service. Rev. Mr. Morrow, of the U. P. church, with, I presume, a number of his congregation, was present, and kindly tendered me the hospitalities of his house, which I declined on account of a previous engagement.

Bro. Howe was called away to attend the funeral of a friend who died very suddenly, but before his departure handed me a substantial token of his interest in our work which will be duly reported along with others by the Treasurer. No pains were spared by Bro. Howe or his family to make my stay among them in every respect pleasant, and their kindness is held in grateful remembrance.

Of my visit at Galva with my widowed sister, two years my senior, and my aged mother, now in her 83d year, I need only say it was one of those pleasant events not likely to be often repeated in this world, but anticipated in another where there are no eyes that are dim and all hearts are at rest. After calling on my old friend and classmate, Rev. R. B. Guild, and spending some hours in social conference with Jacob Emory and wife I took my seat in the car where I met a friend of other days, and talked of those we knew and things we did when life's earnest work was scarce begun.

Editor Cynosure: The past year has brought to light, in this place, some fruit for the anti-secret cause. Three churches bearing testimony against the lodge, ought to bear fruit, more, perhaps, than these three have. We have reason, however, to "be of good courage." One secrecy man has been led to renounce the lodge by reading Pres. C. G. Finney's work on Free-Masonry and Geeslin's exposition of the grange.

The lodge here, as elsewhere, leaves no stone unturned in its efforts to debauch the conscience of such as withdraw to unite with an anti-secret church; we are too often led to sorrow in their success. But we now rejoice that another Oddfellow has not only withdrawn, but has taken a stand squarely in opposition to the lodge. Is there a known case of a man becoming an earnest, Bible Christian, who has been a secretist without not only withdrawing from, but also renouncing the lodge?

The lodge of this place has allowed the spirit of the institution to be seen by some outsiders. But do not think it was intentional; the blame rests with a neighboring lodge. To break down the confidence of the people in the integrity of one of our citizens who opposes secretism, the lodge opened fraternal correspondence with its neighbor and requested it, if it could, to assist in the desired object. It not only failed, but a member of the lodge addressed forwarded to our friend a copy of the letter from this lodge. "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed."

Our M. E. church, like that body elsewhere, confuses the minds of the people by teaching Christianity and defending Baalism. The practical effect of its teaching is seen when a revival service and Baal festival comes at the same time. The preference of its members for the lodge is opening the eyes of the godly in that church, as well as in the community around here. The plain inconsistency of a love for Christ and the lodge as shown by the church members leaving the revival meeting to attend a lodge meeting, has led one young and earnest Christian man to withdraw from the M. E. church and unite with a church here which is opposed to secret societies. Thus, Mr. Editor, the truth is triumphing, slowly but surely.

The Christian Association of this place has appointed five delegates to the Iowa convention at Oskaloosa.

Yours truly,

W. I. Phillips.

Annual Meeting of the California Committee.

Woodland, Yolo Co., Cal., April 12, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure: After a short but pleasant session our annual meeting adjourned. As I do not intend to give you a lengthy report, I would just state here, that we were favored with the presence of Rev. L. B. Lathrop of Hollister, who, through the columns of the San Benito Advance, his county paper, has published several articles against secretism. We are doing the best we can, that is a few of us, and expect to begin the warfare in earnest as soon as Bro. Henry Cogswell, our lecturer, arrives and commences his labors. The severe drouth in many localities will rather abridge our financial prospect; but still we have enough means pledged to carry the work forward for a few months and no doubt can raise more when the work begins in earnest. We feel our dependence upon the Lord for success in this work, and of opening the hearts and also the pockets of the people generally. May the Lord bless the few who are in earnest at present, and incline the hearts and hands of the many to also see the truth and take hold of the work to bring it to a successful issue.

The following are the minutes of the session:

The third annual meeting of the Committee and friends of the National Christian Association opposed to secret societies, convened at Sacramento in Central Hall, Tuesday, April 10, 1877, in the afternoon. Prayer by L. B. Lathrop.

Bro. Black, our chairman, not being present L. B. Lathrop was chosen to preside in his stead over the Convention.

The report of the secretary and treasurer was read and approved. On motion J. L. Field and T. J. Bauder, being present, were admitted as members of the Committee. The chairman and secretary were instructed to employ Bro. Cogswell as the funds and means on hand and pledged will warrant, without incurring any debt, or embarrassment. The officers of last year were re-elected. James Kennedy was elected assistant secretary and treasurer. A. Musselman and J. L. Field was appointed and instructed to represent us as our delegates in the National Convention, to be held at Dayton, Ohio, in June.

It was resolved to have the minutes of the meeting published in the Cynosure.

After reading and approving of the minutes, the meeting adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.

Phil. Beck, Secretary.

Correspondence.

No Other Religion.

Ridge, Ohio.

Editor Cynosure: In looking over past events, what we have seen and what we have known and what we have read, we are well assured that Freemasonry has been well exposed, and that it is one of the grandest "humbugs" of the present age. They call it something grand and sublime, but to find out the full working of a lodge, it is worse than children's play. No wonder they keep their jewel so well as to hide and cover up all they can in order to deceive the public as much as possible. But watch them closely and what has been revealed will work out by degrees, so that we are well assured that all is true which has been spoken of by Morgan and others as written in their books.

In reference to Masons claiming their order to be a religious one, many do and many do not. Those who are pretty well posted in Masonry and have run up the ladder of degrees, claim that being a good Mason will save them; others who barely pass for Masons seem to know little about it, but think it something grand, because they think they know more than "Cowans" do. I overtook a man on the road one day, and being well acquainted with him we set to on Masonry. I told him of some of the evils connected with the institution. He was a church member, but said that "he wanted no other religion to take him to heaven than Masonry." I quoted to him the words of Christ to Nicodemus, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again." I told him that "he must be changed from nature to grace; that if he trusted in Masonry that he would never enter heaven just as sure as the sun shone upon the earth." He said that "their preacher and some of the members had told him the same," but repeated the same to me, "that he wanted no other religion than Masonry to take him to heaven." I then told him to remember what had been said, and that he would find it to be a reality whether he obeyed it not, and we soon parted.

The "Good" or Bad Man Argument.

Lostant, Ills.

Editor Cynosure: Allow a subscriber and interested reader to speak a word from Lostant. There are several agitators busily at work among us, the most potent of which is, perhaps, a score of Cynosures. These are the silent agents that are noiselessly declaring "the whole counsel of God" to many people who, under a faithless and oath-bound ministry, never would hear it. It is provoking to hear these "good men" declaiming against the idolatry of men who lived hundreds of years ago, while they themselves are bowing to the idol of Masonry. It is refreshing to hear them warn men against intemperance, profanity and covetousness, when it is known they aspire to the high privilege of drinking wine out of a human skull, that their own consciences are seared with the most horrid oaths and that, on their own admission they have joined the Masons in order to secure the best places in the church.

A word about this "good man" argument we so often have sounded in our ears. It is a very effectual way the advocates of Masonry have of silencing their opponents, to tell them so many good ministers belong to it. These reverend gentlemen themselves sometimes modestly remind us of this. Now suppose, in order to gain popularity with the world and to increase their salaries, these "good men" should contract a habit of taking a little wine for their stomach's sake, and then, in order to bring themselves into closer relations with the average drinker, for the purpose of "doing him good," they should descend from a little wine to a little beer, and then by a gradual descending scale slide into the habit of drunkenness, would they have the effrontery to tell us drunkenness is right because so many good men get drunk? No, honest reader, this would be too much for your credulity. Since these reverend gentlemen lay down the rule that Masonry is good because they are good, will they allow us to reverse the rule and admit themselves to be bad if we prove Masonry is bad? No.

This is a rule it would not be safe to work with both ways.

There is a growing sentiment in our community against the policy of the church in running the car of salvation on the broad gauge laid down by Masonic ministers. It is true the wider the track the more easy it is to persuade men to embark. But is this broad guage laid down by them, the narrow way spoken of in the Bible? It is to be feared the old "handmaid" is a little mistaken in her reckonings, and that she is not exactly a safe guide to pilot the church with its freight of precious souls. We have one church here which seems yet to be running on the narrow track. It is to be hoped it will stick to it, and not regulate its time-table to suit the loose morality of the old "handmaid." A CALL TO THE PULPITS.

ALLEGHENY, Pa., Apr. 14, '77.

EDITOR CYNOSURE: The very unfrequent Anti-masonic sounds heard from the U. P. pulpits of Allegheny, I fear betokens no good. All our ministers here are cognizant of the sinfulness of secretism, and yet they will neglect to treat it as they do other and less heinous offenses. "Show Israel his sin." I apprehend this means sin of any and all kinds. The shepherd should warn the flock when the wolf is in sight. Imagine a watchman, by his reticence concealing from the young and unwary of his flock these secret pitfalls. Young men who never hear it preached against nor prayed against are too apt to fall in with the temptation when presented. Let us have more Anti-masonry from the pulpit, and the Cynosure, and such matter will be sought for and read. JOSEPH MCKEE.

ON THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE: In response to inquiries of friend Stiles of Green Point, New York, I would say that the spike arrangement of the Knights of Pythias is a trick of the third degree, and two sets of spikes are used. First, an iron set, which the candidate sees, feels, handles and finally places before the pedestal, in the center of the lodge, from which he is afterwards ordered to jump. This set presents itself to his mind, before he leaps, and in most cases makes the flesh crawl when the order to jump is given. Second, a rubber set, in exact imitation of the iron, is, unawares to him, substituted for the iron set during the initiation ceremonies, while his back is turned to the pedestal, and before he is finally mounted thereon to make the leap. In the time intervening between the placing of the first set and the second, the candidate is called to the station of the Chancellor Commander and a short lecture delivered to him upon the various and beautiful methods adopted in the by-gone ages of pagan antiquity and barbarism for testing men's bravery, and he is very impressively informed that this method has been adopted to test his bravery. Bravery is the motto of the third degree and the symbolic color is red. As to how I came to jump on the spikes, I can hardly say, except that I knew there was a trick somewhere, and I felt an assurance of safety also in the fact that the brethren present and about me and who had traveled that road of peril before me, had gone through unscathed, and reasoning from analogy I believed obedience to orders would prove the justness of my conclusions that harm would not befall myself. So I obeyed orders, and lo, and behold! instead of iron I found myself firmly embedded in a set of rubber spikes. Hence, you see, rubber shoes were not necessary. The scamps, however, made me jump in my stocking feet.

In my lodge we used to snatch 'em when they attempted to write the motto of the second degree, which is caution, the symbolic color being yellow. None ever succeeded, I believe, in gracing the archives with this motto in their own handwriting; at least I did not. As a matter of impression this trick is worth a dozen of the new names called caution which were given to Entered Apprentices in the old Masonic lectures. The old Masonic lecture is no doubt the basis of this Pythian device. For a man to attempt to write that word after he has sworn not to write, print, stamp, stain, hew, cut, carve, engrave or indent it, as it is one of the so-called secrets, makes him feel temporariiy like crawling into a hole and drawing the hole in after him. Does friend Stiles need any more light? In F. C. B.—friendship, caution and bravery—though not cabilistically, I remain yours,

J. H. H. WOODWARD.

WALK IN THE LIGHT.

AMES, Story Co., Iowa, April 13, 1877.

MR. EDITOR:—I am much pleased to see by the plain and able letter of Hiel Lewis in your last, with most significant caption, that you are advancing. Let us have more of the same. I myself being wholly free from all sectarian entanglements, "walking at liberty on my high places" of prayer and praise and consecrated work, "would that all men were almost and altogether such as I am, save these bonds." I would in no wise advise the inauguration of a new sect, but when all Anti-masonic workers must feel that (as was universally admitted and urged in the case of slavery) they can and do in no way sanction and sustain Masonry so much as by communion with it in the church, in that holiest and most sacred of all ties, the sacramental feast; they should let conscience "do her perfect work," at once come out of such communion and hold such union, cemented in the blood of the Lamb, with one another—with such only as have wholly come out from Masonry and and the world. Let them, for this, await the periodical coming of some devout lecturer or evangelist in whom they could have implicit confidence and true fellowship. "If we walk in the LIGHT as HE is in the Light we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin."

Can we "walk in the Light" while we thus in the most solemn way embrace and endorse Masonry? Can we successfully, or at all consistently fight Masonry to-day and embrace and take it to our hearts to-morrow at the sacramental board? fight it in the world, sustain it in the church and have any sense of manliness, consistency or religion left? Why, we might know that Masonry and its master, Satan, smile at such a fight; they class it as it deserves, i. e., as a mere sham! They do as drug-stores and other rum-sellers here in Ames and everywhere else do; they smile at these temperance meetings where it is mutually understood on both sides that all this is mere talk, talk, talk; that it is to begin and end there. That is, nobody, friend or foe, will infer by this that we are in earnest; that we mean work.

The writer has never wittingly communed with Masonry, and to avoid doing so has sacrificed all things, all his days. It has been a bitter warfare, has cost much, but then he has retained his conscience, manhood, religion, intact.

Yours for reform,

ROBT. BURGESS.

THE RING EXPOSED.

The Masonic ring is the most perfect secret machine in the world. It is a masterpiece of scoundrelism. It could not be improved by a convention of all the wicked geniuses in the world.

The great Tammany ring was only a Masonic scion. Tweed was a scholar that graduated from Perfect Ashlar Lodge of New York; in that secret, dark-lantern den of infamy he learned all the great secrets of ringism; there he learned how to do dirty work on the sly and how to give the grand hailing sign of distress to his fellow Masons of the New York ring.

Tweed, however, finds that a sheepskin apron can't give a Mason a good reputation among honest tax-payers of a plundered city. And he is no doubt losing confidence in the grand hailing sign of distress. The truth is, Tweed overdid the business; he carried his Masonry too far—so far that moderate Masonic craftsmen could not keep abreast of him in scoundrelism; he stole too much for even a "fair and square" Masonic conscience; in fact he forgot the great Masonic word—caution. How foolish he was! what an imprudent Mason!

OUR MAIL.

A friend from Morrison, Ill., writes:

"It is visible the cause is gaining. Still the battle rages, the enemy strong and subtile, God's professed people timid, fearing man that can only kill the body. Mr. Haskell, an evangelist who had been thirty years an actor and with a circus, has been here three weeks. His wife, a very devoted lady, labored with him. The Lord has greatly blessed their labors."

Rev. J. L, Barlow, Fentonville, Mich., writes:

"My heart is very much affected and has been for a long time. I am just looking up a bit from an attack of congestion of the lungs, and am waiting His will."

John W. Jones, Waukegan, Ill., writes:

"I was told by a Mason that the Lord's Prayer was a model prayer. The name of Jesus was not in it, but it was wholly directed to the Father. Can you give us some light on this subject?"

Christ gave his disciples this prayer very soon after he entered on his ministry. But near the close of his ministry, he said, John 16:24, "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name;" and in verse 26, alluding to the time when he should be separated from them, "At that day ye shall ask in my name;" also in verse 23, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you."

John G. Smith, Beverly, Mass., writes:

"We cast five votes here for the American ticket at last election. I think if we had had a good sound lecturer here a week previous to the election we should have cast 25 votes. I hope we shall make a better show the next election. Light is what is needed and we must have it. Preaching will do it most effectually I think. We are almost killed with secretism in this State and I would like to see an end of it, but do not expect to until there is more sacrifice made by every one opposed to secret societies. I consider it the most important question before the people."

T. R. Watson, Aberdeen, Scotland, sends his renewal and writes:

"May the Cynosure succeed. I wish it God speed."

George W. Clark, Dansville, N. Y., writes:

"Would like to see the paper circulated and read more extensively, but I see no chance for it, the vitality of the community is so eaten up and paralyzed with tobacco, liquor and secretism."

A. Hard, Painted Post, N. Y., writes:

"Be full of courage."

James Barnett, West Geneva, O., writes:

"I am seventy-five years of age, yet I am willing to further a good cause as ability allows. Lately I asked a Freemason, if a member of a lodge became liable to a penalty not less than death if he revealed the secrets? He answered, yes. The next question was, Is that penalty executed in accordance with good civil law? No answer was given. He said Freemasons were generally honorable men. Yes, so were slaveholders. Who has ever been more praised or honored in the United States than President George Washington? but he was guilty of slaveholding, 'the sum of all villainies.' The good President Lincoln swore to support a pro-slavery law, and said that he meant to carry out the fugitive clause."

P. P. Perry, Ft. Scott, Kan., writes:

"We have organized an anti-secret society in this township, and there has been some talk of organizing a county anti-secret association. We expect to have an anti-secret paper in this State shortly. We hope this State will not be behind her sister States in this matter. I hope this county will soon be ready to do her part in this great work. The Good Templars feel very much hurt. They claim they do so much good that we ought to let them pass and say nothing about them. But who gets their money, who gives them lectures, who attends their conventions, and who have to have money to pay their fare on railroads, etc.? In short, who are their leaders? Masons. Said one man, 'I stayed with them as long as I could. Why, it was a constant draw of money to send our chief men somewhere.' Truth is mighty, it will prevail. I tell our young men I want them to be interested in this matter. They are the ones who will have to face the world on this subject. Brother it is time we should move in this matter. As Captain Wm. Morgan said, 'It is time Masonry should be divulged, for it has gone far enough.'"

Cyrus Chapman, Crown Point, Ind., writes:

"Last Saturday night there was a debate. I think the question was Which did the most harm Masonry or slavery? The speakers were two brothers. The mother wanted to help her youngest son of course, so she came to me and got my Cynosures. To-day she came back with my papers and said they helped her youngest son to beat the Mason badly. I am pleased to get some of the Masons to read the Cynosure. I would to God that it might stamp conviction on every heart and mind of the great evil of Masonry, till it is all wiped out of existence, that they may be as faithful workers for Christ as they have been for Masonry."

Franklin Paine, Painesville, O., reports twelve American party votes in his town at their last local election. There would have been more if he had received the tickets sooner, but they did not get there till the evening of March 31st. We consider this report very encouraging: Mr. Paine says:

"I hope to do better next time."

A. C. Hall, Wakeman, O., writes:

"I prize the paper very highly, and would sooner part with any other paper I take than the Cynosure."

E. VanFossen, Adel, Dallas Co., Iowa, writes:

"I have not been able to get you a club of ten or more, as I did last year, but hope to do so before the close of the year. Money is scarce and the grasshoppers will be upon us this season as the ground is full of their eggs, but still we hope to make a good crop of corn. If we do so look out for a good club list from me. This county has been and is to a great extent under the iron heel of the secret orders, but we now think we can see light ahead."

A Presbyterian, from Utica, Minn., writes:

"Professors are daily rebuked by the question, 'Why do so many ministers and good men belong to the Masons?' To lift up from any evil is the work of the church. If persons say there is no sin in the obligations, are they not walking in darkness, deceiving themselves and stumbling blocks to others? Does not the Lord give them up to their own heart's lust, and does not the perverse spirit mingled in their midst cause their brethren in the church to err?"

Chauncey Ames, Kalkaska, Mich., writes:

"Please send me a few supplements with my first paper. I find they are a nice thing to post up in public places. Please accept my thanks for waiting on me so long and also my best wishes for your prosperity in the cause you advocate."

Rev. E. W. Bruce, Hickory Corners, Mich., writes:

"Rev. D. P. Rathbun has just been here and stirred up the craft wonderfully. We expect to keep the ball rolling until secrecy shall hide its face and blush with shame."

Joseph Day, Markesan, Wis., writes:

"I am surrounded by grangers. They get my paper to read and find no particular fault with it. I am getting to be an old man but I intend to keep at work as long as I can."

Mrs. J. K. Pierson, Goodrich, Mich., writes:

"My heart is in sympathy with the great reform. We have been swindled and robbed by the workers of iniquity and by a clique that worketh in secret."

Hiram Whitney, Plano, Ill., writes:

"We, that is myself and family, prize the Cynosure very highly."

B. F. Smith, Lincoln, Ill., writes:

"The lodge is master of the situation here. It controls the offices, courts and church. Rev. Mr. Pellet held a series of meetings at the M. E. church in this city last January, and in two different sermons he spoke mildly against Masonry. The Masons took offense at it and circulated a petition requesting him to leave, and closed their church against him. We need Brothers Hinman and Ronayne here to lecture and expose the cunning wickedness of the lodge."

John Hilborn, Widder Station, Ont., Can., writes:

"Since the work is beginning in Canada I am praying that God may abundantly bless your labors, for the darkness is great here. If you want to have peace with all Methodist churches in Canada, you have got to keep the first and great command of Masonry, a silent tongue."

LESSON XVIII.—MAY 6, 1877.—THE FAMINE IN SAMARIA.

SCRIPTURE.—2 Kings 7: 12-20. Commit vs. 17-20.

12. And the king arose in the night, and said unto his servants, I will now shew you what the Syrians have done to us. They know that we be hungry; therefore are they gone out of the camp, to hide themselves in the field, saying, When they come out of the city, we shall catch them alive, and get into the city.

13. And one of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left in the city, (behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are left in it: behold, I say, they are even as all the multitude of the Israelites that are consumed:) and let us send and see.

14. They took therefore two chariot horses; and the king sent after the host of the Syrians, saying, Go and see.

15. And they went after them unto Jordan: and lo, all the way was full of garments and vessels, which the Syrians had cast away in their haste. And the messengers returned, and told the king.

16. And the people went out and spoiled the tents of the Syrians. So a measure of fine flour was sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, according to the word of the Lord.

17. And the king appointed the lord on whose hand he leaned to have the charge of the gate: and the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died, as the man of God had said, who spake when the king came down to him.

18. And it came to pass as the man of God had spoken to the king, saying, Two measures of barley for a shekel, and a measure of fine flour for a shekel, shall be to-morrow about this time in the gate of Samaria:

19. And that lord answered the man of God, and said, Now, behold, if the Lord should make windows in heaven, might such a thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

20. And so it fell out unto him: for the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died.

LESSON HINTS.—Read over carefully the portion between the lesson of last week and this, noticing a former defeat of the Syrians by Ahab, 1 Ki. 20:22–30, and his wicked alliance with Ben-hadad, 31–43, as a result of which appears this invasion according to the prophecy. The terrible famine resulting is wonderfully pictured in the horrible domestic tragedy brought before the very eyes of the king, and his impatient expression, vs. 31–33. Though wearing the outward signs of contrition, he seemed not to have been humbled for the sins of his own and his father's house, 3:1–3. Notice the Divine interposition, v. 6; compare 2 Sam. 5:23 and 2 Ki. 19:35. Notice the compunction felt by the lepers at their conduct, compared with the selfishness of the modern lodge system, 1 Cor. 10.24; 13:5; Phil. 2:4; Lu. 6:31.

V. 12–15.—Although such strategems were not unusual in Eastern warfare, Jehoram seems to have been of a suspicious nature (ch. 5:7; Josh. 8:15; Judges 20:29) and would have been slow to reap the benefits of this great deliverance but for the advice of a servant (compare ch. 5:13) to send out a scouting party (Num. 13:2). Their report showed the rout of the Syrian host before the armies of the living God to be as complete on this occasion as at others, 1 Ki. 20.28; Is. 37:36. Thus should we examine carefully before entering any path where temptations are liable to beset us. The Syrians cast away everything that could impede their running; so we, Heb. 12:1.

V. 16.—Elisha's prophecy came to pass, a peck of flour and two of barley were sold for 60 cts.

V. 17.—"When an Eastern king walks or stands abroad in the open air he supports himself on the arm of the highest courtier present." This officer was stationed to preserve order at the gate. The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1877.

The National Congregational Council.

A call has been issued some weeks since, by Alonzo H. Quint for the third triennial session of this would-be National Council at Detroit, Oct. 17th next. The call is dated from Boston, and we are sorry to see the name of Dr. Goodwin, of Chicago, is used as chairman of the committee. A Congregationalist pastor, endorsed by the Advance as "well known to us," speaks thus of this proposed Detroit Council:

"The call for another National Council gives me a long desired opportunity to enter my protest as a Congregationalist against the idea and the thing itself. A Council with fixed times of meeting and no special exigency to require it to meet, is new to and destructive of Congregationalism. Such a body having nothing to do will devise something. "An idle brain is the devil's workshop." An idle workshop is also a favorite place for demoniacal possession. Satan waits till everybody has gone out of the "swept and garnished" house, and then goes in. The first and best work for the Detroit Council to do, in my estimation, is to provide for a respectable end of the whole thing.

(Signed,) CONGREGATIONALIST.

The Advance (April 12th) is entitled to the thanks of every Congregational pastor and church for publishing the article from which the above extract is taken. Who can tell us what that Detroit meeting is for? It will not, of course, consider the question of secret societies; for its standing secretary and only permanent officer, Quint, is understood to be a Knight Templar. He was "Grand Chaplain" of Masonry when first appointed to his secretaryship; consecrated to his unholy office along with St. John of Worcester, Dame of Newburyport, and other Universalists, infidels and no-religionists in the Massachusetts Grand Lodge.

It will do nothing to rescue the Bible or the Sabbath or for other practical reforms, because the supporters of the Council are divided on all these questions. Billiards, whether in saloons or in colleges, cards, dancing customs, questions of sanctification or personal holiness, in short, no one practical matter on which the churches want light, will be meddled with by this "Council." It is in no sense a "Congregational Council," which is a pro re nata meeting called by Congregational churches to give advice on specific matters. But this Council is to meet on its own adjournment, and because the three years are come around; called together not by the churches, but by Alonzo H. Quint, a chaplain and chief priest of a secret, idolatrous order, which is the modern mother and type of Ku-klux, White Leagues, Molly McGuires, and a host of night vampires, which are sucking out the life-blood of our republic. What has happened? What is to happen that this National Council needs to parade itself weekly in religious journals six months in advance of its meeting, without specifying in its expanded call one solitary end or object of the meeting, or what it is to do when met? For any notice to the churches of what it is to do, it might as well meet in secret, like the Grand Lodge to which its standing secretary belongs.

If we might hope this Council would set itself to restore scriptural eldership and the simplicity and energy of the New Testament church government, to expose and censure spurious ceremonies and human ritualism and like substitutes for the religion of Christ, some incidental benefits might accrue from social and fraternal intercourse with other bodies of Christians, and interest the Holy Spirit in their meeting. But in the absence of all such hope we cannot but concur with the writer in the Advance, that its best wisdom is to cease to exist.

The Demands of Liberalism.

The following was put forth as the programme of the Liberal Leagues of the country a year or more ago. On reading them the necessity of the National Reform Association is plainly seen and its mission may be better understood by those who regard it with indifference or mention it with ridicule:

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitution of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly and promptly made.

With the third proposition the advocates of the Religious Amendment generally agree; with several of the others many Christian people are in harmony, as the first and sixth; and it must be said in respect to the latter that the manner of administering the oath in our courts is a disgrace to them, and needs reformation but not substitution. But aside from these it is not alone the infidel organizations that make these demands; they are only the vanguard of a great reserve force. Every open Sabbath-breaker follows their banner; every saloon-keeper, every railroad company that runs its Sunday trains, every "Sunday paper," every one who opposes the Bible in schools, and the whole Roman Catholic church will be found on that side when the test comes. By so much the more does the urgency of this reform appear.

By these measures is it sought to prevent a so-called union of church and state, but, as if such were the present condition, they are directed entirely against existing institutions. Why, said Rev. Dr. Edwards, president of the late Chicago convention, remarking on this outcry, why are not these men alarmed at the union of the army and state? That would certainly be much worse. Why was there not a commotion when General Grant was made President? We hear no complaint from infidels at the union of education and state, or of commerce and state. Let us be consistent, and if these vast interests may be safely directed in our legislative bodies why be alarmed at these proper acknowledgments of the God of nations. There can be no such thing as a union of church and state with us, while it is so strictly guarded against. "The devil never enters a watched gate."

The Wesleyan Discipline.

The action of the last General Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist church held at Sycamore, Ill., in 1875, on the revision of their Discipline against secret orders was at the time fully discussed in our columns. The action of the annual conferences last year generally endorsing a more strict interpretation of the rule was also noticed from time to time. The efforts of all were in the right direction yet failed to secure an entirely harmonious action. We are pleased to see in the last Wesleyan the following resolutions and amendment to the Discipline adopted April 7th, by the Syracuse Conference. The recommendation, drawn up, evidently, on the basis that the character of the minor orders may not be so clearly understood or the others give space for Christian instruction and labor and repentance, but the end reached is the same:

WHEREAS, We as a Conference believe that the minor secret societies, though organized for the avowed purposes of the promotion of temperance, benevolence, agriculture, commerce or the mechanic arts are of evil tendency; that they vitiate the very object for which they are organized; that the personal associations of the membership with each other, often bring young and inexperienced Christians into intimate fellowship with the vicious, profane and vile; that such organizations are largely mercenary and selfish; that the good objects they have in view can be more readily reached by open than by secret means, and that their continued existence furnishes a continued apology for, and stepping stone to the more wicked organizations of Odd-fellowship, Freemasonry and other secret oath-bound societies. Therefore,

Resolved, That we feel ourselves called upon to oppose all secret organizations.

WHEREAS, We discover in the so-called minor secret societies, an absence of the throat-cutting, brain-splitting, disemboweling, heart-and-vital-tearing obligations found in the major secret societies, therefore we believe that the evil of membership in the different secret societies are of different degrees of turpitude, and should lay those joining them liable to different degrees of punishment. Therefore,

Resolved, That we believe that our churches should "on no account tolerate any of our ministers or members in joining or holding fellowship with secret societies, such as Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship."

Resolved, That if any of our ministers or members join or hold fellowship with any of the minor secret organizations we believe it to be our duty to persuade and admonish them to sever such relations, but if they refuse, we believe they should have no more place among us.

Resolved, That the Syracuse Annual Conference adopt, and ask her sister Conferences to adopt the following as the substitute for the present Section XXII. of our Book of Discipline, and unite in asking the ensuing General Conference to incorporate the same into our Book of Discipline as the law of the church, viz:

SECTION XXII.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

1. We will on no account tolerate our ministers or members in joining or holding fellowship with secret societies, such as Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship, as in the judgment of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection it is inconsistent with our duties to God to hold such connections.

2. If it shall at any time appear that any of our ministers or members have joined or hold fellowship with any minor secret society, whether its avowed purpose may be the promotion of education, temperance, benevolence, agriculture, commerce or the mechanic arts, we will seek in Christian forbearance to show that such secret organizations do not tend to the glory of God; that the associations of the membership with each other often unite in fellowship "he that believeth with an infidel," and that such association furnishes stepping-stones to other and more wicked associations. In dealing with such cases, we will adopt our Lord's directions in Matt. xviii, 15-16, and the old Wesleyan doctrine of finally letting "it be known unto them that watch over that soul as they do who must give account. We will admonish him of the error of his ways; we will bear with him for a season; but if he then repent not, he hath no more place among us. We have delivered our souls."

—The Secretary and General Agent left Chicago on Saturday morning to attend the convention at Howell, Mich., which opened on Tuesday.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman has gone on to Iowa where he attends the State Convention at Oskaloosa on the 24th and will then visit other points. Rev. J. W. Bain also attends and speaks at Oskaloosa.

—Rev. J. P. Richards, associated with Bro. Hinman in the lecture work for this State spoke on the 14th and 16th inst. to attentive audiences at Elm Grove, Hancock county. We hope in the six months now to come before the annual State Convention at Streator we shall have occasion to notice Bro. Richards' work more frequently. He is a capable and earnest man who has thoroughly espoused the principles of our reform and can successfully maintain them on the platform. From his home in Hancock county he is able to reach points in central and western Illinois, south-eastern Iowa and north-eastern Missouri without great expense. The cause in all that region needs such lectures. Send for Bro. Richards.

—A brief note from Past Master Ronayne is most encouraging for the work in the Dominion. He is this week in Preston, having spoken in Berlin, Ont., to overflowing audiences and meeting unprecedented success. The expositions have aroused the whole community in that portion of Canada west of Lake Ontario, and the news has spread far and near, while the calls for lectures are coming in so urgently and often that Mr. Ronayne has no expectation of going further East before June 1st. About that time he will visit Batavia, N. Y. He writes that he cannot now promise to go further than that point at this time, which may be a notice to friends in New Hampshire and New Jersey to wait. Let all pray that Bro. Ronayne may be upheld in this great work, holding up Christ against the assaults of the lodge.

—We had the pleasure of greeting Rev. H. Cogswell last week, on his way to his California work. He stopped for a few days in Waukegan, Ill., near this city, and preached on the Sabbath. Though apprehensive of the long journey on account of the feeble health of Mrs. C., he pushed on early this week and will soon be heard from in his new field. The letter on another page from the California committee bespeaks a warm welcome to their beautiful State, and they will heartily second his efforts to save men from the thraldom of the lodge. The affair at Chico implicating a secret labor union in the murder of several Chinese, is a good introduction to his work.

—Bro. Moffatt, of Albion, Iowa, objects to our permitting the Masons to claim one lodge remaining in western New York during the Morgan times, but says that Sylvan Lodge of Moravia, shut down with the rest, instead of keeping up meetings as represented two weeks since. We are glad if he is right and will print the reasons if they are furnished. He says also that Washington wrote in his Farewell Address, "Beware of secret societies." We have yet to see a copy of that document containing such words.

—A correspondent says that Prof. Fowler, the famous phrenologist, is very strongly opposed to secret societies, and in a late work urges all women to oppose them vigorously. There is no doubt of the soundness of this advice.

What a comforting idea it is, as expressed by some one, that Christ never takes away an outward blessing but what he gives a spiritual one instead of it.

It is stated that in 1851 there were in the State of Pennsylvania only twenty-seven lodges of the order of Freemasons, while at present there are three hundred and seventy-five. This is an increase that must be extremely gratifying to those who have a taste for fantastics and pantomime, and one that must greatly stimulate a cultivation of the grotesque and superstitious. However poor trade has been in many departments, it must have been very active in the line of aprons, hatchets, and the other playthings of these religious and benevolent associations.—United Presbyterian.

The Home Circle.

Beneath His Wing.

I come, I rest beneath
The shadow of thy wing,
That I may know
How good it is
There to abide;
How safe its sheltering.

I lean upon the cross
When fainting by the way
It bears my weight,
It holds me up,
It cheers my soul,
It turns my night to day.

I clasp the outstretched hand
Of my delivering Lord;
Upon his arm
I lean myself;
His arm divine
Doth surest help afford.

I hear the gracious words
He speaketh to my soul
They whisper rest,
They banish fear,
They say, "Be strong,"
They make my spirit whole.

I look, and live, and love;
I listen to the voice
Saying to me
That God is love,
That God is light;
I listen and rejoice.

—H. Bonar.

Two Steps to the Blessing.

There are but two steps to the blessing; entire consecration is the first; faith is the second. The second step cannot of course precede the first. How can we believe that God accepts that which we do not, through Christ, offer up to him? How can we believe that the blood of Jesus cleanses from all sin, before an irrevocable and eternal surrender of all the redeemed powers is resolved upon, and actually bound to the hallowed altar. That moment you step on hallowed ground, the promise meets you; God says, "I will receive you." If you say, "When wilt thou receive me?" he says, "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Do you say, "I would believe it, but I cannot feel it." Then you are seeking to walk by sense, rather than by faith, but the Apostle says, "We walk by faith."

Would you now believe if you could hear a voice saying from heaven, "I will receive you." If you could believe it under such circumstances, then act true to your own avowed belief. You profess to believe that the Bible is the Word of God, and will you not now prove before God and men and angels that you do in heart believe what you have long professed to believe. If you have made the consecration, and have made up your mind, in view of all coming time, to be in the most unlimited sense the Lord's, then take the next step. God commands you now to believe. Believe and enter into rest. If you hesitate to obey God, you will sin after the same similitude that the ancient Israelites sinned, when after they were brought up to the borders of the promised land, and were commanded to go forward and possess it, "they entered not in because of their unbelief." Let me again ask, Do you now consecrate all? Do you now believe? If you are now being saved, O hasten to give to God the glory due to his name. Hasten to confess with your mouth what your heart believes. Then will the Holy Ghost testify to your heart that it is unto salvation, free, full, complete salvation, a redemption from all iniquity.—Guide to Holiness.

"God's Raven."

A lady who lived on the north side of London, set out one day to see a poor sick friend, living in Drury Lane, and took with her a basket provided with tea, butter and food. The day was fine and clear when she started; but as she drew near Islington a thick fog came on, and somewhat frightened her, as she was deaf and feared it might be dangerous in the streets if she could not see. Thicker and darker the fog became; they lighted the lamps, and the omnibus went at a walking pace. She might have got into another omnibus and returned; but a strong feeling which she could not explain made her go on. When they reached the Strand they could see nothing. At last the omnibus stopped, and the conductor guided her to the footpath. As she was groping her way along the fog cleared up, just at the entrance of Drury Lane, and even the blue sky was seen. She now easily found the narrow court, rang the number 5 bell, and climbed to the fifth story. She knocked at the door, and a little girl opened it.

"How is grandmother?"

"Come in, Mrs. A ——," answered the grandmother. "How did you get here? We have been in thick darkness all day."

The room was exceedingly neat, and the kettle stood boiling on a small clear fire. Everything was in perfect order; on the table stood a little tea-tray ready for use. The sick woman was in bed, and her daughter sat working in a corner of the room.

"I see you are ready for tea," said the lady; "I have brought you something more to place upon the table."

With clasped hands the woman breathed a few words of thanksgiving first, and then said, "O Mrs. A., you are indeed God's raven, sent by him to bring us food to-day, for we have not tasted any yet. I felt sure he would care for us."

"But you have the kettle ready for tea?"

"Yes, ma'am," said the daughter; "mother would have me set it on the fire; and when I said, 'What is the use of doing so? you know we have nothing in the house,' she still would have it, and said, 'My child, God will provide. Thirty years he has already provided for me, through all my pain and helplessness, and he will not leave me to starve at last; he will send us help, though we do not yet see how.' In this expectation mother has been waiting all day, quite sure that some one would come and supply our need. But we did not think of the possibility of your coming from such a distance on such a day. Indeed, it must be God who sent you to us."

"The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles."—Selected.

Restitution.

You have defrauded your neighbor. You have done him an injury, not accidentally, but on purpose. You have sought your own profit by inflicting a loss upon him. You have taken what belongs, not to you, but to him. You must proceed then to make restitution. Go at once. Go to-day, if you can. State the facts frankly and honestly. Acknowledge your wrong-doing, and repair the harm as fully as you can. It will cost you a struggle to do this. When, however, you have made up your mind to the struggle you will probably find it easier than you expect. But whatever you do, don't keep this burden upon your conscience. It will stand between you and God. It is an obstacle which you cannot get over. You may forget that it is there; but there it is; and you are on one side, and Almighty God is on the other. —Dean Howson.

The Perils of Royalty.

It may be grand but it is extremely perilous to be a king. To wear a crown is but to lie down with an uneasy head. Royalty has extra hazards. History justifies the statement, that among this class of high personages, casualties occur in a ratio double that among persons in ordinary life.

The antiquarians have been look-over the mortality list of these eminent and envied beings, and they find that out of twenty-five hundred and forty emperors and kings, who have ruled over sixty-four nations, two hundred and ninety-nine were dethroned, sixty-four abdicated, twenty committed suicide, eleven went mad, one hundred died on the battle field, one hundred and twenty-three were made prisoners, twenty-five were martyrs, so-called, one hundred and fifty-one were assassinated, and one hundred and eight were sentenced to death. And we are also told that some twenty more of this sort of people are to-day wandering about the earth, having been dethroned and lost their crowns. Of the twenty-five hundred and forty referred to, it is seen that nine hundred and one were at times in deep trouble. Hannibal poisoned himself to death. Nine Roman emperors in succession were assassinated. Maximillian was slain by the bullet. Lincoln was shot dead by an assassin. Of sixty-seven French queens, eleven were divorced, two executed, nine died young, seven were widowed early, three were cruelly treated, three exiled, and about all the rest were either poisoned or died broken hearted. Abderrahman, emperor of Spain, in a magnificent reign of fifty years, declared he could count up in all, only fourteen days of unalloyed happiness, while Napoleon Bonaparte with all his fame and power, said he had not enjoyed an hour of real happiness in all his life. What a tale of splendid woe is this!

Reader, you sometimes covet imperial power, and think it would be a fine thing to sit on a throne and have kingly wealth and royal honors. Let the sad picture I have given you stay your ambition. Remember the honest conclusion of royalty itself is that "all is vanity." Quench your longing for mere earthly greatness. Be humble. Find your place in the work-shop of life. Labor for "another king, one Jesus." Be thankful that he gives you a spot to work for him anywhere. Let contentment crown your days. Unending rewards are certain. Steer your bark straight on towards God's green new earth, God's city of gold. Over there, you will possess a kingdom, a crown, a throne, and a glory that will never be wrested from you, never fade away. The kings of eternal day will carry no uneasy heads, will never be in hazard of their thrones, will never mourn lost crowns. He that conquers the world, the flesh, and the devil, shall sit down beside the King of kings. They will be glad evermore. And they shall reign forever and ever.—Ex.

Pool-Waiters.—It is truly excellent what you say of not waiting at the pool. Be assured that many render the method of setting out on the business of Christianity so mystical, and so separate from human agency, and so scrupulously remote from all that man can or will do in the matter, as absolutely to discourage him even from going to the pool, from opening his Bible, even from directing his thoughts to the subject of it, even from hearing what Christ has got to say to him, and turning to its obvious application and purpose the plainest and most palpable of his requirements.- Dr. Chalmers.

—Wendell Phillips says of George, the brother of Charles Sumner: "An Englishman came to Rome and was anxious to know whether there was in the library of the Pope—the great library of the Vatican—a certain book. The library is vast and there is no catalogue. The gentleman went to the Italians. They referred him to the private secretary of one of the Cardinals, and the secretary answered: 'I don't know; but there is a young man in this city from Boston, and if the book is there he will know it.' They went to George Sumner and asked him if there was such a volume in the library. 'Yes; it is the tenth alcove, the third shelf, the seventh book to the right as you enter.' They went and found it. A walking catalogue of half a million of books!"

The Exact Truth.

Two young masons were building a brick wall—the front wall of a high house. One of them, in placing a brick, discovered that it was a little thicker on one side than the other.

His companion advised him to throw it out. "It will make your wall untrue," said he.

"Hooh!" said Ben, "what difference will such a trifle as that make? You're too particular."

"My mother," replied his companion, "taught me that 'truth is truth,' and ever so little an untruth is a lie, and a lie is no trifle."

"O," said Ben, "that's all very well; but I am not lying, and have no intention of doing so."

"Very true, but you make your wall tell a lie; and I have somewhere read that a lie in one's work, like a lie in his character, will show itself sooner or later, and bring harm if not ruin."

"I'll risk it in this case," answered Ben; and he worked away laying more bricks, and carrying the wall up higher, till the close of the day, when they quit and went home.

The next morning they went to resume their work, when behold, the lie had wrought out the result of all lies! The wall, getting a little slant from the untrue brick had got more untrue as it got higher, and at last, in the night, had toppled over, obliging the masons to do all their work over again.

Just so with ever so little an untruth in your character; it grows more and more untrue if you permit it to remain, till it brings sorrow and ruin. Tell, act, and live the exact truth always.

The Paper Tree.

The Paper Tree, Tung tsau, grows wild in the forests of Formosa, a beautiful island situated about eighty miles from the Chinese coast. It grows much like the Palm, with a slender trunk and a corrugated bark, and often attains the height of thirty feet. Its top is crowned with a profusion of small, but delicate yellow flowers, in clusters, below which are a number of large leaves. It is a very pretty tree in the flowering season; but its value does not consist in its ornamental qualities. Like the elder, it has a pith which in the full grown tree is not less than two inches in diameter. This is driven out by a punch, after the tree has been cut into sections, and then put into hollow bamboos, when it dries straight. After it dries it is cut into sheets about four feet long, by a machine something like that by which leather is split. These are pressed until they become firm and smooth, after which they are cut into sheets, the desired size.

This makes a very good paper, and is extensively used in eastern countries. It has the peculiar quality of swelling when wetted and then of retaining its enlarged size. This makes it very desirable for fancy work, such as taking the impressions of leaves and flowers, also for drawings as the moistened surface rises and gives the effect of relief.

This paper has been in use for a long time by the Chinese, while they make other kinds, of different material. Paper of some kind has long been in use but probably at first the skins of animals were used. We are told that the early Arabs made their inscriptions on the shoulder-blades of their sheep. The papyrus was early used in Egypt, and continued in use long after the Christian era. This was prepared by separating the different layers of the bark of the papyrus, a reed-like plant, and then pressing them together, with each alternate one laid crosswise. This is said to have made a very strong and durable paper.

The Budhist priests still write their sacred literature on the leaves of the sacred palm. I have often seen them reading from these books, and I have a part of one in my possession now. They are neat in appearance, and not inconvenient.

Modern invention has done much for the world, but not as much as one would naturally suppose. Most of us would be astonished to see how well the world got along and how neatly paper was made before the days of paper mills.

But the art of printing and the printing press have caused a great demand for paper, which in Bibles, good books and religious newspapers has carried the gospel month after month, or oftener, to bless millions of families throughout the world.—Ex.

Puzzle Drawer.

CHICAGO, April 9, 1877.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—I have read several letters from the young folks who read your paper, and I thought I should like to tell you how much we appreciate your paper and the great reform it maintains. We have been readers of your paper since 1867 and it always seems to grow better.

I send the following riddle, and hope some of our young folks will solve it.

I have already written too long a letter and must conclude wishing you God speed in your work for Christ.

ANNA E. SMITH.

LORD MACAULAY'S LAST LINES.

(A Riddle)

Come let us look at it closely,
'Tis a very ugly word,
And one that makes us shudder,
Whenever it is heard.

It mayn't be always wicked,
It must be always bad;
And speaks of sin and suffering
Enough to make one mad.

They say it is a compound word,
And that is very true;
And then they decompose it,
Which of course they are free to do.

If of the dozen letters
We take off the first three,
We have the nine remaining
As sad as they can be.

For though it seems to make it less,
In fact it makes it more;
For it takes the brute creation in,
Which was left out before.

Let's try if we can't mend it;
'Tis possible we may,
If only we divide it
In some new-fashioned way.

Instead of three and nine
Let's make it four and eight;
You'll say it makes no difference,
At least, not very great.

But only see the consequence!
That's all that need be done
To change this mass of sadness
To unmitigated fun.

It clears off swords and pistols,
Revolvers, bowie knives,
And all the horrid weapons
By which men lose their lives.

It awakens holier voices;
And now joyfully is heard
The native sound of gladness,
Compressed into one word.

Yes; four and eight, my friends,
Let that be yours and mine,
Though the whole host of demons
Delight in three and nine.

THE BEST DOG STORY YET.—The Portland, (Me.) Press tells it thus: "Yesterday (this was a few weeks ago) as the morning train over the Rochester road was nearing Alfred, the engineer discovered a large Newfoundland dog on the track. He blew the whistle, but the dog stood his ground, and thinking something was wrong the engineer whistled down brakes, and the engine stopped within a few feet of the dog. It seems that a four ox-load of logs had attempted to cross the track, but the sled caught on the rails. The driver heard the train approaching round a curve and rushed down the track to stop it. His dog took in the situation, and dashed around the curve and stopped the train. It would have been impossible to stop the train after seeing the man."

Home and Farm.

Sowing Grass Seed.

At this season of the year, says a correspondent of the New York Times, the old question recurs, How much clover seed shall we sow per acre? Opinions vary widely among practical farmers on this question, but the prevailing idea seems to be that as much as five or six quarts per acre is needed, and it is better to be sure to have enough if it takes a a peck per acre. Some of our best farmers would not think of sowing less than a peck, and they always get a good "catch." A successful farmer in this neighborhood tells me that he only sows two quarts per acre, but he grows a great deal of clover, and often lets the second crop with seed lie on the ground till plowed in the spring. In this way his land is filled with clover seed, and every plowing brings a new area with fresh seed to the surface. Going over his wheat last July I found the clover rather thin, and on inquiry learned that the field had not been recently "clovered." If it had been the two quarts of seed sown per acre, with what was already on the ground, would have been sufficient. Where clover has not been grown eight quarts per acre should always be sown. Clover is costly seed, but the amount needed is so small that the cost per acre is not great, and the difference between good or poor seeding will tell on the crops for years to come. To insure uniformity of distribution there is nothing better than Cahoon's broadcast seed sower, using it either with or directly against the wind, or, better still, selecting a perfectly still day for sowing. Where sown by hand there are apt to be strips across the field where seeding has failed, while some parts may be too thickly seeded.

A table published in the Agricultural Annual of 1869 gives the approximate number of seeds in a pound of clover seed at 249,600. This would allow nearly six seeds to a square foot if evenly distributed. There are two pounds to a quart, so that a seeding of one peck to the acre would allow about 100 seeds to the square foot. Too much, many will say. But probably a large proportion of these will fail to grow. Some fall on stones, some be covered by a heavy clod, while thousands start to grow, and fail to get root before dry weather, in spring, or the heat of the summer causes the tender plant to perish. A great deal of young clover is killed by spring frosts. Every one has noticed how untimely frost will blacken clover leaves, almost as readily as it will potatoes. The root is more hardy; but in very young clover the entire plant is stem and leaves. Many fields had their seeding destroyed last spring by cold weather in April, and on some, where this was discovered in season, the fields were harrowed and a second seeding given, which took well.

Most farmers like a little timothy with clover, and if intended for hay it is probably better to have a mixture. Clover hay alone is very difficult to cure perfectly, and heating in the mow causes the dust and dirt which are so troublesome, and sometimes injurious to horses A very slight proportion of timothy makes the hay cure more readily. But if the crop is to be plowed under, all clover is better. In that case rapid fermentation, which spoils the hay, is just what is desired. Besides, the the action of clover roots on the soil differs from that of timothy roots. Clover strikes deep into the subsoil, while timothy roots are formed in a thin mat near the surface. Clover ameliorates the soil, while timothy hardens and exhausts it.

One farmer of my acquaintance always sows clover seed in the hull and always with good results. He claims that the machines for hulling the seed injure its vitality. A more probable advantage of sowing in the hull is that the shell around the seed operates as a slight protection to the young clover until it can get root. Besides, this farmer always grows his own clover seed so as to avoid the machine-cleaned. His land is consequently always filled with clover seed. He does not know how thickly he sows, but I am satisfied that it is generally a heavy seeding, probably six to eight or more quarts per acre.—Selected.

TEA DRUNKARDS.—Dr. Arlidge, one of the pottery inspectors of Staffordshire, has put forth a very sensible protest against a very pernicious custom, which rarely receives sufficient attention either from the medical profession or the general public. He says that the women of the working classes make tea a principal article of diet instead of an occasional beverage. They drink it several times a day, and the result is a lamentable amount of sickness. Tea, in anything beyond moderate quantities, is as distinctly a narcotic poison as is opium or alcohol. It is capable of ruining the digestion, of enfeebling and disordering the heart's action, and of generally shattering the nerves. And it must be remembered that not merely is it a question of narcotic excess, but the enormous amount of hot water which tea-bibbers necessarily drink is exceedingly prejudicial both to digestion and nutrition. In short, without pretending to place this evil on a par as to general effect with those caused by alcoholic drinks, one may well insist that our teetotal reformers have overlooked, and even to a small extent encouraged, a form of animal indulgence which is as distinctly sensual, extravagant, and pernicious as any beer-drinking or gin-swilling in the world.

FEEDING HORSES.—I once came near losing a valuable horse from feeding him dry hay and oats with nothing loosening. I have never believed in dosing a horse with medicine, but something is actually necessary in keeping a horse in the right condition. Many use powders, but potatoes are better and safer and cheaper if fed judiciously. If those who are not in the habit of feeding potatoes to horses will try them they will be astonished at the result. I have known a horse changed from a lazy dumpish one to a quick, active, headstrong animal in five days, by simply adding two quarts of potatoes to his feed daily. If very much clear corn meal is fed they do not need so many potatoes. Too many potatoes are weakening, and so are too many apples.—Country Gentleman.

THE NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION.

Address by Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton College.

[Concluded.]

WHAT DOES THE SECULAR THEORY DO?

Refusing God a place in the Constitution it declares that laws founded upon his word are an impertinence. In accordance with this theory every law for maintaining Christian morality must be done away. All religions will have the same place in the eye of the State. The Chinaman may have his Joss house, the Moslem his mosque, the Hindoo his suttee, and the Absynnian his altar for human sacrifice. The state must have one religion, or exclude all religions, or admit all. The consenting testimony of six thousand years proves that it is utterly impossible to exclude all, and hence we have our choice between choosing one or permitting all.

But, says an objector, putting a recognition of God into the Constitution will not make our laws more Christian. We must Christianize the men in order to effect the laws and customs of a people. True: neither does putting a window into a house make any more light. The sun blazed out as fiercely when men lived in huts without windows as it does now, but there was less light in the house. Putting a recognition of God and Christ and the Bible in our great charter, is setting a broad window in the front of our national house, through which God's light can shine upon our people and the light of our people upon the darkness of the world. Putting God's name into the Constitution will not give us any new laws, but it will furnish a legal foundation for those we have. It will not add any rooms to the house, but it will help it to stand. But not only does the secular theory destroy the foundation for all our Christian institutions, but is contrary to the very principle on which nations are formed.

THE RELIGION MAKES THE NATION.

By this I mean that without religion there could be no nation. And that the character of the religion determines absolutely the character of the nation. If it be true that man is the greatest of all works of God, what mind can conceive, what tongue can utter the grand and glorious idea of a nation of men. A mass counted by millions of human beings, separated from one another by mountains and rivers, not knowing each the other by face or name, and yet bound to one another by bands stronger than northern iron; ready to fight for the same flag and pour out the last drop of their heart's blood for the nation's honor, or as we affectionately call it, our fatherland.

Whence now comes this principle that unites those separated by space and race and tongue in a nation? Indian tribes speak dialects of a common language, but they never coalesced into a people. Prof. Muller says: "To say that man is a gregarious animal is saying very little. It might explain one large flock of human beings, but it could never explain the formation of individual peoples." Nor are nations formed by allegiance to a common ruler. This is the result, not the cause, of nationality, while such has been the confusion often produced by extraneous influences, by brute force, or by dynastic combinations, that the natural development of peoples has been entirely arrested, and we frequently find one and the same people divided by different governments and different peoples united under the same ruler.

Community of blood produces families, clans, possibly races, but it does not produce that higher and purely moral feeling which binds men together and makes them a people. It is language and religion that make a people, but religion is even a more powerful agent than language.

The Greeks, though speaking their strongly marked, and I doubt whether mutually intelligible dialects, felt themselves at all times, even when ruled by different tyrants or broken up into numerous republics, to be one great Hellenic people. What was it them that preserved in their hearts, in spite of dialects, in spite of dynasties, in spite even of the feuds of tribes and the jealousies of States, the deep feeling of that ideal unity which constitutes a people? It was their primitive religion. So also the worship of Jehovah made the Jews a peculiar people, the people of Jehovah, separated by their God, though not by their language, from the people of Chemosh, of Baal and Ashtoreth. It was their faith in Jehovah that changed the wandering tribes of Israel into a nation. So far Prof. Mueller.

I have quoted from him at length because he is among the greatest philologists now living and speaks from the standpoint of philosophy and not that of religion. In the same lecture from which the extract is taken he quotes from Schelling and Hegel sentiments similar to his own. In this connection it is not possible to forget the words of the Lord, how he said: "And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren. For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother." Matt. 12: 50.

To the same effect also is the testimony of history during the times of reformation. For when blood and language and rulers failed to unite men a common faith proved a threefold cord that could not be broken.

Does not even reason itself declare that people worshipping the same God will trust, and those worshipping different deities fear one another.

QUI FACIT SUSTINET.

If then it be admitted that religion produces the nation ought the nation to confess or profess the religion? For a nation to disown the religion from whence it sprung is as base as for a child to disown the mother who gave him birth. But it is not only mean it is dangerous as well. It is, so far as I am informed, a universal law of organized being, that what produces must nourish or death will result. If then religion makes it must also keep the nation or the nation will lie down and die.

Whence does that confidence upon which civilization is founded, come? From the spelling book or calculus or rule for conditional sentences? No; from none of these but from a feeling that we are all destined to appear at the bar of God, there to account for our deeds. The man who makes his mark feels this as clearly as the man who writes his name. It is the vinculum that binds the different members of society into a national whole.

A BAD RELIGION IS BETTER THAN NONE.

It would be better to adopt a heathen religion than to reject the Christian and put nothing in its place. There are many beautiful things about the mythologies of Greece and Rome. Those nations were better off with their heathenism than they would have been with simple secularism. Their orators spoke, their sculptors and painters wrought, their architects builded and their soldiers fought with the idea ever present that the Gods were looking on. It was the sterling merit developed by this impression that produced those works of beauty and power which are the wonder of the world to-day, although Athens discrowned and dishonored weeps among her desolate children and Roman Eagles no longer lead her legions to victory. It would be far better to tell us that certain sorts of heathenism would be tolerated than to continue the advertisement which has been standing now one hundred years nearly, "All gods, goddesses and godlings are welcome in America." "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise of the same."

NATIONS ARE MORAL AGENTS.

The supposition that nations have no moral character is manifestly absurd. Suppose that one natoin steals a country, or murders a thousand men, or enslaves a race, or breaks a solemn treaty, or repudiates its bonds, who is to blame? The nation? No! The nations can do neither right or wrong. Individuals can sin but the state is secular, it has no direct relations to God. Nobody is to blame; nobody has done wrong, or if anybody the party which voted to do the act is wrong, not as a party but as individuals.

Every man can see that talk of this kind is the merest folly. The nation that acts in any one of the ways indicated not only commits a crime against men, but a sin against God. Take, for example, our own country during the late war. For more than two hundred years the bondman's cry had gone up to God. Husbands had been torn from wives, and children from parents; the lash and the hound, the slave pen and the coffle; all these we had seen and kept our silence. When, now, the hour of vengeance came, who suffered? Did the Northern doughface and the Southern slaveholder bear the brunt of the battle? Of course not. They were sutlers, and postmasters, and provost marshals, and colonels and brigadiers. The poor white trash in the South, and the mechanics and farmers and tradesmen of the North, these were the men who poured out that flood of rich red blood that partially atoned the nation's sin.

The state had done evil; the state must suffer. The men who sinned are some of them clothed in purple and fine linen and faring sumptuously every day. The hour of retribution for them has not yet come. Nations have no souls; when they sin, if punished, they must be punished here. With men it is different. This explains the fact that the shores of time are strewed with the wrecks of broken and ruined peoples. God has declared that the nation or people that will not serve him shall perish. This has certainly been true so far. It will certainly be true to the end. When a nation makes a declaration of independence of God it may fight at Lexington but never at Yorktown. Napoleon declared that Providence always fought on the side of the heaviest battalions, and he died an exile at St. Helena. Washington knelt in the snow at Valley Forge to pray to the God of battles, and he sleeps at Mt. Vernon, an object of reverence and love for the poor and oppressed in all the world. Lincoln thought the state had a right to confess its God and millions of freedmen lift their unshackled hands to heaven and bless God that he lived.

That nations are moral agents, responsible to God, and rewarded or punished for their acts, is conclusively shown by the vengeance taken on the colossal empires that forgot God in olden days. The Bible plainly declares that the nation which fears and honors him shall prosper, and that the people who refuse to obey him shall perish. The poet uttered only half a truth and the lesser half, when he said:

> What constitutes a State?
> Not high raised battlement or labored mound
> Thick wall or moated gate.
> Not cities proud with spires and turrets crowned,
> Not bays and broad armed ports
> Where laughing at the storm proud navies ride,
> But men, high-minded men
> Men who their duties know, but know their rights,
> And knowing dare maintain.

This is all true, but more than this is true. These high-minded men are the product of religion. It is the blessed Gospel of Him who was nailed to the tree which makes them one. Honoring Him they render their own preservation sure, departing from Him they seal their doom forever. "Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage, where are they?" Their statesmen were wise and far-seeing, their armies shook the solid earth with their mailed tread. Their climate was delightful, and their land the garden of the world. What was it that threw down their walls and brazen gates? What was it that palsied the arm of their soldiery and turned the wisdom of their wise men into folly? There is but one answer to questions like these. The God whom they refused to serve breathed on them in his anger and their glories sunk into the earth. The owl hoots in their palaces and the satyr dances amid their ruins.

DENYING GOD IS THE WORST SIN MAN OR NATION CAN COMMIT.

If a nation can sin at all, the worst sin it can commit is to refuse to confess the authority of God. Denying jurisdiction is a comprehensive act; it includes all other acts necessary to make the denial good. There was seven years of war done up in the Declaration of Independence. It looked simple enough, a piece of paper with some queer marks on it. But there was more than that in the manifests read from the steps there in Philadelphia. There were burning cities and prison ships, and screaming shells and thundering cannon; there was the rattle of musketry and the flash of whirling sabers. If the Declaration was right Saratoga was not wicked.

King Charles was sentenced when the Commons decided that the king might do wrong.

If the ordinance of secession was not wrong Lee and Beauregard and Johnston and Bragg and Forest and Mosely and Morgan and Libby and Andersonville were right.

If the United States do not sin in refusing to recognize God and his Son and his law they cannot sin against him at all. If they are not bound to recognize him they are not bound to obey him.

WHAT IS THE OUTLOOK?

This point in our national armor has been discovered by the enemy. Men who hate God and his Word are clamoring for the entire abrogation of our Christian institutions. They boldly declare that the Constitution of the nation is the platform on which they fight. The long roll is sounding and we are called upon to take our place in the fight.

There are two parties, one desiring to strike the oath from the courts, the Bible from the schools, the chaplain from the prison; in a word, religion from the nation.

The other desiring to keep what they would cast away and to write on the corner stone of our national existence, "We are a people whose God is the Lord." Each one of us may this night choose whom we will serve. We may choose the side on which we will stand but we must choose between these two.

Shall this good land, planted by our Bible-loving fathers, be given over to men who spit upon the book they loved and the day they honored? Shall all the toil and prayer of Elliot, and Adams, and Washington, and Lincoln, be unheeded and uncared for? Shall these broad prairies again echo to the tread of marching hosts, and drink the blood of fathers, brothers and sons? I do not so read the signs of the times. I do not look to see the brave old flag that floated over Sumter dipped to the black and bloody colors of infidelity. The contest is like to be long and sharp, but the end, I think, is glorious and sure.

Laocoon was killed by the serpents, but Hercules strangled those which assailed him in his cradle. I believe that we shall do the same. For long years we did not like to see the stars and stripes, for they brought to our minds the cotton and the rice field. But it is clean now from the stain of oppression, and the black man does not tremble as he stands below its waving folds. It cost blood and it cost treasure, but it was worth the price we paid.

It must be again purified, and since we are now striving to be just to men, we should no longer rob God of the glory due unto his name. The Bible and the school; the Bible in the school. God in the Constitution and God in the hearts of the people. Honor and trust in public places. Ignorance and immorality fading out before the coming dawn. The Atlantic and Pacific slopes and the broad valley of the Father-of-waters teeming with uncounted millions of happy and prosperous people. Forge and furnace, and plow and desk, and bar and trade, all in loving submission to the Great Father and in loving accord with one another.

This is the picture on which my mind loves to linger, and this is the sight which, if we are faithful to our trust, we may yet see.

The union of hearts, the union of hands,
The union of States who shall sever,
The union of lakes and the union of lands,
And the God of our union forever.

The scientific men of Continental Europe, together with the clergy, are now making great efforts to secure the observance of the day of rest. They urge this chiefly on sanitary grounds. The influence of the congress which met last fall to consider this subject will doubtless be far-reaching; but evangelical Christians can hardly have much faith in the movement until the authority of God's commandment is recognized. In its entire ignoring of the sacred obligations of the Christian faith in this regard, the congress was a failure. A Roman Catholic society has been organized in France for the promotion of the better observance of the Sabbath under the name of the "Association Dominicale." It has made great progress under the patronage of the bishops. The motto of the society is a saying of the present Pope—"France will only be saved by a return to the sanctification of Sunday."—Nat'l Repository.

OBITUARY.

Fell asleep in Christ and in peace, on Wednesday, April 4. 1877, Mrs. Sarah S. Bartholomew, wife of Rev. A. S. Bartholomew, of Lima, O., in the 57th year of her age.

The deceased was born in Washington county, Pa., Sept. 29, 1821, and publicly confessed her faith in Jesus by uniting with the Ev. Lutheran church in the spring of 1851, in which faith she has persevered until death. April 6, 1851, she was united in holy wedlock with Rev. A. S. Bartholomew, which union was blessed with seven children, six of whom, three sons and three daughters, remain to mourn her departure. Two of these sons are attending school at Capital University, Columbus, O., in view of entering the holy ministry. Notwithstanding the great sacrifice which it must have cost her, the deceased gave her consent some two months before her death, that her only remaining son, since it was his desire, might, if God will, devote his life to the same noble profession.

On the evening of Easter Sunday she participated in the Holy Communion with the entire family, except the youngest. who was not yet confirmed. Conscious of death's approach she gave a dying charge and a parting blessing to the different members of her family. During the lingering illness which terminated in death, she exercised patience, not only in her sufferings, but also in heartless provocations rendered by the excessive ringing of the bell of the church on adjoining lot, which the General Council congregation here are unlawfully using, but to which ringing God in his wisdom put a stop some days before her death, by causing the bell to crack. When no longer able in this way to disturb the peace of the family of Rev. B., the General Council preacher, Mr. Neiffer, with unblushing impudence, accompanied by a Masonic leader who is not a Lutheran, added insult to injury by intruding without ceremony before the corpse was coffined, making proposals which had already been rejected and which were in the highest degree insulting. The funeral services were conducted by the undersigned in Rev. Bartholomew's church at Lima, O., on Sunday, April 8. The words of comfort addressed to the bereaved friends were based on the words of Christ, "Verily, verily, I say unto you if a man keep my saying he shall never see death." John 8:51. A large concourse of people attended the remains, which were enclosed in a beautiful glass casket, to its last resting place in Green Lawn cemetery at Elida, Allen, Co., Ohio.

In her the family loses a loving wife and an affectionate mother; the church a faithful member and a devoted Christian; and the community an obliging neighbor and a warm-hearted friend. May the Lord, who is rich in mercy, sanctify this afflicting dispensation to the spiritual profit of the bereaved family. May they find comfort for their wounded souls in the precious promise of God's word to strengthen them in this their hour of trial. The deceased was an earnest but prudent opposer of all secret societies.

Isabel O. A. Cowles, daughter of Charles and Abigail Cowles, died of typhoid fever, March 17, 1877, aged eighteen years four months and twenty-seven days.

George S. P. Cowles, only son of Charles and Abigail Cowles, died of typhoid fever, March 18, 1877, aged twenty-two years three months and fourteen days.

Brother and Sister Cowles enlisted in the army of the Lord one year ago the past winter, and remained faithful until called to lay off their armor, bright with use, and enter the wide swung gates of glory, to fulfill the high behests of Eternal Wisdom. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Our brother and sister are gone but not lost. In memory and affection they are still with us. Although they were called from this theater of toil, conflict and suffering, at such an early period of life, and just when the future seemed the brightest, yet the arbitraments of eternity will pronounce them a grand success. Sister Isabel was so anxious to gather laurels for the crown of her blessed Master, that almost with her latest breath she entreated a friend to seek Jesus while in health, that they might meet in the Paradise of God. She soon passed away; her end was peace, such peace as "passeth understanding." Brother George was a firm and consistent advocate of the distinctive reformatory principles of the Wesleyan Methodist connection. He was sin's open enemy, he often met the foe in open field and though compelled to ward off his fiery darts single-handed, yet he never once deserted his post, and at the last Presidential election when the destiny of the nation hung by a slender thread, he dared in the face of much opposition to place in the ballot box the first vote ever cast in this town against the hydra-headed monster of boasted antiquity which is constantly clutching at the helm of state and striving to undermine the free and open principles of our beloved republic. He dared all for Christ. He anticipated a life of usefulness, but his anticipations are past, his hope, which was big with immortality is closed up in fruition. He leaves a wife and one child besides a far-extended circle of friends to mourn his loss.

The friends we loved have passed away;
The forms so dear no more we see;
No more we meet the eye's mild ray,
Or catch the smile of sympathy.

Oh, early blest—how vain our sighs;
Our fond, impetuous tears how vain;
To heaven we raise our weeping eyes,
Our loss is their eternal gain.

Parishville, N. Y., Apr. 14, '77.

The National Sunday School Teacher for April is received. Rev. E. A. Rand writes on "A Column of One;" Rev. S. Gilbert gives a careful and well drawn sketch of Prof. P. P. Bliss and his work; Rev. W. F. Crafts has "Bible Readings on the Key Words of Kings and Chronicles" written with his usual originality. The Lesson Notes and Comments by the editor form the bulk and best part of the magazine. Something new and surprising is promised for next month in this department. Adams, Blackmer & Lyon Pub. Co., Chicago.

—Donnelly, Lloyd & Co., publish a finely illustrated 10 cent number of their Lakeside Library on "The Black Hills and American Wonderland," being a full and interesting account of the gold discoveries and the wonderful natural scenery of the Yellowstone Valley. By mail 12 cents.

News of the Week.

—The Czar has issued a manifesto which is a virtual declaration of war, in the following terms:

"Whereas, every endeavor by the Emperor of Russia to preserve the peace has failed owing to the stubbornness of the Porte. while the condition of the Christians in the East is unimproved, their lives and property being menaced; therefore his Majesty, in the name of humanity and in the full consciousness of his sovereign duties as the natural protector of the Sclavonian nations in the East, has been compelled to resolve on obtaining by force of arms such guarantees for his distressed fellow-believers on Turkish soil as appears absolutely necessary for securing their future welfare."

The document proceeds to state that this armed intervention is not meant for the purpose of conquest, and will end after securing the above mentioned results.

A dispatch from Constantinople, confirming the above in effect, adds that the manifesto also declares that Russia intends to occupy Bulgaria and hold the province as a material guarantee for the execution of the reforms; that she will invite other European powers to take part in the occupation, and finally that she disclaims any intention to acquire territory permanently.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

Cynosure Tract No. 28.

FREEMASONRY REVEALED.

A LEGAL ATTESTATION BY EDMOND RONAYNE

To the correctiness of the published expositions of Freemasonry. The author very briefly states the mode of preparation and initiation in the various degrees, with the mock murder and resurrection of the candidate in the personification of Hiram Abiff in the 3d. degree and the penalties of each.

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100. $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year 1876 were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAPBOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

The Tenth National Convention to discuss, expose and oppose the inroads of secret lodges upon social, political and religious prosperity, upon individual and civil rights, will meet this year in Dayton, Ohio, probably in June. Definite time will soon be announced. Friends of this reform throughout the land should be preparing immediately; churches, town, county and State associations should appoint delegates and make such arrangements as they are able for the success of this meeting.

Topics of the Time.

Secretary Sherman has decided to continue the prosecution of the whisky cases and the thieves of that order will in the end find they have little to hope for under the present administration. Such of them as General Grant left out in the sweeping pardons of his last days in office must count on finishing out their sentences; while the numerous trials delayed since the retirement of Bristow will, after the long delay, be resumed with energy. In cutting down the clerical expenses in the departments, also, the government is showing a due recognition of the demands of the people. Hundreds of clerks, about four-ninths of the whole, have been dismissed or received notice to that effect, the salaries of others have been reduced, and no more assessments for political purposes will be allowed.

Another class of public thieves, more desperate because more defiant than the whisky ring, are the Tweeds of New York and the Shepherds of Washington. Hardly a considerable city or public enterprise involving heavy expense can be mentioned, upon which they have not fastened like leeches defying public opinion and prosecution. Chicago has its share of the genus, and though frequently exposed, it has been years since their bribery and fraud has received the attention of the courts. The County Commissioners who are building the new court house here, are the principals in this sort of crime just now. At a meeting, the other day, one of this ring is reported to have said: "I don't trust nobody. I don't trust myself. If anybody offered me a thousand dollars — I'd take it." Whether these words were used or not, they exactly express the leading motive of this class of plunderers who coolly vote the public funds into their own pockets. Meanwhile the people, patient and overburdened, plod on and are taxed to the limit of endurance before they will unite in the overthrow and punishment of such crime.

The long threatened declaration of war from the Czar was issued last Tuesday. Reviewing the sufferings of the Greek Christians of the Provinces and the efforts to ameliorate their wretched state by peaceful negotiations, he says: "Having exhausted pacific efforts we are compelled by the haughty obstinacy of the Porte to proceed to more decisive acts, feeling that equity and our own dignity enjoin it. By her refusal Turkey places us under the necessity of having recourse to arms. Profoundly convinced of the justice of our cause, and humbly committing ourselves to the grace and help of the Most High, we make known to our faithful subjects that the moment, foreseen when we prouounced words to which all Russia responded with complete unanimity, has now arrived. We expressed the intention to act independently when we deemed it necessary, and when Russia's honor demanded it. In now invoking the blessing of God upon our valiant armies we give them the order to cross the Turkish frontier." The army immediately advanced across the Pruth at several points into Roumania, and were at last reports concentrating at Galatz on the Danube, where that river turns from the south and pours eastward into the Black Sea. The Turkish troops are holding the passages of the river further up, while unreliable reports of skirmish battles with the Russian advance here and also on the east of the Black Sea in the region of the Caucassus, have been received. The panorama of war unrolls slowly, unlike the decisive tread of the German hosts in the Franco-Prussian war seven years ago.

Though long expected, now the issue is joined all Europe is profoundly agitated. At first, the omission in the Czar's declaration of war and in Prince Gortschakoff's circular informing the Powers of it, of any promise regarding the non-acquisition of territory, was the signal for a clamor which the English press joined, thus giving the Turkish butchers their moral support. Lord Derby has signified, however, that a proclamation of neutrality will be made this week. France and Italy will take the same ground, though the latter is said to look longingly across the Adriatic upon the Albanian fields. Germany is quiet, though the snubbing of her consulate as signified in the dispatches may provoke her against the Turks. Austria was reported in great alarm on Friday, calling upon England to assist her in enforcing former treaties. The Hungarians are showing marked sympathy for the Turks. Her jealousy will be the keener when it is remembered that nearly all the numerous wars between Russia and Turkey have resulted in some territorial acquisition by the former. All the little states in the vicinity are preparing to take sides, generally against their old-time oppressor, and if abandoned by old allies the Moslem will reap what he has sown for centuries.

GLANCES AT THE PAST.

In 1856 a skirmisher of the slave power struck down Senator Sumner in his place in the Senate of the United States, in desperate disregard of the law of the land, and especially of the Constitution, in the defence of which he pretended to be acting; while another servant of that power, a pretended Democrat, a Senator, a son of the supposed generous and manly State of Vermont, looked on, it is said, and gloated over the deed.

Mr. Sumner's offense consisted in the exercise of free speech against wrong, outrage, and oppression, which were then reducing the country to a state of slavery. He exercised that right, common to every citizen, without which free government cannot exist.

The power that nerved the skirmisher's arm to strike against the life of an American citizen, against the rights of a Senator, against the proscriptions of the Constitution—the power that lay behind the assailant and pushed him on, was the war-power which the slavo-democratic party had already assumed. The main body of their army came marching on in due course of time, and struggled long to destroy the life of the country itself. Their army had been deliberately prepared for the fight; millions of men had been kept in a state of passion and ignorance; political office had been bestowed upon adherents; death and ruin had been threatened against resistance; arms had been distributed among trained followers; the national forces, military and naval, had been widely dispersed and scattered; the slave trade had been virtually re-established; bands of ruffians had been employed under the national auspices for restricting the area of freedom and widening that of slavery, and, in short, every resource that conspiracy, treasan, and contempt of law, human and divine, could invent, had been brought in play to subvert the government and establish the imperial power of a few leaders upon its ruins.

Those leaders were defeated in their armed attempt upon the life of the nation; their treasonable efforts were suppressed for the time; the laws of war to which they appealed declared against them; but were the outraged civil laws of the country vindicated?

A few, poor, unfriended men, and one woman were executed as a sacrifice to appease the offended majesty of the law, while those who had instigated the treason and caused all the vast waste of life and treasure, went free. Nay, they stalked over the scene like heroes in a farce; struck hands with government officers; wrote admired memoirs; and finally found their way into Congress by the scores, as if they had performed some distinguished service for the country, instead of having striven to destroy it. And all this time their followers were still carrying a genial war of assassination against peaceful, unoffending citizens —citizens who faithfully tilled their fields; raised their usual amount of cotton, and were honestly striving to rise into positions of higher usefulness and respectability.

Time passes on; and step by step, link by link, the crimes, the wrongs, the faults of yesterday, link themselves on to the events of the morrow.

Another strange scene, as if in a disturbed dream, where no law or order prevails except that of disordered health, is now disclosed.

That Senator Sumner who was stricken down in the first outburst of the storm, and nearly killed, still remains in his place. During the whole war he stands like an axis, like an immense power to which all the shafting and wheels of the government, good, bad, or indifferent, attach themselves. He is almost the only motive, directing power for good that there is. He imparts to the confused and perturbed machinery of government all the American spirit that other agents, unconscious and inefficient would permit it to receive. He serves his native State, his country, the cause of freedom, and the interests of all poor men, with a fidelity, with an abnegation of self-interest, and with a majesty of power and purpose that will command the admiration and the gratitude of the wise and good for all time; and yet, this man, so distinguished above all his fellow countrymen, does not receive the approval, or the thanks, or the sympathy of his own State.

While Mr. Sumner, to the utter, desolating neglect of all those self-interests which men usually hold dear, is serving the cause of humanity with such distinguished ability, and is doing his State greater service and greater honor than any other one of her sons or citizens, he receives from the legislature of that State repulsion, reprimand, censure, outrage, worse than that even which he had suffered at the hands of the minions of the slavo-democratic power!

But the censure was recalled, you will say. Yes, I believe that when death had finally stricken him down at that post where he had served Massachusetts and New England so faithfully and well, a repeal of the censure was found in his desk in the Senate. It had reached him a day or two before he died. But what balm can heal a wound like that? Do we not know that it is one of the base arts of conspirators to coolly offer a hollow redress for the vital stabs which they coolly give, gaining their devilish purpose thereby?

Reader! do you fancy that the men who control the Legislature of Massachusetts—secret society men --could be really sorry for inflicting wrong upon Senator Sumner, or any other good and true man? Do you conceive that their act of censure and its repeal were not both the result of studied, deliberate policy? Do you, in your innocent, unsuspecting heart, believe that the Masonic lodge is better than the church of Christ, and that it is not studiously, deliberately, and wickedly persecuting, thwarting, and outraging every good and true American whom its spleen and hatred can reach? Do you believe that a good man can belong to the lodge and not be made a tool for the constant and perpetual persecution of other good men? Can you not see the traces of Masonry in these "glances at the past," as plain as the slimy trace of the serpent may be seen upon the grass of a lawn? In short, do you value the Christian religion, the Constitution of the United States, the freedom of your country, personal liberty, truth, honor, justice, virtue?

Then let me ask you to examine into the character of the Masonic lodge; analyze it; dissect the hydra-headed monster; watch the action of its worshipers; narrowly inspect the course of every man who bows to the shrines of Freemasonry; compare his sly and crafty tricks with fair and open dealing; observe the doings of every man in office from Massachusetts; examine into the workings of those centers of power, the costly Masonic temples that of late years have sprung up in all our principal cities, which ought to be the seats of freedom; study into the matter frankly, sincerely, and carefully, and then judge for yourself. If you think that your honor, your happiness, and your interest as an American citizen can be made dependent upon such a conspiratorial power as this foreign institution of Freemasonry, it behooves you to look to it. It is time for you to inquire in what direction it is leading you.

AMERICAN.

Morals are founded in reason, and reason alone, and constitute one of the most certain of the metaphysical sciences. Whereas religion is above reason, and conforms to laws of its own. Hence it is that morals are subservient to religion. The latter may subsist without a definite moral code; but morals cannot subsist without religion. Thus it has happened that since the separation of church and state, the two elements have also become separate. The church has become more religious and the state more moral. It is the natural and inevitable distinction between the mathematical and the affectional sides of human nature; the one the complement of the other, but the greater including the less.

A Masonic Trial.

EDITORS CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE: About four years ago I began to see light through the darkness of Masonry, by having my attention called to the inconsistency of the Masonic obligations with Christianity. Previous to that time I firmly believed in the great goodness of the institution, and furthermore I improved all opportunity in sounding its praise. But through the goodness of God, in whom I believe and put my trust, I began to investigate the fundamental principles and laws of Masonry, and the longer I examined subject through high Masonic authorities, the stronger were my convictions of the inconsistency of it with my religious belief as a follower of Christ. Therefore I could not adhere to the lodge and at the same time be a member of Christ's church. My first action was to absent myself from the communications, but this did not satisfy my mind, as Masonically I held myself amenable thereto, notwithstanding my non-attendance and non-payment of dues; consequently I called for a demit, but upon consultation with a committee appointed by the lodge, I consented to let the matter rest for another year for further investigation. Subsequently I found that I was not entitled to a demit, as it was the institution of Masonry and not the lodge only from which I wished to withdraw.

At the expiration of the year I sent to the lodge a letter of withdrawal, dated Feb. 25, 1874. (Published in the Cynosure June 4, 1874.) Hearing nothing directly from that, I did no more about it, but in the following June I received a letter from the secretary of the lodge stating that unless I paid my dues previous to June 24th I should be indefinitely suspended from that date. I answered the letter immediately, giving my reasons somewhat at length for non-compliance with the requirements of the letter. But from that time to the day of my trial (March 14, 1877,) I have frequently received notifications of dues, etc., showing that the lodge did not carry out the threatened suspension, or else they were proceeding against "Masonic Jurisprudence." I have been hoping that the matter would be brought to an end, and my hopes were realized in February by receiving the following charges, specifications and notice of trial, etc.:

[COPY.]

To the W. M., Wardens and Brothers of St. Paul's Lodge No. 25, A. F. & A. M.:

We hereby charge Bro. W. H. Sanderson, a member of St. Paul's Lodge No. 25, with unmasonic conduct.

SPECIFICATION.

For that the said W. H. Sanderson, at and ever since the sixth day of October, 1875, has from choice habitually and constantly absented himself from the communications of his lodge, and has neglected to pay his dues to the same for more than one year after they became due and notice given him thereof, in violation of his duty as a Mason.

Signed, F. N. MANCHESTER,
GEO. A. CROSSMAN,
Master Masons and Committee.

Brandon, Vt., Feb. 8, 1877.

BRO. W. H. SANDERSON:

Take notice that charges have been preferred against you for unmasonic conduct, and that a special communication of St. Paul's Lodge No. 25, will be held at Masonic Hall, at Brandon, Vt., on the 14th day of March, 1877, at 7½ o'clock in the evening, for the purpose of hearing and determining the same, at which time and place you are required to attend and answer the said charges.

WILL. F. LEWIS, Master.

Conforming with this notification, I presented myself at the appointed time and place. The lodge was "opened in due form," which means that the usual ritual was said over, reciting the lesson from the Tyler to the Worshipful Master. I was somewhat amused in listening to the opening exercises, by realizing the truthfulness of the different exposures of Masonry. I happened to have a copy of Morgan's book with me, and the exercises compared exactly with the text of the exposure with the exception of an occasional word.

But in due time the lodge was declared opened and ready for business. Charges in the case of two other brothers were first presented, but as the accused had "paid up" to date the charges were dismissed. My own suit being next on the docket, the charges and specifications were read by the prosecuting committee. After numerous questions pro and con relative to my standing on the books of the lodge, the accusers submitted the case for the defence of the accused, whereupon the W. M. remarked: "I notice that Bro. Sanderson is present this evening, and I understand he wishes to say a few words in order that there might be a good understanding of the case, and all in a friendly manner, as he wishes no ill-feeling. We will listen to Bro. S."

W. H. S.—In reply to these charges I have but a few words to say. But in my remarks I wish to be thoroughly understood in regard to my desertion of the lodge and the institution. Knowing full well the contempt and revenge which Masonry entertains for one who has renounced it, and knowing also, the powerful influence which can be exerted by such a "cabalistic empire," it is with the deepest conviction of truth that I come before this tribunal this evening. It is the love of and trust in a crucified Saviour which has caused me to take the position I have. I take this step with no feeling of animosity or ill-will toward any member of this or any other lodge, as I have said in previous communications to this body. Indeed, some of my best friends are members of the order in good standing, and it grieves me to differ with them in opinion on this subject. But my mind is fixed in what seems to be my duty, not only to myself, but to my God. I profess to be a follower of Christ, and I believe that I love him, and I wish to be found faithful in his service. Therefore from this standpoint I cannot consistently remain in the lodge and follow Jesus.

I gave the reasons of my action in brief in a letter of withdrawal which I sent to this lodge the 25th of Feb., 1874, also more in detail in another letter in the following June. (The latter being in reply to a communication from the secretary of the lodge, J. L. Knight, dated June 2, 1874.) But as many members of the order have asked for my reason for seceding from Masonry, I have drawn up a paper giving in detail my position in deserting the order. I have submitted it to the committee, F. N. Manchester and Geo. A. Crossman. I hope every member of this lodge may have an opportunity to read it. This is all I have to say on the defensive.

W. M.—Brethren, you have heard Bro. Sanderson and you now have the opportunity of asking him any questions you like.

S. D., H. Kinsman.—I would like to ask the brother if he did not apply for a demit at first?

W. H. S.—I did, but, as I have stated, before I found I was not entitled to one, because a demit is only a letter of recommendation as a "good Mason," presented with the sole expectation that the recipient is to join another lodge.

S. W., O. Meachem.—I think it would be acceptable to the brethren and also a help to this trial if the paper to which the brother refers should be read. I certainly would like to hear his objection to Masonry. I understand that the document is in the room.

W. M.—Unless the paper has reference to, or direct bearing on this case, I do not think it would be quite admissible.

W. H. S.—I will say at this point, that I drew up the paper for the benefit of any member of the lodge who might wish to know why I deserted Masonry; and I have presented it at this time to the lodge, through the committee, as I had considered it contrary to Masonic usages to read it in open lodge, it having no direct bearing on the charges. However, I am willing to read it if the brethren insist upon it.

W. M.—I think the brother is right, therefore I should rule that it would not be admissible. But if brethren insist I will admit it.

Bro. E. A. Smith.—I would ask upon what brother Sanderson is being tried, as I see no reference yet being made to the charges, and if this paper in any way explains his position, I see no reason why it should not be read.

W. M.—Bro. Smith must remember that the charges against Bro. Sanderson have just been read. They are for non-attendance and non-payment of dues.

W. H. S.—I would say in reply to Bro. Smith, as I have said before this evening, that the paper is not a defense of my charges but a defense of my position in seceding from Masonry. In regard to the charges, I will here make my plea, so that Bro. Smith or any one present may not misunderstand me. I am guiltg of those charges, and by so doing I leave the case for your decision. I suppose, Worshipful Master, that at this point I can withdraw from this communication.

W. M.—If there are no more questions to be asked Bro. Sanderson can now withdraw.

There being nothing further previous the decision of the case, I withdrew, thankful that my Masonic life had ended, although it had ceased in my heart many months ago. I do not know at this date (April 3d) the result of the trial although the secretary was ordered to notify me immediately. I had been advised numerous times not to go near the trial, but I wished to show my colors. I am not ashamed to stand up for Jesus.

W. H. SANDERSON.

The Debauch of Conscience.

Among the calamities which shame and curse the age in which we live, is the debauch and defilement of conscience, the corruption of the very fountain of integrity, and that consequent disregard of moral obligation and divine law, which makes them careless of good and evil, and leads them to wink at iniquity, countenance evil-doing, and sit quietly down without resistance, or protest, while the very elements of manhood, virtue, and integrity are rotted out and destroyed around them, until corruption and iniquity flood the land with shame.

In financial circles, with their gigantic swindles and rascalities; in great corporations, with the oppressive and grinding monopolies; in secret leagues and clans, with their guilty oaths and hidden machinations; in political parties, with their rotten rings of hangers-on and placemen; in civil governments, with the craft and fraud and peculation by which office-seekers thrive; and even in religious societies and associations, with their sectarianism, favoritism, time-serving, and secret wire-pulling; this "leaven of the Pharisees," once hidden and allowed to remain, leavens the whole lump with rottenness and decay.

Aside from secret indulgence in known and cherished sins, there is nothing more dangerous to a young and impressible mind, than to be placed in constant and tolerant association with wrong. To look silently upon iniquity; to hush the indignant outcry of a manly conscience; to bow to evil which seems too strong to be resisted and too well entrenched to be dislodged; to watch the windings of the crooked serpent and yet feel no desire to bruise his infernal head; and thus to harden the conscience, and lose all faith in purity, manhood and integrity, and drift into the current of worldly selfish craft till every trace of honor and uprightness has vanished away—this is fearful in the extreme.

Especially is this disastrous when it occurs in those societies or corporations which are called religious. Inexperienced, ardent and confiding, the novice is there introduced to the tricks and deceptions of unscrupulous partisans and self-seeking demagogues. He reads, unprotesting, the sham reports which he knows are false and deceptive; he observes the constant endeavor to put the best side out; he witnesses the narrowness, the trickery, the unfairness of their actions; he sees one person rejected for his faith, while another who agrees with him fully is endorsed and accepted; he sees one man condemned for his faults, and at the same time another fellowshipped who is well known to be guilty of the same things and worse; he sees the respect paid to worthless men who fawn around their leaders, and the contempt poured upon honesty and talent which cannot be bought with bribes, nor frightened into complaisance; he sees how good, honest, easy men, will bow down and be ridden over by some tyrrannical leader whom they despise, but dare not defy; he sees the sanctimoniousness of men who do the Lord's work, and handle the Lord's money, always making more profit out of God's cause than they could at any other honest business, and thus working ruin and disorder through the land; he sees the honest disgusted, the upright abused, and the feeble crushed, until imporant interests are abandoned by men of intelligence and integrity, and left to languish in the hands of crafty, self-loving tricksters, who rule and ruin all with which they have to do. The young man sees all this, not as some outrageous iniquity to be abhorred and rebuked, but as the work of men whose names are respected, who make long prayers before the public, and sit in the chief seats in the synagogues, and wear the mask and garb of piety above it all; and he sees too, that men who denounce such wrongs are set aside, while those who tolerate them find favor; that honest men are so blinded that they will combine to crush the upright at the beck of the crafty and unscrupulous, and seeing this, he concludes that righteousness is a dream, and integrity a name, and he casts in his lot with the spoilers, and becomes partaker of their craft, their gain, and of their condemnation.

Woe to that man whose conscience is thus debauched. His glory is departed. Greatness and usefulness are not for him. He has parted with the choicest jewel of his manhood, and the treasures of Egypt and the gold of Ophir cannot supply its place. He has become indifferent to right, tolerant of wrong, careless of the authority of God. His course henceforth, is downward. He has put away a good conscience, and unless restrained by grace, he will make shipwreck of faith, and finally look back upon the days of his innocence and uprightness as upon a dim and fleeting dream, and feel that his life has been a failure and a disgrace.

"The fear of the Lord is to HATE evil." It is a sacred intolerance of every wrong and sin. And the man in whose heart is rooted "the fear of God" cannot have partnership with evil in any form. "What communion hath light with darkness?" "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness?" A child of the light, he cannot countenance the secret wrongs which are cloaked under the garb of piety and philanthropy. He is commanded to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." He must tell the truth, if it costs him friendship, fame, position, or power. He must stand solitary and alone. And if his words are unheeded, and the wrong prevails over all opposition, he must shake the dust from his feet for a testimony, and wash his hands in innocency, and come out from among them and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing.

Man of God, suffer, I pray you, a word of exhortation. Keep a good conscience, if you keep nothing else. Shun craft and trickery in every form. Learn to look the whitest looking devil in his pious face, and say, "I WON'T!" Stand up for God, and guard your integrity as you anticipate in time, and in eternity will be grander than your most exalted dreams. You may miss opportunities and lose positions in this world, but God shall provide some better thing, from which you cannot be barred by craft or ejected by guile. Eternity is longer than time and the world to come has higher honors than any that this earth can boast. Live then for that world; and meditate solemnly upon these words of Holy Writ:

"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is condemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved." Ps. XV.—The Christian.

Dangers and Remedies.

[From an Essay read in Milton, Wis., by Miss M. S. Harvey,]

Intemperance, like a raging flood, is sweeping over our land and carrying down to eternal ruin hundreds of beings yearly. Statistics show that in this country over one billion of dollars is annually spent for liquor, and two hundred and fifty millions of dollars for tobacco. Look at that youth just starting out on the voyage of life with an intellect and principles that predict great success. But, alas, the social glass is placed before him. He seizes it, and in that glass is sealed his doom. In a few years you inquire for him and are shocked at the answer: just tottering on the brink of the grave. Liquor and tobacco have ruined him. Must we see our friends and acquaintances whose lives are opening so fair, promising great usefulness in the future, drawn from their respectability and affluence into this great whirlpool of destruction? Must we see them led on step by step until the demon has bound them with chains and fetters which they cannot rend. Must we see this monster walk unchallenged into our congressional halls, and lead captive our statesmen? Is there no help? Yes, there is hope in this dark night. A star whose name is Cynosure has arisen in the north, and may it continue to rise higher and higher, and spread its light over our country until it shall lead the wise men of this nation as the star of Bethlehem led the wise men of the East to the Saviour of the world. May its beams shed a radiance all over the land till the last evil is rooted out, and this nation becomes a nation of honor unparalleled in the history of the world; a nation which God can delight to own and to bless.

Four years from last November will witness at the polls a strong party voting against intoxicating liquors and secret societies. The party was organized this centennial year under the name of American, with the well known author of "The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation" as candidate for Presidency. But, says one, it is impossible to destroy these evils they have existed so long. What does our Saviour say on this point? "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." "In secret have I said nothing." "Fear them not therefore, for there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be made known. Therefore, whatsoever ye have spoken in the darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in the closets shall be proclaimed upon the house-tops." If the Creator of the world is not good authority, who is? Light is fast being thrown upon the dark recesses of the lodge-rooms, and they are tottering beneath its influence. They cannot stand the light. They must vanish "like the mist of the morning before the coming sun." D. L. Moody, the great evangelist, strongly denounces secret societies, and clearly demonstrates that men belonging to both the lodge and the church must leave either the one or the other. He says, "if they choose to leave the church, let them go. Hundreds of better men will come in and take their places." And that is what we want.

A Knox County Court Decision.

State of Illinois,) Northern Grand Division,)
Supreme Court, September term, A. D. 1877.
W H. Robinson,
vs.
Yates City Lodge No. 448, A. F. & A. M.
Error from Knox,

This suit was brought by plaintiff to recover the amount of money paid by him to the lodge for the rights and privileges of Masonry, of which said rights and privileges he claims to have been unlawfully deprived by the lodge. At the trial of the case before a police magistrate (March 15, 1876,) defendant failed to appear and consequently judgment was rendered for plaintiff for the sum of twenty-five dollars and costs, on his oath that defendant was justly indebted to him to that amount. Defendant appealed to the circuit court of Knox county, and on the trial of the case in the circuit court at the October term, A. D. 1876, the following facts were established, as has been agreed by the parties to this suit and by the court:

That defendant is a Masonic Lodge at Yates City, Knox county, Illinois; that plaintiff was a member in good standing of said lodge prior to the 7th day of June, 1873; that the said lodge had power by its constitution and by-laws to which plaintiff subscribed on becoming a member by giving the accused ample time and opportunity to prepare his defence, the right to be present at all examinations of witnesses either in or out of the lodge, and to propose such relevant questions as he might desire to expel a member for unmasonic conduct. That on the 7th day of June, 1873 and while plaintiff was a member of said lodge, he was served, by an officer of the lodge, at Yates City, Illinois, with a paper charging him with unmasonic conduct, and summoning him to appear before the lodge on the 19th day of June, 1873, to answer said charge. That on the 14th day of June, 1873, plaintiff notified the Master of the lodge that he could not be present at the time appointed for his trial on said charge without interfering with his duties as County Surveyor of said Knox county; that he was tried by the lodge in his absence at the time appointed (June 19, 1873); that he was found guilty of unmasonic conduct, and as a penalty therefor expelled from the lodge, and that the foregoing are all the facts in the case.

Judgment for defendant. Judgment assigned for error by plaintiff and defendant joins issue in due form on said assignment of error.

Now I (plaintiff) do not pretend to be an attorney-at-law, and I have not employed an attorney for two reasons: first, I am not able to pay a competent attorney a reasonable compensation for his services; and, second, I think I am better posted on this particular case than any attorney could be unless he were a Mason, in which case he could not consistently espouse my cause. I do not pretend that a civil court can interfere with a Masonic lodge for the purpose of determining in advance of a Masonic trial whether a member of said lodge, who is under charges of unmasonic conduct, is guilty or not guilty of the offences charged against him. Or for the purpose of determining whether a member of said lodge shall be expelled or simply reprimanded for a Masonic offence of which he has been duly convicted after a fair and impartial trial, in which he has been allowed all the advantages guaranteed to him by the constitution and by-laws of the Grand Lodge or of the lodge of which he is a member; for Masonic offences range from the highest crimes known to our laws down to being saucy to Masonic superiors. And the Masonic punishments which may be inflicted by a Masonic lodge on one of its members, for any kind of a Masonic offence of which he has been duly convicted after a fair trial, may be a sugar-coated reprimand administered by the Master of the lodge in private, or it may be, as in my case, expulsion from all the rights and benefits of Masonry, and the expulsion made public at the discretion of the brethren. It depends entirely upon the feelings of the brethren present, and those feelings are not apt to be friendly towards a brother who may have given offence to the Worshipful Master, when said Worshipful Master prevents his lodge from hearing both sides. But I do claim that when a Mason is deprived of all the rights and privileges of Masonry, and published as a perjured scoundrel (for that is what a Masonic expulsion practically amounts to), under pretence that he has committed some unpardonable offence, it is the duty of a civil court, on proper application being made, to interfere for the purpose of determining whether said lodge has proceeded according to Masonic law in the matter of a trial. If it were not so individual Masons would be completely at the mercy of the Worshipful Masters and compelled, in order to maintain their Masonic standing, to tolerate all the rascality that their Masters might see fit to engage in. The power to enforce absolute secrecy in regard to every thing that takes place in a Masonic lodge, lawful or unlawful, is all there is lacking to render the Masonic government an absolute despotism.

Now my proposition in regard to this case is just this: The notice given by me to the Master of the lodge on the 14th day of June, 1873, that I could not be present at the time appointed for my trial on a charge of unmasonic conduct (June 19, 1873,) without interfering with my duties as County Surveyor, was sufficient to completely invalidate any proceedings in my case in the nature of a trial held by the lodge on said 19th day of June, 1873, and consequently my expulsion was unlawful, and I am entitled to nominal if not exemplary damages. It is true that defendant's attorney has refused to join issue with me on a proposition expressed in that form, as he is very tenacious in regard to forms. But I claim that the proposition is not inconsistent with my assignment of error. And as my bill of exceptions agreed to by defendant, and duly signed and sealed by the judge, purports to contain all the facts in the case, the presumption that might otherwise be entertained that the Circuit Court had other evidence upon which to base his decision should be regarded as disposed of. In support of my proposition I refer to sections 62 and 63 of the Grand Lodge by-laws:

Sec. 62. All trials for Masonic offences in lodges under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge shall be as follows: A regular charge in writing specifying the nature of the offence, and signed by the accuser, shall be delivered to the secretary, who shall read the same at the next regular communication, at which time the Master shall appoint a time and place for trial, of which it shall be the duty of the secretary to give the accused due and timely notice, and the accused shall be entitled to a copy of the charges and to ample time and opportunity to prepare his defence.

Sec. 63. All Masonic trials shall take place in the lodge of the highest degree to which the accused has attained, in which the examination of witnesses shall take place in the presence of both the accused and the accuser, who shall have the right to be present at all examinations of witnesses in or out of the lodge, and to propose such relevant questions as they may desire.

Now there is no pretence on the part of the defendant that (with the exception of the service of summons) any of the requirements of sections 62 and 63 were complied with by the lodge in my case. Masonic law does not specify what notice a Mason under charges of unmasonic conduct shall be entitled to, further than to say that it shall be the duty of the secretary to give him due and timely notice, and that he shall have ample time to prepare his defence. The terms "timely" and "ample time" are generally understood to mean all the time that could be reasonably required, and it is certainly very unreasonable to require a Mason who is a County Surveyor, and who has, at some seasons of the year, all the official business that he can attend to, to drop all his official business for the purpose of attending a meeting of a Masonic lodge, or in default of his dropping his official business, to proceed with a sham trial in his absence, and deprive him of all his Masonic rights, including the right of a fair and impartial trial.

To show that a Mason is not bound to neglect even his own private business for the purpose of attending a meeting of his lodge, I give a part of the charge given by the Worshipful Master to each and every Entered Apprentice Mason. I quote from Webb's Monitor, page 37 which is generally considered good Masonic authority: "Although your frequent appearance at our regular meetings is earnestly solicited, yet it is not meant that Masonry should interfere with your necessary avocations, for these are on no account to be neglected." Just such contingencies as that which happened to me on the 14th of June, 1873, are still further provided for in the Master Mason's obligation, as follows: "I furthermore promise and swear that I will answer and obey all due signs and summons sent me from a lodge of Master Masons or given me by a brother of this degree if within the length of my cable tow." Or as might be expressed in other words, if I can do so without interfering with my necessary avocations which are on no account to be interfered with or neglected. * *

In rendering his decision in the circuit court the judge used the following illustration (and then refused to put his words in black and white): "Now it is like this: suppose you are County Surveyor, and you are summoned to appear before this court at a certain time, and you should inform the court that you had business to attend to." "Business for the county," said I. "Yes, business for the county," replies the court. "It would not be sufficient to excuse you from obeying the summons." At this point I asked the court the following question: "Am I to understand that you allow a Masonic lodga to have the powers of a circuit court?" As the court refused me an answer, I now ask the same question of the Supreme Court, and claim that I am entitled to an unequivocal answer. This is the question on which the decision of this case depends. If Masonic lodges have such powers as have been allowed by the circuit court of Knox county the people who make courts and county officers ought to know it. I have, therefore, brought this case before a court that is supposed to know the law and to be uninfluenced in its decisions by any secret obligations. For the sake of holding defendant to the point at issue, I propose to admit that according to Masonic law a Masonic lodge may try one of its members on a charge of unmasonic conduct in his absence in case he refuses or neglects (without giving any excuse for such neglect) to obey a due summons. But the lodge must first allow the accused the benefit of sections 62 and 63 of the Grand Lodge by-laws, unless it becomes clearly manifest that he does not intend to avail himself of said benefits. A lodge has no right to presume that the accused has no defence to make because he does not see fit to drop all business, public or private, for the sake of obeying a Masonic summons. I do not propose to refer the Supreme Court to the statute for the purpose of showing all duties that a County Surveyor is required by law to perform, I simply challenge defendant to show that a Masonic lodge has authority to interfere with the performance of any of his duties under pretence of enforcing Masonic discipline. Respectfully submitted.

W. H. ROBINSON,
Plaintiff in Error.

P. S.—In order to more clearly define the issue in this case I charge George N. Pierce, Worshipful Master (at the time of my expulsion) of Yates City Lodge, with removing the black balls from the ballot-box preparatory to balloting on the petition of one Thos. Kersey to be made a Mason in Yates City Lodge, about the middle of July, 1872. And I charge defendant with trumping up frivolous charges that could not have been sustained by a fair and impartial trial under the provisions of section 62 and 63 of the Grand Lodge by-laws. With instituting and conducting a sham trial in my absence and expelling me from the lodge for the manifest purpose of protecting their Worshipful Master from an investigation, which, as a Mason in good standing I was entitled to and should have obtained, but which was avoided by my expulsion; as no charges made by an outsider or expelled Mason against a Mason in good standing can according to Masonic usage be entertained. CANADA—LETTER FROM PAST MASTER RONAYNE.

PRESTON, Ont., Apr. 24, 1877.

MY DEAR FRIEND K.: As you will see by my heading I have left Waterloo and arrived at my third appointment. I wrote to you last week giving only a very faint description of our meetings in Berlin. It would be utterly impossible to do them full justice, as in the opinion of the oldest inhabitant in the town there never was anything in Berlin since the first house was built there which came anywhere near creating such an excitement and drawing together so many people at one time in the Town Hall as our Anti-masonic exposures and lectures did last week. You know, perhaps, the nervous feeling which involuntarily creeps over me and the great anxiety I sometimes feel regarding these meetings generally, and I confess that on my arrival in Berlin and before the first meeting took place I felt considerably uneasy and restless, not from any dread of Masonic opposition, for I delight in that, but from a feeling that I myself am inadequate to perform satisfactorily the great task imposed upon me. I feel as if my abilities were far very far too small and my utterances altogether too feeble to grapple successfully with such a hideous monster of iniquity, and that it would require the trained talents of a master orator to present it in a fitting and convincing manner before the public. But I was enthusiastically received, and at the close of my first exposure when a certain D. McDougald vehemently denounced the lecture and lecturer and endeavored to create a popular sentiment against me by referring to the heir apparent to the British throne as a Freemason and the Grand Master of all England, the audience manifested their approval of my work and their disapproval of Bro. McDougald's peculiar method of defending the grand old humbug by actually hissing him out of the hall. That finished the business. I knew from that moment that public sentiment was decidedly in my favor and that any further opposition from Masonic apologists would not be tolerated for a single instant, or if at all permitted would only be an assistance in the onslaught against the dark doings of the lodge. In the wise dispensations of Divine Providence, however, the District Association of the U. B. church began their annual session there on the following day, and on the second evening I was cheered and encouraged beyond measure by the presence on the platform of the ministers of that Association, among whom was my old friend Rev. D. B. Sherk. The meetings in Berlin were a triumphant success, but what shall I say of the meetings in Waterloo? I left Berlin on Thursday, the 19th inst., for the latter city, where I had appointments for that and the two succeeding evenings, and I may as well not attempt to describe these meetings, as it would be utterly impossible for me to do them fair justice. Men and women, whole families, in fact, whole neighborhoods—ten, twelve, and even fourteen miles away came to see and hear the dark, sinful abominations of Masonry, and there they sat from three to five hours each evening in wonder and amazement, occasionally breaking forth into exclamations of horror as each succeeding iniquity of this diabolical system was unfolded before their astonished vision. The members of the craft were dumbfounded and awe-stricken and a complete victory was achieved over the greatest monster of infamy and sin of the present generation.

After the meeting on Saturday night I returned back to my old quarters at Berlin, being only two miles distant from Waterloo, and you cannot conceive nor I describe my joy on Sabbath evening, when on going to the United Brethren church I had the great pleasure of being shaken by the hand and warmly greeted by that noble old veteran apostle, the celebrated Bishop Weaver. He attended the conference of the U. B. church at Freeport in this county and was up to preach in Berlin that evening. Oh what a thrill of joy ran through my whole being when I looked around at these men, many of them strangers to me, and to one another, yet all meeting in perfect love, being children of the same Father, members of the same family, redeemed by the same Saviour, and now lovingly standing around this messenger of God to learn some news of home and hear what their loving Father had to say through the mouth of his tried and trusty servant. The bishop was not feeling well, indeed he was suffering considerably from a very severe cold and hoarseness, but yet he delivered his message in such a manner as to reach every heart and awaken sentiments of gratitude and love from every soul present. It was the first gospel sermon I had heard since I left Chicago, though I have attended divine worship twice each Sabbath, and I am almost certain that none of those present on that occasion will ever forget it. His text was that famous declaration of Paul's, "And ye are complete in Him," and as I listened to his words I don't think I have ever heard anything that caused me more pleasure. In a union with Christ the believer has everything that his soul can long for and desire. He has light, he has eternal life, he is in the way to eternal glory. There is no condemnation for him; he has love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness. The Father and the Son are dwelling in him, the Holy Spirit is guiding and directing him, and the angels of heaven are encamped round about him. All heaven is concerned in the salvation of one soul, and all heaven is interested in every believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. By a union with Christ we are in heaven and heaven is with us. Such are a few of the outlines of Bishop Weaver's sermon, and as I listened I could not but think (and the thought brought deep regret and sorrow in spite of my present joy) how many men there are, how many ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ who heedless of all these manifold blessings and forgetful of all God's great and infinite mercies, forsake all these heavenly advantages and go in search of truth and light into the dark recesses of a Masonic lodge; where truth never enters, where light never beams and where real joy and happiness can never come. No wonder that our Father has said, "Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks: walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled. This shall ye have of my hand; ye shall lie down in sorrow."—Isa. 50: 11. Oh that the

THE MALAKOFFS VS. THE REDANS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE: Every number of the Cynosure declares in express terms that one of the objects of the National Christian Association is "to redeem the administration of justice from perversion." Yet this subject is not receiving its share of the attention of our Anti-masonic lecturers and writers. And why? it may be asked. I answer, because the purification of the churches seems to be uppermost in their minds. However important this work may be, when accomplished it will be found that Masonry has been scarcely impaired in either its efficiency or power—and the reason? It is this, and none other: Five-sixths, or perhaps a greater proportion of the Masonic membership is made up of worldly-minded men who care not for God, man, or the devil, and with them worldly advantage is the prime, moving necessity. The Masonic organization, therefore, hold the churches as secondary fortifications to their main ones, the courts; the former being the Redans while the latter are the Malakoffs of their strength. To assault the Redans and utterly neglect the Malakoffs will prove poor policy indeed. In the Crimean war, when the French assaulted and carried the Russian fortification called the Redan, they could not hold it, because the English, who were their allies, failed to capture the Malakoff. So will it prove in this warfare with Masonry. We may drive it out of the churches but if left in undisputed possession of the courts, the vicious thing will be constantly reasserting itself in the churches. Therefore, to break its back and utterly destroy its vitality, we must crush it in the courts. But how is this to be done? Manifestly not by leaving it alone and undisturbed therein, but on the contrary by waging the most aggressive and relentless warfare upon it possible within those citadels of strength. And how is the warfare within the courts to be inaugurated and carried out? The answer properly is, by educating the people to a recognition of its ever-hated presence therein, and the all-pervading necessity for its total abolition as a factor in court trials and decisions, and this enlightenment of the people can only be consummated by placing in their hands books, circulars, pamphlets and other documents appropriate to the subject. But to place this kind of literature in their hands requires money, and to realize this, a special fund, to be called a Court Tract Fund must be created, with which to provide the necessary literature for gratuitous distribution, and the way to the creation of this fund, is by voluntary donations, which can be had by a fair presentation of the subject to the consideration of the public.

In confirmation of these views, and disclaiming all egotism in offering the following matter, I present the letter of friend Collins of Windsor, Connecticut, as good food for reflection. Under date of April 3d, Mr. Collins remarks: "I want to thank you again for the interest you take in our reform. I always look to see if there is anything from Bro. Woodward in the Cynosure. I have got new light on the subject since reading your letter. I know that any intelligent person that will study Masonry in the light of truth will hate it, and I believe as you do that to get at its foundation, we must strike it a more deadly blow than can be done in the churches alone. I know as well as you do that Freemasons who are really so —those who take pride in the institution care not for God, man or devil. I firmly believe, as you do, that the main fight must be made in the courts, in business and in politics. I have not voted for a Mason knowingly for any office for several years, neither will I as long as I live. I seek out lawyers and business men that are not Masons and either send or give them your court house book. I would be glad to contribute to a Court Tract Fund according to my ability. I circulate tracts on the cars and everywhere it can be done advantageously."

In conclusion I ask that some space and attention be given to the subject of Masonry in its relation to the courts, and that steps outside of mere paper professions be taken "to redeem the administration of justice from perversion." When this is done the Redans and Malakoffs will have gone entirely out of the possession of the enemy. He will then have been conquered.

Yours in every laudable effort to overthrow the work of the "dark dens of iniquity."

J. H. H. Woodward.

What Causeth to Differ?

Dear Cynosure: It is sad to see how Christian people differ in their views and opinions. Receiving the subscription from one as he inquired about the paper he asked with earnestness, "Does it oppose Good Templarism?" When answered in the affirmative he expressed his satisfaction.

Another subscriber told me that a large and flourishing lodge of Free (bond) masons was the result of a Good Templar lodge in his place, which is now defunct, and lodge and rum rule.

I had a letter from a young man who is reading the Cynosure, saying that he likes the paper very much except its unqualified opposition to all secret societies, even though their object be good; as, for instance, the order of Good Templars. "When I saw advertised in the paper 'Good Templarism exposed,' I could but feel a little unfriendly to it." He adds, "I cannot conscientiously distribute the Moody tracts you sent me on account of their condemnation of secret temperance societies." ("Great is Diana of the Ephesians.") He writes: "I am in full sympathy with its opposition to Masonry and the like, and the better I become posted the more I shall use my influence in that direction. I am surprised at the disclosures against it since I met you."

One old gentleman whom I asked if he read the Cynosure said yes, and added that he would sooner go without one meal a day than do without the paper.

In canvassing for the paper and distributing tracts I have received insults and been called a fool, but with Paul I can say, "None of these things move me." May the Lord abundantly bless you in the great work you have undertaken and may your lives be spared to see great good accomplished in the name of the Master is the prayer of Experiences of a Local Association.

Dear Cynosure: I saw not long since, in your columns, a few words in answer to what I said in a business letter in relation to the Spencer Christian Association, formed against secret societies. You seem to think that we lack some magnetic power, but if you understood our situation you would not wonder so much, for we have great odds to face. There are three churches here, and the lodge uses them for lightning rods. The Presbyterian church is a lightning rod on one gable, the M. E. church on the other, and the Baptist is a straddle rod over the center coming down to the ground on each side.

Now you can see how electricity is warded off by the churches. Some who joined the association have given up, discouraged, and think there is no use fighting Masonry as long as the churches will defend it. But some of us will not give it up, God being our helper, and I am looking for better times.

After all, I think our movement has done some good. It has prevented some from joining the lodge who were intending to, and there is an undercurrent at work against the lodge. When the movement was first made against Masonry the pastors of the two first named churches were Masons, but now there is a change and the pastors of these churches are not Masons, but they don't say or preach against the system for fear, I suppose, it will effect their salaries, and in effect Masonry runs these churches. At this time the Baptists had no pastor in charge, and quite a number of them joined the association, one deacon among the number who made a high profession against Masonry, that he never should support a minister who was an adhering Mason in the future. But soon came along a hoodwinked preacher who made quite a favorable impression on the congregation, and a majority wanted to hire him. Some of the Anti-masons opposed it, and would not agree to support him unless he would give up Masonry. That he would not do; he would give up preaching before he would Masonry; so I have been told.

So they disagreed and turned some of the Anti-masonic members out of the church and kept the Mason to preach to them, and he is still pastor of the Baptist church in this place. The above-mentioned deacon took sides with the hoodwinked preacher, notwithstanding the high professions he had made, and left the association with others, and we have to face their opposition. You can see what we have to contend with. But there are a few of us who mean to fight it out on this line if it takes us all our lives.

What we need here is plain gospel preaching against all kinds of sin, and name it in the sermons. There is a great deal of "milk-and-water" preaching now-a-days. Men dare not speak against the popular sins of the day, and so long as ministers preach in this way secretism will increase and the lodges will grow fat.

I am at present a member of the M. E. church at this place. I do not see anything to encourage me to work in this church any more it is so filled up with Masonry and worldliness of nearly every kind; and the last General Conference endorsed the lodge, and I do not feel right. It has taken the work out of me. As I have opposed secret societies of every kind and oppose sin in every form I find I cannot do it and keep in peace with all the members of the church. I think I shall join the Free Methodist although there is not a society very near.

A Promise Perverted.

Ames, Story Co., Ia.

Editor Cynosure: I am an Anti-mason; made so first by seeing juries hung by Masons where the cases were plain. It seems as if the Masons are all one-sided and cannot see right when one of their number is being tried, or has a suit with one that does not belong to the order. I was also convinced that Masonry was wrong by comparing Mackey's Ritual with the Bible. I had a long article witten to send to you quoting passages of Scripture they have perverted; but the article on the Baptist Beacon in the 8th of March gives nearly all that I had prepared and many other things. I have examined his quotations from Mackey's Ritual, and find them correct. Masonry claims to be ancient, but we find it using the language of Jesus Christ in one of the first prayers, (Mackey's Ritual p. 549.) It reads thus: "Thou hast promised where two or three are gathered together there will I be in the midst to bless them." Christ did not say "to bless them;" but they have it so. It is a mystery to me how they could have used that language before the birth of Christ who spoke them.

Our Mail.

Henry Cope, New Sharon, Iowa, writes: "The people seem to lack confidence to some extent in the information that is published against Masonry, as there are some members who appear to be honest men who say the publications are false. There are but few here who will openly attack Masonry, but I hope that ere long they can be so stirred up to a sense of their duty that they will come out boldly on the right side."

Eld. E. Meredith, Otsego, Wis., writes: "I do hate the works of darkness with a perfect hatred, as I do their author."

Wm. H. Aten, Sciota, Ill., writes: "We are surrounded with lodge influence. It crops out in everything. One of my neighbors who was an advocate of Masonry last year, tells me now that he wants the Cynosure as soon as he can afford it. Your paper is needed here outside of our church, (United Brethren). There is little opposition to Masonry. Many admit it is wrong but havn't thought much about it. The people need education on the subject."

O. W. Loney, Fennimore, Wis., writes: "I am living in a hot-bed of secrecy, surrounded with Masons, Odd fellows, Templars and grangers. I have been fighting it more or less ever since the abduction and murder of Wm. Morgan in 1826 by the Masons, and I shall never cease to fight it until I cease to live. The more I investigate them the more I hate and detest secret orders, and the more thoroughly I am convinced that they belong to the prince of darkness."

George Surface, North Union, Ind., writes: "I have given all my Cynosures to my neighbors, and sent them far and wide, and they have had a good influence. My daily prayer is that God may bless the means that are made use of to destroy secrecy. I speak boldly against secrecy in private and public. I don't fear the devil but I fear God and love his cause."

I. B. Cressinger, Sullivan, O., writes: "I tried to make myself believe that I could not afford to continue taking your most excellent paper for want of the requisite funds, but as you see failed in doing so. Freemasonry cheated me out of over one hundred dollars, and this is how it was done: One of the Masons is carrying on a cheese factory in our township and I reported him to the grand jury for Sabbath breaking. They found a true bill, but the prosecuted put in a plea of not guilty. So it was put off upon one plea or another, from one term of court to another, until they had fixed up all things to their notion. And when the case was finally called up for trial, we found that the State's witness had been tampered with. So that the man upon whose testimony the grand jury found a bill had forgotten all about the matter, and so we failed to make out a case. This witness had told me but three days before that he would still testify to the work, time and place as he had done before the grand jury. This Freemason got three of our lawyer Masons to help him concoct the matter."

Mrs. Laura Darbee, Westfalls, N. Y., writes:

"The people seem to be so stupid. They say they do not believe in Masonry, but will not take a step to put it down."

P. Gable, Stewardstown, Pa., writes:

"The public must be convinced by public lectures by such men as Ronayne and others, who can convince the public, that these things are so. Reading matter don't seem to touch the people's feelings nor convince them of the truth of the matter."

E. Dartens, Paint Creek, Mich., writes:

"I saw the man who has the care of the Quaker meeting-house here. He thinks that it can be had for Brother Rathbun to lecture in, but I have not the money. I think this ought to be an Anti-masonic mission field."

R. A. Cullor, Unionville, Mo., writes:

"I am getting fresh courage every day, for I see that our reform is growing as the wheels of time roll on."

E. B. Webster, Hadley, Mich., writes:

"We carried the balance of power between the two parties for town clerk on the American party ticket."

John A. Thuma, Parnassus, Va., writes:

"There are a great many Masons in this vicinity; when you speak to them about the secrets of Masonry being exposed, they tell you that is all a humbug and that you know nothing about their secrets. One Mason admitted to me that a part of them were true but not all of them."

Wm. H. Showalter, Stribling Springs, Va., writes:

"I like the Cynosure on account of its fearlessness, and because it speaks the truth without fear, favor or affection. I consider oath-bound secrecy one of the greatest curses that ever cursed any nation. There is a strong element of anti-secrecy here in the valley of Virginia. We ought to have a good lecturer here, such as Ronayne, to arouse the people to their duty."

Miles Fisk, Ganges, Mich., writes:

"A friend and myself voted the American party ticket last fall."

W. P. Smith, Perrysville, Ind., sends the subscription of Rev. John Hoobler, and writes:

"I loaned my paper to a neighbor, and Bro. Hoobler happened to see it. By this means I send you the new subscription."

Jane Liggett, Mount Ayr, Iowa, writes:

"Mr. Smith, a Wesleyan Methodist minister, preached for us yesterday. His text was 'Let us alone!' He showed that was what those in error asked, from Cain down to the present time. That is just what secretism wants."

Moses Gallup, Wasioja, Minn., writes:

"Edmond Ronayne did much good here. Freemasons in denying his veracity, integrity and knowledge of Freemasonry make a black mark against themselves."

P. Woodring, Sumner, Iowa, writes:

"I know quite a number who would take the Cynosure, but for the very hard times, and I feel it very much, too. This last year was an almost total failure of crops, and consequently a great many are in debt, and cannot pay until another harvest, but our prospect is bright for a good crop this year."

Chas. Wood, Elkhart, Ind., writes:

"I must do something to kill Masonry. I believe it is the worst thing in the land."

P. P. Swan, Metamora, Mich., writes:

"There is one Mason here who says the Masonic lodge is the best thing in the world to fit a man for heaven. That Mason two or three years ago stood at the ninth degree, but he has been going down since. I don't know how many degrees he has gone down but he is pursuing a downward course."

James Dudley, Delavan, Wis., writes:

"The Cynosure grows better all the time."

LESSON XIX.—MAY 13, 1877.—JEHU THE KING.

SCRIPTURE.—2 Ki. 10: 20–31. Commit 28–31. Primary verse, 31.

20. And Jehu said, Proclaim a solemn assembly for Baal. And they proclaimed it.

21. And Jehu sent through all Israel: and all the worshipers of Baal came, so that there was not a man left that came not. And they came into the house of Baal: and the house of Baal was full from one end to another.

22. And he said unto him that was over the vestry, Bring forth vestments for all the worshipers of Baal. And he brought them forth vestments.

23. And Jehu went, and Jehonadab the son of Rechab, into the house of Baal, and said unto the worshipers of Baal, Search, and look that there be here with you none of the servants of the Lord, but the worshipers of Baal only.

24. And when they went in to offer sacrifices and burnt offerings, Jehu appointed four-score men without, and said, If any of the men whom I have brought into your hands escape, he that letteth him go, his life shall be for the life of him.

25. And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt offering, that Jehu said to the guard and to the captains, Go in, and slay them; let none come forth. And they smote them with the edge of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out, and went to the city of the house of Baal.

26. And they brought forth the images out of the house of Baal and burned them.

27. And they brake down the image of Baal, and brake down the house of Baal, and made it a draught house unto this day.

28. Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel.

29. Howbeit from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, Jehu departed not from after them, to wit, the golden calves that were in Bethel, and that were in Dan.

30. And the Lord said unto Jehu, Because thou hast done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and hast done unto the house of Anab according to all that was in mine heart, thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel.

31. But Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the Lord God of Israel with all his heart: for he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam, which made Israel to sin.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"But Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the Lord God of Israel with all his heart."—31.

TOPIC.—"Serve God with a perfect heart."

LESSONS.

1. There may be great reformation without any true conversion. It was so here with the government of Israel.

2. True conversion only takes place when the heart—the whole heart—is surrendered to God. We must not do only what God enjoins, but because he enjoins it.

3. We are not to withhold commendation from well-doing because it is not perfect-doing. We need not be afraid to commend the good deeds of imperfect men when God does it.

4. Let us not be dismayed by the arrogance of unbelief. We now see what was the real numerical strength of Baalism. It embraced but a fraction of the entire population of Israel. True, its power had very considerably decreased since the days of Ahab; but it was always probably, numerically considered, comparatively weak. And yet, with the court on its side, it had apparently well nigh crushed out the religion of Jehovah. So to-day. Boasting a few great names, secularism in politics and materialism in science, seek to create a terrorism which may awe into silence, if not submission, he thought of the age.

5. The importance of securing godly rulers. What an influence goes out from their personal character and unofficial conduct.—Evangelical Repository.

Peace does not dwell in outward things, but within the soul. We may preserve it in the midst of bitterest pain, if we will remain firm and submissive. Peace in this life springs from acquiescence even in disagreeable things, not in an exemption from suffering.

A child will infer from the spirit which pervades a household whether the kingdom of heaven is a fact or fiction. If it concludes it to be a fiction, how must the soul suffer! If it feels and knows it to be a glorious and joyful truth that heaven is near and above us, how will the spirit be drawn upward and onward.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 3, 1877.

THE "FALLING AWAY" OF THE CHURCHES.

Prior to the "Great Awakening" of 1740, piety had so run down in the New England churches, that Whitefield said in his published diary, "Many, perhaps most that preach, I fear do not experimentally know Christ." "The difference between the church and the world," says a judicious narrator, "was vanishing away; church discipline was neglected; and the growing laxness of morals was invading the churches." Indeed it was maintained openly that ministers of the gospel need not necessarily be regenerate men. And a large Boston Convention of ministers, condemned as an error and defect of the revival the requiring the relation of Christian experience preparatory to membership, because the attempt was erroneous to have churches composed of people renewed by the Holy Ghost. But the great and wonderful awakening, with the preaching of Edwards, Whitefield, the Tennants, and other holy men cast out and suppressed the mischievous attempts of religious worldlings to bring into the churches persons incapable of spiritually discerning the Lord's body; and into the pulpits men practically ignorant of Christ.

The one all-overshadowing cause of church-deterioration and consequent woe and misery of men, has been, is, and is yet to be, idolatry, or the spurious worships of this earth; that idolatry can be practiced and is practiced in Christian countries as in pagan, and that no age or nation is exempt, nor will be until church-deterioration shall cease, 'the sun of Zion no more go down, nor her moon withdraw itself,' because the Lord shall be her everlasting light, and the days of her mourning be ended."

But before that "great and notable day" can come, we are told that there shall be a falling away first. And tokens multiply that that final apostacy is near.

The order of Jesuits, a century since, suppressed by the Pope and cast out by all Europe, has long since usurped control of the Papacy. Formed in 1540 to counteract the revival of the 16th century, twenty-three years after Luther's theses, that stupendous engine of mischief has justified the description of the Papacy applied to itself, as "one stupendous demonical possession." Defying the opinion of mankind; never losing heart by reverses, nor abashed when its gunpowder plots have been exposed, or its St. Bartholomew days are remembered; it sits grim and ghastly on its secret throne, the prince, and mother, and model of all that piety or patriotism should abhor; all that is at once clandestine, cruel and corrupt.

I take from a paper whose idolatrous motto is a prayer to the Virgin, an extract from an address delivered by Bishop Gilmour to a crowded cathedral of Irish and German Catholics: He tells them that "It has long been ruled by the head of the church, by the bishops in council assembled, and in their several dioceses, that Catholics are forbid to send Catholic children to the public schools." And he warns them that if they are not "very careful, under the cry of liberty and the rights of freemen, we will after a little begin to hear the question discussed—whether we have not a right to discuss faith, the words of our Divine Master and the powers of the church!" And he assures them that "With her (the church) there can be no possible discussion."

The wonder that a vast congregation of Americans could hear and applaud a speaker who tells them they are forbid to discuss faith or church government, their belief or their duty, is exceeded only by the fact that an American could make such a speech.

But terrible as is this vast and growing power, we should have less to apprehend from it had we not secret orders of our own; the monkish orders of Protestantism, operating nightly under despotic constitutions; modeled largely after that of the Jesuits. Our Mormons, too, another clandestine priestly order, are by no means limited to the community at Salt Lake, but are permeating our States silently with their leaven of priest-power and rites, and now, as ever, infidelity and superstition, Pilate and Herod, join hands against Christ; and the loudest liberalist, if he be an infidel, loves these secret, idolatrous and despotic orders, and hates those who oppose them whether here or in Germany.

But why dwell on the elements of mischief, still happily in the minority, by their own divisions, among us? The pagan nations, with their million on millions, are brought by steam and electricity to our doors. Their men, too, can be made soldiers; and as their ideas and institutions are superstition and despotism to make common cause with these evils in Christendom they wait but for the fusing of the latter day.

THE LODGE A "BROKEN REED."

"Scotch" Willie is the familiar title of an intelligent young man who led the noon meeting at 221 West Madison street last Friday. It was "temperance" day, and Mr. Delight, a well known reformed man and earnest Christian worker, was to lead, but, though present, was prevented from taking part by a very severe hoarseness. He obtained the young man mentioned for his substitute, and in connection a bit of his history will be of interest.

About the first of November last at one of the noon meetings in Farwell Hall, Mr. Moody read a letter that had been sent him enclosing another from an old father and mother in a Scotland. The ltter was full of tender and touching entreaty that Mr. Moody would use some effort to find and reclaim their son Willie, then a wanderer in our Western States. Mr. Moody and the whole audience were much moved by the appeal of the aged couple, and in offering a prayer at the close for this especial case, he remarked, "God only knows whether that long lost boy may be in this room to-day. O may the grace of God reach his heart wherever he may be."

The prayer was heard. Weeks afterward, toward the close of Mr. Moody's work here, he called the attention of the audience at one of the great Friday noon meetings in the Tabernacle, to the incident of the letter and said he was going to call on that very young man, the prodigal Willie, to relate his experience. At his bidding a young Scotchman stepped forward and told in brief the story of God's gracious dealings with his soul; of his early home and parental care, of his education in the University of Edinburgh, his restless habits, his wanderings from home, neglect of mother's prayers and father's counsels, his falling into sore temptation, his turning towards Chicago and aimless visit to the Tabernacle; and, finally, how at one of the Friday temperance meetings the Spirit brought home the truth, and he waited until addressed by Mr. Sawyer who soon found out his name and told him of his parents' letter and how it had been expected that he would come in. His conversion was genuine, and the two old hearts in Scotland were made glad with the joyful news. He has since given much time to Christian labor with that class which he once represented and in a few days expects to return to the old country.

His remarks on Friday made a lasting impression as he referred to the efforts made in years past to reform men by pledges made in their own strength, by appeals to their honor, and by temperance lodges. The work of these secret societies had seldom been effectual in turning a man from his cups; but how bright and glorious in contrast is the salvation offered by the Lord Jesus Christ of freedom from the enslaving appetite given to all who ask believing.

—Elder J. L. Barlow, who has been residing in Fentonville, Michigan during his labors as State Lecturer, has removed to Ridgetown in the southern part of the Province of Ontario, Canada, on the Canada Southern railway, where he takes a pastorate. Friends are requested to notice the change of his address, and all unite in the prayer for the blessing of Divine aid upon himself, his family and his work.

—No doubt the friends of reform had one of their best meetings at Oskaloosa, last week. We expect full particulars for our next.

—The Board of Directors met on Tuesday forenoon to consult and decide on important matters connected with the approaching Anniversary at Dayton. Their conclusions will be given next week, as to time and continuance of the meeting. Dayton is centrally located, is easily reached by rail from all directions, and we are sure of a hearty welcome. Let us have the grandest reform meeting Ohio ever knew, though she may have been the "banner State" of Abolitionism.

—Particular attention of friends at the East is called to Past Master Ronayne's letter and the appointments he has made. And what say you, reformed Masons living about Chicago, will you meet Bro. Ronayne as he suggests? Write us if you will.

—Secretary Stoddard returned from Michigan in time to attend the Directors' meeting on Tuesday. He reports a good meeting at Howell, in the main well attended, harmonious and successful, and deeply spiritual. The State Lecturer, Rathbun, will go out from it to his work encouraged and strengthened, better acquainted with his co-laborers and able to push with them at the encroaching evils of the lodge. Bro. S. visited Jackson on the Sabbath, and spoke in that vicinity several times.

—A friend inquires for the password of the grange for this year again. It was published April 12th, on the eighth page—"Fraternity."

—The Wesleyan of last week prints a poem by Prof. Loewenthal of Syracuse, an invocation to a supreme deity, opening with the lines:

> "To Thee! To Thee!
> O Father increate; O light eternal!
> Jehovah, Buddha, Brahma, Allah,
> Around whose throne," etc.

We are at a loss to understand which is the adorable one, or whether it is the Zeus (deus) pater, the Jupiter of history, or the "Grand Architect" of modern lodge worship. Which one, Bro. S.?

The Advent Times notices a Bible reading by Rev. N. F. Ravlin of the Free Baptist church of this city, in the parlor of Caroline Court hotel, which he opened by asserting the Divine authority of the Scriptures, and that their teaching is correct and final; they are full and sufficient guide and we ought to take them as they read; no one is delegated to explain, but all commanded to believe and obey them. All of which is good and true and we will believe was spoken with sincerity could we know that Mr. Ravlin had repented of his rage at Mr. Moody for admonishing Christians not to walk in fellowship with the lodge; or even if not, he might yet be credited if he will as Prelate in St. Bernard Knight Templar Commandery read and urge the belief of a score or two of passages we may select from these Scriptures which have a more or less direct bearing on the practices and principles of that organization.

REFORM NEWS.

Spirit of God would engrave these burning words on the tablets of every minister's heart who is a Mason.

From Berlin I came here to Preston yesterday and very soon discovered that I was among an entirely new and strange people. This is altogether a German town; everything is Dutch, and hence I did not look for a very warm or enthusiastic reception at my first meeting. But here again I was most agreeably disappointed. Men came from everywhere. Roo's Hall was filled and a more appreciative or enthusiastic audience I have not met yet. I was greatly encouraged before going to the hall on receiving your Cynosure and Bro. Stoddard's letter, and you may be very sure I eagerly devoured the contents of both before very long. I was particularly interested in Bro. Henry Johns' letter, and more especially as I had received some of his former history from Bishop Weaver the evening previous. Would it not be well if Bro. Springstein, Coquillette, Johns, Good, myself and some other seceding Masons from the States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan and Wisconsin could meet in the Carpenter Building at Chicago some time in June and as early after my return home as possible, work the second degree and consult about the best means of holding our proposed convention of seceding Masons?

Please give this idea prominence in your next Cynosure, and also give notice, or if you see fit to publish this hurried communication let this suffice, that in consequence of my unprecedented success in Canada and consequent laborious work it will be impossible for me at this time to go any further east than Western New York, and hence the brethren and friends in Dover, Rutland, Williamantic and Vineland must wait for a more convenient season.

God willing, I intend to lecture in Ellington on Monday, May 14th, and two succeeding evenings; in Jamestown on the 17th, 18th and 19th; in Rushford on the 22d, 23d and 24th; in Batavia on Monday 29th, 30th and 31st, returning by way of Stanton and Deersville and spending three evenings in each. This will complete forty-five lectures and exposures in two months. I go from here to Galt on Thursday where I remain till Monday morning and next week I visit Paris and Plattsville.

I am yours as ever in this great work, E. RONAYNE.

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY, N. Y.

J. B. Nessell, secretary of the county association, sends the following notice of Past Master Ronayne's visit:

Please notice in the Cynosure that E. Ronayne will be at Ellington May 14th, 15th and 16th. The large hall of Case & Frisbee has been secured for the purpose. All wishing to know how Freemasons are made can have that wish gratified by paying only the small sum of 25 cents, and thus get all there is of Blue lodge Masonry, good, bad and indifferent, which costs the regular young Hirams $25 and upwards. All under 12 years of age, free of charge. A rare chance to find out the way to that place "not made with hands eternal in the heavens." Let all avail themselves of this opportunity of knowing for certain this wonderful mystery, hid for so many thousand years, that have transpired since 1717, June 24. It is now expected he will exhibit and lecture in other places in this section, during which will be held our county society anniversary, probably in Ellington.

Many professing Christians who have become tired of the mummeries of the lodge, and who have experienced to their sorrow that its principles and practices are not consistent with Christianity, try hard to think it sufficient that they simply cease to attend the meetings of the society. This in our judgment will not answer. The cause of truth and the interest of the community both require a renunciation of the lodge. Confession is certainly one of the elements of genuine repentance, and we doubt whether such men can have peace of conscience till this sin is openly confessed.

James Williams, now a presiding elder in the M. E. Church, when he renounced Freemasonry at Clear Lake a few years ago, declared that he had never before known what it was to be free since he had taken the oaths and obligations of the order, until he publicly confessed his fault. We know that it requires a sacrifice of feeling, and involves a derangement of one's business, among a certain class the loss of a good name, and requires a good degree of nerve, but the loss will always be amply repaid in the inward consciousness of having done right.—Ex.

THE SANITARIAN by the importance of its topics and the ability with which they are discussed stands among the first of its class. The May number has articles on "The Influence of Civilization on the Duration of Life;" "Influence of Vitiated Air and the Direction of Light upon the Eyes in Schools;" "A City of Health," describing A. T. Stewart's Garden City on Long Island; "Deformities in their Relation to Hygiene;" besides various topics mentioned in "Editor's Table." Published at 82 Nassau street, New York.

The Home Circle.

Faith for Perfectness.

BY E. N. GARDNER.

Give me thy heart the Lord doth say,
To him I bow with willing mind,
And ask of him to show the way
That full salvation I may find.

Thou knowest that in my heart I pray
For Jesus' blood to make me white;
I know thou wilt not answer nay,
But fully save from sin's dark night.

Oh give me strength thy grace to claim,
Unite thy strength to me, my God.
Behold, I come in Christ's great name,
And plead the merit of his blood.

This moment Lord I would believe;
Without one donbt my faith to dim,
From looking nnto Christ our head,
To save from all in-dwelling sin.

And now, my Lord, I plainly see
'Tis living faith that makes us pure,
Salvation full for all and free,
So we receive the perfect cure.

Thy blood has purchased all we need,
To thee I consecrate my all.
And now from sin my soul is freed
O keep me that I never fall!

The First Beatitude.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. v:3

A ladder, if it is to be of any use must have its first step near the ground, or feeble climbers will never be able to mount. It would have been a grievous discouragement to struggling faith if the first blessing had been given to the pure in heart, for to that excellence the young beginner makes no claim, while to poverty of spirit he can reach without going beyond his line. Had the Saviour said, "Blessed are the rich in grace," very few of us could have derived consolation therefrom. Our Divine instructor begins at the beginning, with the very A B C of experience, and so enables the babes in grace to learn of him; had he commenced with higher attainments, he must have left the little ones behind. A gigantic step at the bottom of these sacred stairs would have effectually prevented many from essaying to ascend, but tempted by the lowly step, which bears the inscription, "Blessed are the poor in spirit," thousands are encouraged to attempt the heavenly way. To be spiritually poor is the condition of all men; to be poor in spirit, or to know our spiritual poverty, is an attainment specially granted to the called and chosen.

The kings among mankind, the happiest, and most powerful, the most honorable, will one day be seen to be, not the Alexanders, Cæsars and Napoleons, but the men akin to Him who washed the disciples' feet, those who in quietness lived for God and their fellow-men, unostentatious because conscious of their failures; unselfish because self was held in low esteem; humble and devout because their own spiritual poverty drove them out of themselves, and led them to rest alone upon the Lord. The time shall come when glitter and gew-gaw will go for what they are worth, and then shall the poor in spirit be seen to have the kingdom.

The dominion awarded by this beatitude to the poor in spirit is no common one; it is the kingdom of heaven, a heavenly dominion, far excelling anything which can be obtained this side the stars. An ungodly world may reckon the poor in spirit to be contemptible, but God writes them down among peers and princes, and his judgment is true, and far more to be esteemed than the opinions of men or angels.

"Poor in spirit!" The words sound as if they described the owners of nothing, and yet they describe the inheritors of all things. Happy poverty! Millionaires sink into insignificance, the treasures of the Indies evaporate in smoke, while to the poor in spirit remains a boundless, endless, faultless kingdom, which renders them blessed in the esteem of him who is God over all, blessed for ever. And what must be their blessedness when they shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, and in them shall be fulfilled the promise of their Lord, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."—Christian Weekly.

Dancing.

WHY CHRISTIANS SHOULD NOT ENGAGE IN IT.

1. It leads to expense in dress, to late hours, to the neglect of moral and intellectual culture, and to various evil practices.

2. Dancing, more or less, leads in contact with promiscuous company —an impure atmosphere. "Evil communications corrupt good manners."

3. It mars social intercourse and unfits the mind for real, useful, substantial enjoyment.

4. Dancing unfits the mind for serious reflection and prayer.

5. The most wise, considerate, judicious and devotedly pious, in all ages, have looked upon dancing as an amusement not only as useless, but of decided evil tendency. "Be not conformed to this world."

6. Those who delight in the ball-room or dancing parties are generally fond of the wine cup, novel reading, and the card table.

7. Dancing is a favorite amusement of the savage nations, and usually forms a very important part in fhe worship of heathen gods.

8. Social home dances, as advocated by some Christians, are but the stepping-stones to the public ball-room and theatre — the top round of the ladder that leads down to the pit. "A prudent man foreseeth the evil, but the simple pass on and are punished."

9. Dancing-masters and dancing-mistresses are generally of low standing in society, not even welcome at the homes of their pupils as guests. They are classed as the theatricals of loose habits, whose morals will not bear scrutiny, and whose language is often very contaminating and corrupting.

10. The freedom between the sexes in certain kind of dances is exceedingly immodest, as admitted by those who engage in it, and often results in the most serious and pernicious consequences.

11. Dancing is a most useless art.

12. The evils flowing from dancing, and from inspiring children with the dancing mania, may be summed up in pride, folly, irreligion and excessive love of pleasure, and finally in a loss of the soul.

13. Dancing, as now practiced by the sexes as an amusement, is unscriptural, and those who introduce it into the church are "diseased members," and should be healed or amputated, and thus save the body.

14. No instance of dancing is found upon record in the Bible, in which the two sexes were engaged in the exercise as an act of worship or amusement. Neither is there any instance on record of social dancing for amusement except that of the vain fellows, devoid of shame, or the irreligious families described by Job, which produced increased impiety and ended in destruction; and of Herodias, which terminated in the rash vow of Herod, and the murder of John the Baptist.

Who came to Herod's blood-stained throne
To seek forbidden joys?
Who reveled there in crimes unknown,
Bedecked with gaudy toys? A Dancer.

Who came in haste to kingly court
To do a monster deed,
To lift the Roman ax in sport
And see the Baptist bleed? A Dancer.

Who bore away the good man's head,
Like viands—on a plate,
Exulting that a saint was dead,
To glut her mother's hate? A Dancer.

16. The preparation for the dance is an outward adorning, not of good works, but of costly apparel; all this display is not of a meek and quiet spirit, but of pride and tumultuous vanity.

17. No Christian can attend such places without receiving spots from the world. And the Apostle James says, "Keep yourself unspotted from the world."

18. The Scripture gives us all things that pertain to life and godliness. If dancing pertains to life and godliness, something must be given that authorizes it. Where is it?

19. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks unto God the Father by him." Col. iii, 17. This demands the glory of God as the object as well as the authority of Christ for what we do. Does dancing do this?

20. Those who practice dancing do not think of appealing to Scripture for authority. If they will dance, therefore, in the absence of authority, either direct or indirect the sooner they are given over to the world the sooner will the church be relieved of their pernicious example and they cease to practice deception on the world.

21. Christians are commanded to let their light shine, that others seeing their good works may glorify our Father in heaven. Has the dancing of Christians ever converted a soul to Christ? Rather has their light been turned to darkness; and no church has ever succeeded where it has not disciplined against it.

22. The Bible contains a revelation of the wrath of God against all ungodliness and unrighteousness, and the Apostle says: "They who do these things shall not inherit the the kingdom of God." Dancers do all these things.

23. True gentility and etiquette are found in the church, and not in the ball-room. The most accomplished lady and gentleman in the world are those who have been educated in the church of Christ. Their manners spring from a pure heart.

24. If dancing is not as bad an evil as other Christians do, then it is bad, and for the same reason stealing may be in harmony with principles of Christianity, because it is not as bad as murder. Where has Christ or the Apostles licensed us to do bad?

25. Dancing causes brethren of strong as well as weak consciences to offend, hence it ought not to be indulged in. "But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ." (1 Cor. viii, 12.) "Then he said unto the disciples, It is impossible but that offenses will come: but woe unto him through whom they come! It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones." (Luke xvii, 1, 2.)

26. Dancing is not a healthful exercise. Much disease and many deaths follow the excitement—heated rooms—thin clothing—long continued exercise—drinks—untimely eating—sexual excitement. So physicians say. Where men and women are left free to act in accordance with the true principles of Christianity, they have healthy bodies and clear consciences.

27. We are to "glorify God in our bodies and spirits, which are his." Has any Christian ever been known to glorify God by dancing.—California Christian.

British Parliament and Peers.

The Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland is composed of four constituent elements - the King or Queen; and the three estates of the realm, viz., the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, and the Commons. These several powers collectively make the laws that are binding upon the subjects of the British Empire. The Lords Spiritual and Temporal constitute the House of Lords—the former consisting of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and twenty-four Bishops of the Church of England; the latter consisting of: 1 the Prince of Wales, 4 Dukes of the blood-royal, 21 Dukes, 18 Marquises, 111 Earls, 24 Viscounts, 245 Barons, 16 Representative Peers of Ireland, or 468 in all. There are also 7 ladies who are peeresses in their own right. The House of Commons consists of 658 members, viz., 493 returned by English and Welsh, 60 by Scotch and 105 by Irish constituencies. The members of the House of Commons, though they have varied in the past have remained stationary at the mystical number of 658 since the union with Ireland at the close of the last century, and this stationariness has survived notwithstanding the numerous and almost fundamental, alterations which had been made in the distribution of the electoral franchise by the several reform acts which have been passed during the century. There is no reason why 658 should be selected rather than any other fancy number. Thirty or forty more or thirty or forty fewer members of Parliament would not make any perceptible difference in the quality or quantity of the legislative or deliberative acts performed by this body. But the whole distribution of political power in this country is full of curiosities and anomalies, grown out of traditions or compromise, and fostered by the conservative instincts of a slowly-moving population. Probably 658 is as good as any other fancy number, and does its work with a sort of clumsy method that suits the genius of the people. The numbers of the House of Lords are not restricted. Peerages become dormant from time to time, or die out, but the gaps made by these natural processes are more than filled up by new creations and promotions from a lower to a higher rank. During the reign of Queen Victoria no fewer than 146 creations or promotions in the House of Lords have been made. Each Prime Minister seems to feel bound to tap the fountain of honor in favor of his supporters at the beginning, in the middle, or at the end of his tenure of office. When Lord Melbourne was Prime Minister at the commencement of the Queen's reign, a couple of dozen peerages were authorized. Sir Robert Peel, between 1842 and 1846, was satisfied with four. Lord Russel, between 1847 and 1851, and again in 1866, created twenty; Lord Palmerston, fourteen; Lord Derby, ten. Mr. Gladstone, feeling the weakness of his party in the upper House, advised the creation of no less than forty peers in six years, and Mr. Disraeli, not to be outdone, has, in the brief periods of his two reigns, in 1868 and 1874–5, created seventeen, and within the last few days he has promoted three of his supporters and elevated four more—giving him a round total of four-and-twenty in in three years, or an average of eight a year. But among his four-and-twenty there are no less than three dukes, and no Prime Minister except Mr. Disraeli has ever managed more than two. Few, indeed, have ventured to aspire above a plurality of viscounts.—The Nation.

Children's Corner.

Helping Papa and Mamma.

Planting the corn and potatoes,
Helping to scatter the seeds,
Feeding the hens and the chickens,
Freleng the garden from weeds,
Driving the cows to the pasture,
Feeding the horse in the stall—
We little children are busy;
Surely there's work for us all,
Helping papa.

Spreading the hay in the sunshine,
Raking it up when it's dry;
Plucking the apples and peaches,
Down in the orchard hard by;
Picking the grapes in the vineyard,
Gathering the nuts in the fall—
We little children are busy;
Yes, there is work for us all,
Helping papa.

Sweeping, and washing the dishes,
Bringing the wood from the shed,
Ironing, sewing and knitting,
Helping to make up the bed,
Taking good care of the baby,
Watching her lest she should fall—
We little children are busy;
Oh, there is work for us all,
Helping mamma.

Work makes us cheerful and happy,
Makes us both active and strong;
Play we enjoy all the better
When we have labored so long;
Gladly we help our kind parents,
Quickly we come to their call—
Children should love to be busy,
There is so much work for us all,
Helping papa and mamma.

The Wrong Turning.

When I was a boy—but that is a long time ago, for many a crop of corn has been gathered into the garner and many a fall of snow has covered the hills and valleys since then: ay, and many a friend and companion has been carried to the cold grave—but, as I said, when I was a boy my father sent me on an errand to a farm-house a few miles in the country. "You must go," said he, "straight along the turnpike-road till you come to the second milestone, and then, passing the big house with the rookery in the elm trees, you must take the first turning to the right, which will lead you to Farmer Gilbert's house; but mind, whatever you do, be sure that you do not take the wrong turning."

Boy-like, I was so pleased with the prospect of a pleasant walk into the country, that I did not attend so carefully as I ought to have done to the directions which my father gave me, so that when I passed the second milestone and arrived at the big house with the rookery in the elm trees I could not at all remember whether I was to take the first turn to the right hand or to the left. After puzzling for some time I made up mind to go to the left. I did so, and thereby took the wrong turning.

Well, on I went, as I thought, for Farmer Gilbert's till the lane got very narrow and the road very dirty. At one part there was a gate across it, and in getting over the gate I did not perceive that the bottom hinge was off it; no sooner had I mounted the gate than it swung on one side and flung me into the mire, and a fine dirty state I was in. A dog came growling out of a cottage by the roadside; to get rid of the dog I clambered over a hedge, and in my haste almost tore off the skirt of my jacket. With the intention of defending myself from the dog when I should return, I pulled out my pocket knife to cut a stick; but in doing this I cut my finger, and dropped my knife into the ditch, and could not find it again. After all my misfortunes, no Farmer Gilbert could I find. Indeed it would have been strange if I had, for every step I had taken since leaving the turnpike-road had led me further and further from his house. At last I asked a man who was working in a field to tell me the nearest way to Farmer Gilbert's, mentioning at the same time which way I had come. "I do not wonder," said the man, "at your being puzzled; why, my lad, you have taken the wrong turning."

I soon set off back again, blaming myself for not having paid more attention to the directions of my father. I found no futher difficulty in my way to Farmer Gilbert's, and having done my errand, I returned home, heartily repenting my error in taking the wrong turning.

No sooner did my father see me than he began thus: "Why, Robert, where have you been? You have been long enough to do the errand twice over; what a pickle your shoes and stockings are in; and the skirt of your jacket is almost off! What have you been about?"

I then told my father the whole of my mishaps just as they had occurred to me; how the gate had flung me into the mire; how the dog had attacked me; and how I tore my jacket, cut my finger, and lost my pocket knife; and I acknowledged that all had been brought about by my foolishly taking the wrong turning.

"Ah! my lad," said my father, "you are not the first by a great many who have smarted by neglecting their father's directions, and by taking the wrong turning.

All of us who live in the world have an errand to perform, and have to find our way to heaven. The path of duty is the road along which we are to go; and the Bible contains the instructions of our heavenly Father, giving us the plainest directions that we may not be pained and perplexed by losing our road. Those who attend to these directions find their way; but those who neglect them get into a thousand troubles. When traveling heavenward it is a sad thing to take a wrong turning.

As the young are travelers as well as the old it is necessary that they should be led and guided, according to their ages, until they are able to read and by Divine help to understand the directions given in the Scriptures. When children are thus enabled to comprehend God's Holy Word that Word should be their guide continually; and woe be to them if they neglect it; for if in looking about you in the world you behold want, misery, and despair, in almost every case they have been brought about by people taking the wrong turning. Let it be well remembered, however, that the first steps to be taken are repentance and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.—The Children's Friend.

Perlia E. Poole, Bellevue, Mich., answers correctly the drop-word puzzle and enigma of March 29th.

Without the rich heart, wealth is an ugly beggar.

Home and Farm.

Let there be a common-sense school of cookery. Let every woman who expects to be a wife and mistress of a household take lessons. Music lessons confer an excellent accomplishment, but lessons on the saucepan and gridiron make more pleasant faces in the family where these qualifications exist than all the music would do without these homely accomplishments. She should learn to make her table attractive and a real blessing, and her husband will eat fewer suppers at club-rooms and fashionable restaurants. Let her leave her cooking to ignorant servants, not knowing herself how to correct their errors and miserable cookery, and domestic unhappiness and the tendency to outside dissipapation will continue to flourish rankly and ruinously.

We do not mean to say that the lady of the house should prepare the turkey, the joint of meat, or the steak; but she should know how to do it thoroughly well; then she can instruct her assistants greatly to their permanent benefit and to the comfort of the family. We pity the lady who is ashamed of knowing how to make her home comfortable by directing properly the preparation of the family's food.—Phrenological Journal.

The Philolsophy of Transplanting.

Plants have lives, and are susceptible to injury by wounds and bruises. In the course of transplanting they undergo the amputation of the outer ends of the main roots, where the feeding fibres are most numerous. That, with the disturbance of all the roots, and their exposure for a given time to light and air, checks their thrift, which they do not regain until they make new fibers after being reset. In digging up save the roots as much as practicable, and expose their roots to the light and air as short a time as possible. Dig the soil some days before planting; break the soil fine; and if it is stiff, mix a portion of sharp sand with it to make it friable (sand at $5 per ton will be profitable to use in transplanting, trees and shrubs especially); the more friable the soil put about the roots in planting, fibers will be put out the more readily; so the plants will sooner recover from their injuries. Hard-wooded trees take a longer time to put out new fibers after removal than soft-wooded species do; so they should be transplanted while young. An oak and hard maple, four feet high, will be slower in making new fibers than a poplar or willow twelve feet tall. Among fruiting trees, cherry, pear, plum, and all nut-bearing trees are slow in making new fibers after being transplanted; so they should be transplanted when four or six feet feet high, and also other stone fruit trees. Apple trees have soft roots when young and make new fibers readily; they may be six or eight feet tall when transplanted. Oaks, beeches, birches, hawthorn and other hard-wood trees may be transplanted when four to six feet high. Poplar, willow, linden, soft maple, and other soft-wooded trees may be transplanted when eight to twelve feet high. Pine, juniper, crytomeria, etc., are among the slowest of evergreens in making new fibers; plant when thirty to fifty inches high. Spruces, piceas, arbor-vitæ make fibers readily and may be transplanted from three to six feet high. So all soft and hard-wooded trees and shrubs in the same ratio. For transplanting trees from nurseries they should be tied into bales, with wet straw about their roots, and bass mats or sacking sewed over the whole. Send by express for quickness' sake. The practice of transporting trees and shrubs in wooden boxes without other coverings to their roots is reprehensible. and will soon ruin the trade of any nursery. We have witnessed many heavy failures by that practice. In high inlands, a mulch may be put over the roots of lately planted trees if the weather be hot and dry; say, apply the mulch middle of June, and remove it middle of September. Artificial waterings are often absolutely necessary. If litter is used as a mulch turn it over every fortnight, as it encourages the growth of mold, which would soon kill the trees. If sawdust or tan bark is used, hoe them in when cutting up weeds about the roots of the trees.

Dogwood, deciduous cypress, larch, salisburia, hickory, and tulip trees should be transplanted when thirty to fifty inches high; they are all very slow in making new fibers after removal. The tree boxwood is hard-wooded, yet it is very prolific and quick in making new fibers (that is an exception, not the rule). Cydonia japonica is the slowest deciduous shrub in making new fibers; transplant it when twelve to eighteen inches high. Austrian pine is the slowest evergreen that I can think of in making new fibers; always plant it when young and small. Biola aurea and mostly all the golden-gilded evergreen shrubs, should be planted when twenty to thirty inches high. Such care will insure success. Success and failure attend both spring and autumn transplanting. I have transplanted Norway spruce trees when thirty feet high in the opening of spring, and hemlock spruce trees twenty-three feet high at the same time; and all grew well and still flourish after ten years so removed. I have also transplanted soft maple trees fifty feet high; sugar maples and red maples, lindens, sycamore trees, when thirty feet tall and well branched. They all grow well. The roots were followed out long distances and all the soil removed from them with picks and digging forks. Let me have all the roots and I do not want soil with them. The transplanting of those large trees were upon the same grounds; say a hundred yards removed, and staked for support. The frozen ball system is a humbug, but as many other humbugs are successful, so is this at times, after heavy costs.—Selected.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

The Grace that Saves.

[From report of noon-meeting, April 17th, in Boston Globe.]

After singing the hymn, "Must Jesus bear the Cross alone?" the Rev. William B. Wright spoke as follows: I think we very often fail to understand, or to appreciate how much we can accomplish by simply doing our duty, or to state it more correctly, how much God will accomplish if a man does simply his duty in life. In one of the meetings last week in Boston, there was a merchant, quite a prominent man on his street, who said he had been thinking for some weeks whether it wasn't his duty to come out on the Lord's side and give himself to Christ, and he did it. He thought it was going to be a very hard thing, but he found out it was not, however. That night he went to his house, told his wife what he had done, and asked her if she wouldn't kneel and pray with him. She was surprised, indeed, but she acceded to his request, and the next day both of them were rejoicing in Christ. The next day he met a man belonging to the same club that he did, a merchant on the same street, and he went over and spoke to him and that man came to Christ. He told this first merchant that he had been thinking about it for a number of days, and he went home and told his wife and she was converted, and the next Sunday the four took tea together and went to church together. There was a seamstress in the family of the first merchant, and the second day after their conversion they said to her, "We are going to have family prayers now. We don't like to force you, but we would like to have you kneel with us while we offer our morning prayers." She was so much surprised that she didn't know what to say, but she knelt with them, tears came into her eyes, and she rose in Christ. But that wasn't all. There was a bookkeeper in the office of one of these merchants. He was not a dissipated man, but in a fair way to start down hill. He asked what that change was that had come over his employer. His employer spoke to him kindly, and the result is that that man is testifying for Christ. But that is not all. A man came to me only a day or two after that, a sea captain, a fine-looking man, who had spent most of his time out of sight of land, perhaps, for the last few years—he came to me and said, "I want you to pray with me." "How long have you been feeling this way?" I asked. "Well," said he, "ever since my wife died." I don't know how long that was. It might have been months; it might have been years. "I have been thinking about this, been troubled, and when I saw my cousin"—here he mentioned the name of the first man I have been telling you about—"when I saw my cousin converted I felt as though I couldn't stand it any longer. I went to find out what it was." And he got down on his knees and began to pray, "O Lord, I have been fighting against you; but I can't fight any longer. O Lord, have mercy on me now." And all this was done through one man's doing his duty.

An auditor, whose face was deeply furrowed with the ravages of dissipation, rose and said he had struggled for weeks against a terrible appetite, but the Lord had carried him through, and now there wasn't a happier man in Boston.

Mr. Moody—Tell them how you went to the office and came back,

The Convert—When I rose for prayers I could hear my heart thump against my ribs; but instead of going into the inquiry meeting I went to my office, but I came back and went right straight into the inquiry room, although I didn't know where it was and hadn't been in that part of the building before.

Mr. Moody—I think you had better tell them what bound you, because it may set some poor captive free.

The Convert—It was opium. It is the hardest habit in the world for a man to break off. I had a loving wife, lovely children, a kind father and mother, but no power on earth could save me—nothing but the power of the Lord Jesus Christ. If any one is bound by his appetite let him come to the Lord Jesus Christ and he will cure him. The way is simple enough.

Mr. Moody—They didn't all hear you. He said it was opium, and if there is any poor slave of opium here to-day talk with him and let him pray with you, and the Lord will deliver the captives. I was perfectly surprised the other day to learn that there were hundreds of thousands in this country just bound with opium.

A gentleman sitting on the platform said he had held a position for fourteen years in the Custom House, but he had lost that by his own fault. He had in life by his own fault. His friends had placed him in different asylums, but he trusted in his own strength. He had tried different temperance societies, but nothing had saved him from the curse of the appetite for strong drink but the power of the Lord Jesus Christ. He had lost friends, but now he felt that he had gained a friend that was going to carry him through. He had got strength now, he said, such strength as he never had before, and he would say that he had experienced the divinity of his Lord and Saviour.

LOST EVERY POSITION HE HAD HELD

Mr. Moody—Didn't you use to believe in it?

Answer—No, sir, I didn't. What religious belief I had — I was brought up as a Unitarian, and I didn't believe in the divinity of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. I had no conception of it; but now it animates my whole soul.

Mr. Moody—Is there any change in your life?

Answer—A perfect change. My children at home asked my wife, "What is the matter with pa? He seems an entirely changed man. He seems so happy." Now I have family prayers, read the Bible and study it, and there's where I learned the divinity of my Saviour.

Mr. Moody—Were you happy before?

Answer—No, sir; I was morose, cross—a perfect, miserable misanthrope. It seemed as though I was deserted by both God and man; but I have found out since that instead of God and man deserting me I deserted them. Now all my friends are coming back to me. One of the influences that brought me to Christ were those sweet hymns, "What a Friend I Have in Jesus," and "I Need Thee Every Hour." Those two combined I could not get out of my mind. They haunted me constantly, and I asked myself, "Why shouldn't I find this dear friend Jesus?" And, thank God, I have found him and got him to-day, and I am happy, O, so happy!

Mr. Moody—Yes, what a friend we have in Jesus! I think we will have to sing that. The audience then sung the hymn with great earnestness and feeling. A gentleman on the platform said that a friend of the one who spoke last, who was a Unitarian, told him that if Mr. Moody had reformed this one man only it would fully justify all the expense attendant upon the erection of the Tabernacle and the conduct of the revival services. An auditor said he had never felt so happy as in the last three days, and proceeded to relate his experience when he was completely overcome by deep emotion and

TEARS STREAMED DOWN HIS FACE.

My friends, said he, excuse this weakness.

Mr. Moody—It isn't weakness.

The Convert—No, I am strong in God but weak in the flesh. During all my great trouble I had one passage in my mind. I heard Bro. Sawyer say that Christ never lost a case, and when I was so terribly cast down that I wished the building would fall on me, those words came into my mind, and was all that gave me consolation. I knew that Christ wouldn't lose me after he had commenced on me, and I was sure he had; now I am rejoicing that he has saved me.

Mr. Moody then said: We are living in extraordinary days, and every child of God ought to walk softly now, and if we are true, eternity alone will tell the result of the few closing days' meetings at the Tabernacle. There was a letter came among the letters last week telling of a little girl that they wanted us to pray for. They said it seemed as if she were possessed with evil spirits as much as people were in the days of Christ possessed of devils. Well, prayer went up for this little girl, and last Sunday afternoon, while I was walking around and talking with inquirers in the Clarendon Street church, there was a young lady who sent for me, and I went to a corner pew, and she told me a story that moved my heart, and it seemed as if it would move the heart of a stone. It turned out to be this girl, and she told me her story. It was this: When she was three years old she was taken down with spinal complaint. Her father and mother thought she could not live, and so they petted and humored her, so that it was not long before she ruled the house. Instead of dying she lived, but yet she did not recover from that disease, So they continued to humor her. At last her mother died, and in the course of time a step-mother came in. She said, "I cannot control my temper; no one can live with me, and I can live with no one; I am the ugliest creature in the world, Mr. Moody." I said, "Are your folks unkind to you?" "No, no," she answered; "no one is unkind to me; I am unkind to myself." She had no complaint to make of anybody but herself, and I could not but weep with her. We prayed with her, and after we had prayed she offered such a prayer as I never heard before. The poor girl prayed that God might and cast out this evil spirit. She prayed for strength to go home to her friends and confess that she had not done right. She got up, and she could not walk straight on account of this disease, but you should have seen her as she went out. She went home and the family were at tea, but she did not wait for them to finish, and she told them what God had done for her, and she asked her father and stepmother to forgive her, and her brothers and sisters, and then she confessed how unkind she had been and unjust, and friends have told me that there never was such a scene in that family. Last night she brought her brother to the inquiry meeting. He saw such a change in her in twenty-four hours that he came to the inquiry meeting to inquire the way of life. I cannot but believe that she will be a blessing in that house. I mention this to show that God has answered prayer.

—Judge Schaeffer in a decision last week in the case of Ann Eliza vs. Brigham Young, held that there was no marriage between the parties; that the plaintiff had been fully remunerated for the menial service rendered during their polygamous relation and the law can give her no further consolation.

—A dispatch from Cleveland, O., states that on Friday last a party of sportsmen, while gunning along the lake shore at Euclid, a village ten miles east of the city, found the dead body of a man on the beach. The body was considerably burned on the back, one leg was broken, and the other leg had a large flesh wound. The head was perfect and covered with black hair and full black whiskers. The persons present had no idea whose body it might be, and, as it had already commenced decomposing, they dug a grave near by and buried it. After the burial a description of the body was told at the railroad station, and it was at once recognized as that of P. P. Bliss, of Chicago, who was lost on Friday night, Dec. 29, at Ashtabula, in the great railroad accident. The theory is that the body was frozen to a cake of ice and carried up the lake to the point where found. Euclid is fifty miles west of Ashtabula. The body will, in all probability, be taken up and a further investigation made.

TRACT No. 23

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV, A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argnment to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undonbtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contribnted and this 8 page tract costs bnt $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thonsands seem to consider it a virtne to know nothing ah ont the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within onr reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

Cynosure Tract No. 28.

FREEMASONRY REVEALED.

A LEGAL ATTESTATION BY EDMOND RONAYNE

To the correctiness of the published expositions of Freemasonry. The author very briefly states the mode of preparation and initiation in the various degrees, with the mock mnrder and resnrrection of the candidate in the personification of Hiram Abiff in the 3d, degree and the penalties of each.

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100. $2.00 per 1000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thns $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribntion of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, bnt there is a great lack of funds to snpply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year 1876 were gratnitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but fnnds are lacking to meet it.

Many of onr most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thonsands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAPBOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." Topics of the Time.

The Jesuit, Dr. Weninger, is about to answer Secretary Thompson's book on the papacy, and is confident that he will make short work with its arguments. By such means the book will gain a notoriety which the Catholic press has been telling us it neither has or deserves, but has "fallen still-born from the press." If the Jesuit would confine his stratagems to the business of book reviews his presence in this country would be more tolerable.

The Tabernacle Committee of Boston were in debt $20,000 May 1st, and they needed $10,000 besides to enable them to keep the building another year. With one day's notice at the various meetings enough was raised to pay the debt and leave a liberal balance on the other fund which it was expected would be easily made up. This liberality, contrasted with the financial difficulties at the outset of the work in Boston, proves the efficiency of Mr. Moody's labors in a most important particular.

The Permanent Exhibition of the International Company opens today, May 10th, on the Centennial grounds in Philadelphia. It has been announced that President Hayes and ex-President Grant would be present, with the Governors of several States and other public men. Though thus formally introduced and occupying a large part of the buildings erected for the Centennial exhibition—the Main Building, Memorial and Horticultural Hall—the managers will be heavily tasked to make their exposition inter-national more than in name. In many respects, no doubt, the display will equal that of last year, and the pleasures of sight-seeing and the benefits of study will be enjoyed without the discomforts of enormous crowds. It has been understood that no restrictions are to be made in this exhibition out of respect to the Sabbath. If so it is mis-named and out of place, being neither American, nor respectful to the principles, convictions or laws of this country; but Parisian and infidel.

William G. Brownlow, better known as "Parson Brownlow," died at his home in Knoxville, Tenn., on the 29th ult., in his seventy-second year. He began life as a waif at eleven and continued it as carpenter, Methodist minister and editor, and all the while a politician of the most pronounced stamp. While preaching in South Carolina in the times of "nullification," though John C. Calhoun resided in his district, he boldly declaimed against the nullifiers, and in a pamphlet declared the slavery question more to be dreaded than that of tariff, and that it would at some time, which he expected to live to see, shake the government to its foundation. As editor of the Knoxville Whig from 1837 he became famous for his energy and fierce denunciations, so that during the war he was known as the "fighting parson," though never in the army. His influence was marked in maintaining the loyalty of East Tennessee during the struggle.

The news from Turko-Russia shows most activity in the armies east of the Black Sea. Quite naturally, from the comparative weakness of the Turkish force, and the location is removed from the jealousies of European powers. The names of towns that now appear will be familiar to readers of missionary news. South and west of Kars are some of the largest and most successful mission stations of the American Board, as Kharpoot, Aintab, Eurumiah, Diarbekhr and Marash. It is not easy to reconcile the prospective advantages of conquest with the destructive visitations of war upon these peaceful churches of Armenia. May the God of nations avert such a calamity.

The wonderful and startling statement of Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, last year, that it was necessary for governments to consider the projects and influence of secret societies as well as of potentates and parliaments, was a new factor applied to the Turkish question. A Vienna correspondent wrote the following to the London Standard last month of the Slavic secret socities, which is significant in showing most remarkable features of kinship to the lodges that infest our own country:

"Two years ago the Slavic Committees first came into existence under pretense of caring for the wounded insurgents in Herzegovina and assisting the fugitives, and there they first unfolded the white standard with the red cross; soon afterward the insurrection in Bosnia broke out; then they drove the Servians and Montenegrins to begin war, recruiting and paying the volunteers; last November they compelled the mobilization of eight Russian corps, and now they are forcing Russia to a war with Turkey. "Before we can take care of our wounded," a Russian doctor once said to me, "we must have them; and to accomplish this—that is, provoke insurrections and war—we use nine-tenths of our money; but for the care of the sick and wounded only one-tenth." Under the protection of the Geneva Cross, cannon and muskets were smuggled into Bosnia, Servia and Montenegro, and the Russian Court, under the delusion that it could make use of the committees for its own purposes, contributed large sums to the collections that were made. Now it trembles before the committees and obeys them—unwillingly and hesitatingly, it is true, but they are the masters."

In spite of the Queen's prolamation of neutrality the British Cabinet has replied to the Russian note announcing the proclamation of war in terms of dissatisfaction quite unexpected. "Her Majesty's government," says Lord Derby, "have received this communication with deep regret. They cannot accept the statements and conclusions with which Prince Gortschakoff has accompanied it as justifying the resolution thus taken." The note continues to argue that the protocol should not be considered final, that with continued moderation and patience the objects desired would be accomplished. The Russian advance will not improve the condition of the Christians of the Provinces, and is contrary to the treaty of Paris, and subsequent declarations on the part of the Russian government. "In taking action against Turkey on his own part," the note concludes, "and having recourse to arms without further consultation with his allies, the Emperor of Russia has separated himself from European concert, and has at the same time departed from the rule to which he himself had solemnly recorded his consent. It is impossible to foresee the consequences of such an act." "Her Majesty's Government" feel bound to state "that the decision of the Russian Government is not one which can have their concurrence or approval." The almost threatening tone of this paper, the activity in the British army and navy and the unexpected breaking out of the old hatred of Russia present serious complications and a promise even that the nation will be involved in the struggle. Carlyle and Gladstone are earnestly, but it is feared ineffectually, trying to allay the storm.

Gott ist Mein Licht!

God is my light! never, my soul, despair,
In hours of thy distress.
The sun withdraws, and earth is dark and drear;
My light will never cease;
On days of joy with splendor beaming;
Through nights of grief its rays are gleaming,
God is my light.

God is my trust! my soul, be not afraid!
Thy helper will abide;
"I'll not forsake thee!" He has kindly said,
He's ever at thy side;
In feeble age will yet stand by thee,
No real good will he deny thee;
God is my trust.

His is the power! He speaks, and it is done;
Commands, it standeth fast;
Ere hope of rescue is in me begun,
Behold, the work is past.
When we our weakness most are feeling,
God loves to prove, his strength revealing,
His is the power.

The kingdom his! Throughout the earth he reigns
With wisdom, grace and might;
The stars go on, and time its course maintains Beneath his watchful sight;
In silence onward still proceeding
The universe obeys his leading,
The kingdom his!

God is my shield! Of me he takes the care,
As none beside could do;
He guards my head, he watches every hair,
All dangers brings me through;
While thousands, to vain helpers calling,
On right and left are near me falling,
He is my shield!

God is my reward! Well pleased I onward go
The path that he has shown;
It has no trials but my God will know,
When he awards my crown,
I'll gladly strive, the fight sustaining,
Until in death the victory gaining,
God is my reward!

—Hengstenberg.

How Old is Freemasonry?—No. 4.

To the W. M., Wardens and Brethren of Keystone Lodge No. 639, A. F. and A. M.

Chicago, April, 13, 1877.

Brethren: From the two preceding letters you have learned, perhaps for the first time in your Masonic experiences that one of the boasted claims of Freemasonry is, that it is a "religious institution" and that it professes to set up a standard of morality of so high an order that "a Mason by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity is free from sin," and you have further learned that "the distant Chinese, the wild Arab, the American savage" and the Turk by availing himself of Masonic rights and privileges and by living in the "strict obedience" alluded to can thereby be freed from sin and so fitted for immortality in the "Grand Lodge above." All this is to be accomplished of course by virtue of the Masonic rites, ceremonies, obligations and penalties, for therein are contained all its valuable precepts; the signs, grips, tokens and words being merely the outside shell or covering by which the "latent beauties" of the system are supposed to be hidden from the vulgar gaze of the profane. But accepting this claim of Masonry to be well founded, admitting for the sake of argument, if you please, that Masonry is a saving institution and a strict adherence to its precepts and obligations will free from sin, no matter who the candidate may be; admitting that it transfers all its affiliated members, who die "in good standing," to the Grand Lodge above, then the question will naturally arise, How old is this religious system called Freemasonry? When and where did this thing originate? The answer to this inquiry will and must necessarily decide the legitimacy of its claim as a saving institution and must also of course settle the question as to the nature and character of its religious teachings. If Masonry frees from sin, if a strict adherence to its obligations and precepts will purify and cleanse the soul from the pollution and guilt of sin, then without any doubt Masonry must have existed ever since the time that sin first entered into the world. If it has not existed from that time its claim as a saving institution must necessarily be a false one and the entire system can be nothing more or less than a gigantic fraud. Now let us examine this subject a little. God gave his law to man. He said to him, If you do thus and so you shall surely die, but if you don't do thus and so you shall not die. "The Lord God commanded the man saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayst freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." Gen. 2: 16; 3: 3. This was God's revealed law to man. He was to retain and enjoy life on condition of obedience to this law, but he chose to violate the law; he chose to obey the teachings of the vile serpent rather than the divine commands of his Almighty Creator, and the moment he did so, the moment he sinned against God, that very instant the penalty attendant upon his disobedience was inflicted and man died. He died spiritually at the very instant in which he sinned, and he died naturally after nine hundred and thirty years of sorrow, trouble, strife and woe. But no sooner did man commit sin against God and thus do all in his power to effect his own eternal ruin than God stretched forth his hand to save him, and so we find God immediately after Adam had sinned seeking him out and calling after him in Eden's garden, "Adam, where art thou?" You must remember that God never cast off or forsook Adam but Adam cast off and forsook God and the very moment he did so we find God seeking him out among the trees of the garden and calling "Where art thou?" God was always reconciled to man but man was not reconciled to God, and it was absolutely necessary that a reconciliation should be effected. And now the question naturally arises, how was this to be done? How was man to be reconciled to God? How was sin to be forgiven and man freed from the curse of the law? How was the prisoner to be liberated and the debt paid? The Almighty himself gives the answer. "I will put enmity between thee and the woman and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." Gen. 4: 15. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." John 3: 16. Man was doomed to perish; he was utterly lost and ruined; he had no power in himself of saving himself; the serpent could not save him; he was the cause of his utter ruin, and even if he could he would not; angels could not save him, no more than they could save themselves. Now what was he to do? How was his salvation to be effected? Did God send Freemasonry with all its blasphemous oaths and sanguinary death penalties, its pagan rites and heathen ceremonies, its corruptions, its falsehoods, its selfishness and its folly to be the instrument of man's redemption and to free him from sin? The very thought of such a thing is blasphemy. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." He gave himself to be man's redeemer, "that he might be just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom. 3: 26. Man violated God's law and God himself came to vindicate the majesty of his own law and to save man from eternal death, because he loved him, and so, "when the fulness of time was come," God fulfilled his promise to Adam, and "He sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law." God promised man a redeemer and he kept that promise continually before the minds of men from the time he gave the promise until he himself came to redeem that promise to fulfill his own violated law and so to reconcile man to himself. Through Enoch, through Noah, through Abram, through the patriarchs, through Moses, through the daily sacrifice, through the burnt and sin offerings, through the Jewish priesthood, through the prophets and in the Psalms, from age to age, from generation to generation God kept this great truth constantly before the minds of men. And so the "Word was made flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld his glory." John 1: 14. "He came unto his own and his own received him not. But as many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them who believe on his name." John 1: 11, 12. And now what is the name by which he chose to reveal himself to those whom he came to redeem. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." Matt. 1: 21. "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Heb. 1: 1, 2. And the name of this divine Son, the name by which God has manifested himself to the human family for 1800 years and more is Jesus Christ. "His blood cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1: 7. "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we can be saved." Acts 4: 11, 12. "To him give all the prophets witness that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." Acts 10: 43. This is what the Holy Scriptures call "the mystery of godliness," and in direct opposition to this is the "mystery of iniquity," embracing every species of man worship and false religion. The very man who occupies the "Oriental chair" in your lodge is a living miracle, bearing undoubted and incontroverted testimony to the truth of this plan of salvation, for the Jew as such is a living witness of the fact that Jesus Christ was born into this world; that he suffered, that he agonized, that he bled and died "bearing our sins in his own body on the tree" that we might live. And now let me ask you, Which do you believe; the plan of redemption as set forth in the revealed will of God, the Holy Bible, or that plan presented to you in Freemasonry through the supposed murder of Hiram, and around which cluster all "the precepts and obligations" of the order? If you accept the Bible plan then as a matter of course you must give up Masonry, for most assuredly you cannot serve two masters; while if you reject the Bible plan of salvation and adhere to that of Masonry, then you must entirely discard the Bible, and hence neither Keystone nor any other Masonic lodge has any business whatever to have the Bible on its altar, except it be to use it as a snare to delude men into the craft and so lead them down, down to eternal ruin. From whatever standpoint you may view this subject Freemasonry and the Bible cannot be reconciled. If the Bible be the Word of God (as most assuredly it is) then without any question Freemasonry is the work—the very masterpiece of Satan. You all know, or at least the older brethren among you do, although you do not want to admit it, that Freemasonry was started into being from behind a whisky barrel in a low grog-shop called the Apple Tree Tavern in Charles street, Covent Garden, London, on the night of the 24th of June, 1717, and hence that it can no more be a saving institution than that your Senior Warden, Bro. Charles King, can be a good Catholic and a good Mason at one and the same time, or that a Masonic minister can be a consistent Christian and a consistent Mason.

I am kindly and fraternally yours.

Edmond Ronayne.

J. J. Coleman, M. P., in his speech at the meeeting of the London Peace Society, said that "Big armies are like lawyers, where one could not exist two could make a good living." So with big armies there was always great danger of their having work to do.

The Funeral Grand Honors of Masonry.

Editor Cynosure: To show how erroneous is public opinion in considering the ceremonies of Masonry trifling, silly and meaningless in their nature, I submit a description of the so-called Funeral Grand Honors of the iustitution as set forth by Past Grand Master Scott of Mississippi, in his "Keystone of the Masonic Arch," pages 347-8. He thus describes them: "Both arms are crossed on the breast, the left uppermost, and the open palms of the hands sharply striking the shoulders; they are then raised above the head, the palms striking each other, and then made to fall upon the thighs. This is repeated three times and as there are three blows given each time, in allusion to the apocryphal assaults upon Grand Master Hiram Abiff in the unfinished temple, namely on the breast, on the palms of the hands and on the thighs, though received by the Grand Master on throat, breast and head, making nine concussions in all. The Grand Honors are technically said to be given by three times three. On the occasion of funerals each one of these honors is accompanied with the word Alas! audibly pronounced by the brethren. (This word is used in reference to the expression imputed to King Solomon, which it is said he employed when he saw the mythical tomb and monument of Grand Master Hiram erected at Jerusalem. "Alas! it is accomplished." Death had claimed and received his own, and the will of God was fulfilled.) It will be observed, that in the arms folded on the breast, and palms of the hands resting on the shoulders, there are found two living triangles whose base has been removed, or cut off. The reference is striking and sublime." The base cut off is the departed brother, and cannot be supplemented this side of the arch of eternity. These so-called Grand Honors are based upon the forty-seventh problem of Euclid, the theorem of which is that "In any right angled triangle the square which is described upon the side subtending the right angle is equal to the sum of the square described upon the sides which contain the right angle." "It is surprising," says Pierson (Traditions of Freemasonry, page 165) "that this figure, increase or decrease the dimensions of its sides as you please the square of the longest side, called the hypothenuse, will be exactly equal to the squares of the other two sides." In Masonry the forty-seventh problem is made a symbol of the creative or divine power of the Masonic god-head; it being nothing more nor less than the symbolic square, which is dedicated to the Worshipful Master as the distinctive jewel of his office, he representing in power the fullness of the Masonic god-head, of which the level in the west, dedicated to the Senior Warden, and the plumb in the south, dedicated to the Junior Warden, are but component parts — these two officers constituting the second and third persons of the Masonic trinity. Geometrically the lines formed by the level and plumb united form the figure of the square, and therefore they may be said to be parts of the square. As the sum of the squares of the two sides of any right angle is equal to the square of its hypothenuse or third side, the sides, (the base and perpendicular) are said to produce or create the hypothenuse, and every Mason raised to the sublime degree (the third) of his order is said to be created or produced a Master Mason. To be so created he must undergo a mystical death and be raised from a mystical grave by the magic power of the magic word Mah-hah-bone. The base which Grand Master Scott speaks of as being cut off in giving the Funeral Grand Honors of Masonry, is the hypothenuse of the right angled triangle, which is ever absent from and yet is ever being added to the Masonic square in every candidate who is initiated into the third degree of blue Masonry. Says Sherer in his "Masonic Ladder," we know we have passed from death unto life, because we so love the brethren." "The third degree is a type of the communion of man with God." Hence we see how the Funeral Grand Honors of Masonry have been made up by incorporating therein symbolically the forty-seventh problem of Euclid, and why Scott says "the reference is striking and sublime."

The Funeral Grand Honors make of Almighty God a mere Worshipful Master of a symbolic lodge of blue Masonry! In reference to the three knocks by which a Masonic lodge is entered, says Sherer, in his "Masonic Ladder," page 14: "A splendid genius, now deceased, extending the Masonic theory beyond the vale of time, figures the Grand Master of the universe standing in the celestial Orient upon 'the appointed day,' and giving the three knocks which shall summon the sheeted dead. (This number of raps calls up all the members of an assembled lodge.) At the first knock the ground of their interment begins to heave with expectation. All nature is hushed. Earth and heaven await with trembling the consummation. At the second knock bone comes to his fellow, flesh reclothes them, blood moves once more through the veins, and the dead are ready for the last summons. It falls and at once the armies of the dead arise, stand erect, facing the east, and listen to the words of their Maker!"

Speaking of the forty-seventh problem, Mackey observes, in his "Symbolism of Freemasonry," pages 335-6: "It is said to have been discovered by Pythagoras while in Egypt, but was most probably taught to him by the priests of that country, in whose rites he had been initiated. It is a symbol of the production of the world by the generative and prolific powers of the Creator; hence the Egyptians made the perpendicular and base the representatives of Osiris (the sun) and Isis (the moon) while the hypothenuse represented their child Horus (the world). Dr. Lardner says, (Com. on Euclid, page 60), of this problem: 'Whether we consider the forty-seventh proposition with reference to the peculiar and beautiful relation established by it, or to its innumerable uses in every department of the mathematical science, or to its fertility in the consequences derivable from it, it must certainly be esteemed the most celebrated and important in the whole of the elements, if not in the whole range of mathematical science.'" In the Masonic system, the Worshipful Master is the Osiris, the Senior Warden the Isis, and the candidate raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason their child, Horus, or the Junior Warden the Hiram Abiff of the south.

Referring to this triangle, says Ashe, in his "Masonic Manual," page 94: "As the great testimonial that we are risen from the state of corruption, (i. e. death), we bear the emblem of the Holy Trinity as the insignia of our vows and of the origin of the Master's order.

"On receiving this ensign the Mason professes himself in a short distich, in the Greek language, which from the rules of our order we are forbidden to commit to writing; the literal meaning of which is, 'Vehementer cupis vitam;' 'ardently I wish for life;' meaning the everlasting life of redemption and regeneration; an avowal which carries with it the most religious import proceeding from a pure faith. The ceremonies attending this stage of our profession (the rites of initiation into the third degree) are solemn and tremendous, during which a sacred awe is diffused over the mind, the soul is struck with reverence and all the spiritual faculties are called forth to worship and adoration." The triangle as a symbol pertains strictly to the third degree and the Master Mason represents the future life, or the life of man beyond the grave. Taking these remarks, observations and explanations all together, they fully show the esoteric and deep significance which is attached to the so-called Funeral Grand Honors of Masonry. They show that these honors are not meaningless, as imagined by the superficial world, and we may add nor is there anything in Masonry but what has a deep as well as a devilish meaning and explanation.

J. H. H. Woodward.

M. Gambetta, a distinguished representative of one of the powerful political parties in France, after denouncing in eloquent language the policy of conquest and glory which had formerly been pursued, recently said: "It is necessary that we should utterly abandon that sinister policy, which, seeking to effect the ruin of nations, has dug beneath our feet a great hole into which we ourselves had well nigh disappeared. This ambitious war policy we are bound to abandon. For what we need is peace—everywhere peace."

The Religious Amendment Practical.

What is the practical advantage to be gained by a religious amendment to the national Constitution? The question comes from one who has apparently no objections to the measure, if only he can see that it is likely to result in good. We answer:

1. It is presumptive evidence that there is some good reason for such a religious acknowledgment as we seek, that the wise statesmen who framed the thirteen original State Constitutions, and who have revised the old from time to time, or framed new ones for the States which have been added, have nearly all agreed in placing such acknowledgments in the instruments they framed. Not more than four or five of these fundamental charters of government are as devoid of religious character as is the Constitution of the United States.

2. The case of Great Britain which is referred to is not exactly parallel. She has no written Constitution. The final appeal on all questions that arise is to the will of Parliament, influenced and guided, of course, to a large extent, by the precedents of British history. These precedents and her existing institutions stamp Great Britain unmistakably as a Christian nation. We, too, have a great body of laws, usages and institutions which are undeniably Christian, but we have also a written Constitution which contains no Christian features. The tendency of a written Constitution is to disparage the importance of the unwritten or common law, and to encourage appeal constantly to the letter of its own provisions. The active, persistent and intolerant school of secularists or infidels in American politics have not been slow to perceive the advantage which the silence of the Constitution gives them. They insist that all things shall be tested by and shall conform to it. They declare themselves unwilling to submit to, to support, or to tolerate any customs, laws or institutions which are not covered or included by the terms of that instrument. This weapon they employ constantly and with success against the Bible in the schools, against our Sabbath laws, against days of fasting and thanksgiving and every Christian feature of our government. It is the most effective single argument which we find in their hands. It has led astray a great multitude of Christian men to embrace the secular theory of government. Now some such provision as we seek would be an authoritative declaration on the part of the nation that we mean to establish and maintain a Christian government, and that the American theory, while it involves the separation of church and state, does not also involve the divorce of government from religion. The beneficent influence of such an acknowledgment would be felt in all our courts. It would not so much have a direct and specific legal force and application, as it would assist and guide in the framing and interpretation of all law. It would settle, until the whole character of our population should be changed, the question of the Bible in the schools, the maintenance of Sabbath laws and all similar controversies. Now, the undisputed Christian majority of the nation are asked to surrender all these precious features of our civil institutions out of deference to the unbeliever, because it is claimed the American idea as formulated in the Constitution is that government has nothing to do with religion. The amendment we seek would set this claim at rest.

To our mind, these considerations have great force. They are in exact accordance with the principle laid down by all the great writers on constitutional law, that the actual features of a nation's life ought to be carefully transcribed into its written constitution, when it has one; that the excellence of a constitution consists in the faithfulness of this transcription, and that the written law tends constantly and powerfully to undermine and cast out everything in the government which it does not thus, in terms or by manifest inference, cover and protect.—Christian Statesman.

Duty of Christian Women toward Organized Secretism.

[Introduction of an essay read by Mrs. Elizabeth Crawford of Seneca Falls, N. Y., read before the Seneca County Convention, March 9, 1877.]

It might at first thought appear that inasmuch as some of the secret organizations do not admit women to membership, and further, that even in those which do, they are accustomed to fill only subordinate positions, that Christian women have but little direct responsibility attaching to them in this matter and can rightfully take but little interest in the discussion of the subject. But this is merely surface reasoning. The day has gone by when woman could be passive or indifferent to whatever affects the home, the church, society, her country, or even the world at large.

That this institution of secretism does vitally affect each and every one of them becomes at once apparent.

The home—this is woman's proper domain. If woman in the marriage relation is to be the help-meet of man, which is growing every day into more general acceptance as the Bible idea, then whatever opposes, tends to overthrow, or to any extent thwart God's beneficent intention is to be reprehended. In so intimate a relation there should be perfect frankness between the parties, unity of purpose and feeling and hearty co-operation in effort. But in case the husband connects himself with a sworn secret fraternity this must be to a great extent foregone; and though doubtless in many instances patiently foregone on the part of the wife, yet does the home suffer incalculable loss thereby. Nor can it be otherwise when the plain, positive injunctions of God's Word are set aside and treated as of no importance. God has set his approving seal on his own institution of marriage and said, "What God hath joined together let no man put asunder." But the lodge lays its ruthless hand upon the holiest affections, upon the tenderest, closest union Heaven ever gave its sanction to, upon the most solemn obligation it is possible for man to assume, and says, "The oaths sworn at my altars are more binding than this; to them everything else must bend, everything else must give way." It says to the husband, "from this other world which opens to you, when the lodge door turns upon its hinges, even the wife of your bosom must be irrevocably shut out; in this distinct department of knowledge and interest she shall have absolutely no part." Thus putting asunder in a peculiarly oppressive manner, that bars and bolts cannot approximate, for there is no tyranny like soul-tyranny, there is no bondage like that which binds the spirit.

On the records of Christian heroism, comes to us from Germany the story of a man and his wife, confined in different prisons for the testimony of Jesus; sending messages of consolation and encouragement, assurance of prayers, and exhortations to steadfastness in the faith, each to the other as providential opportunities occurred, through a long and cruel imprisonment until the end came as they expected in their both gaining martyrs' crowns. Here was mutual helpfulness and sustaining power, even in occasional heart-confidences though crossing prison bars, but from those desolate heart-prisons before which the lodge power has slid its potent though invisible bolts, come no such confidence, out of those lips held fast by its invisible padlock comes no word or sign.

O, I have sometimes thought, what an amount of dumb anguish a naturally sensitive, generous, high-spirited man of communicable disposition must bear about with him as the thought of this enforced secrecy perpetually attributes itself!

But, it may be asked what can women do at this point. More than seems to be apparent to some of them. A Christian woman can always pray. If your husband be a lodge-member, and consequently in great spiritual peril, pray that God may give him the light and gracious help of his Holy Spirit to lead to himself, and away from its evil influence. If he be not, then thank God, and also pray that this invader of the home may never gain a foothold, that the one you love may never take upon himself this yoke of bondage.—Wesleyan.

A Test Question.

"And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thanks have ye? For sinners also do even the same."

"And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thanks have ye? For sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again."

"But love your enemies, and do good, and lend hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind to the unthankful and to the evil."—Luke vi. 33–35.

"But, (some will say,) that doesn't apply to me at all. I'm perfectly disinterested in my giving." Then, my brother, why is it necessary for you to have the stimulus of a society in order to be charitable?

If the test were applied, how many Odd-fellows, or Freemasons, or members of any kindred society, would remain in them an hour, were they informed that from that time they were not to expect assistance though they should need it never so much? Very few, we trow, and if there be any, they would be charitable without any society to constrain them.

But what does Jesus say? "Do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again."

I submit the question for the candid consideration of all, can you do this in an organization pledged to assist all its members alike, as these evidently are?

Will not the selfish desire of expectation creep in in spite of you, if it be not even the very main spring of your actions?

If this be true, this forms a positive bar to keeping this commandment of Christ.

It must, at least, be admitted to be a weight, drawing the soul continually down to contemplate these selfish motives, and as such, is ever presenting the temptation to sin; for the violation of any of God's commandments is sin. "Lay aside every weight."

How can you, under these circumstances, pray: "Lead us not into temptation," when you are running headlong into it and abiding there?

"Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of the whole."—Banner of Holiness.

The Slavonic Nations.

A Slavonic Almanac, recently published in St. Petersburgh, which is distributed gratuitously, and is intended to demonstrate "the necessity of uniting all the Slavonic countries beneath the sceptre of the Czar," says: "We Russians belong to the great Slavonic family, which numbers 90,000,000 souls, and consists of the following peoples: First. The Russian nation: There are 60,000,000 of Russians, subdivided as follows: Great Russians, 40,000,000; Little Russians, 15,000,000; and White Russians more than four millions. But outside of the frontiers of Russia there are also territories with a Russian population—namely, Galicia, with the territory beyond the Carpathian Mountains, or Russia of Ugor, belonging to Austria; in all, three and a half millions of Russians—that is to say, of Ruthenians.

The capital of Galicia, Lword, called Lemberg, was founded by the Grand Duke Daniel Bomanoviez, who resided there during the Tartar invasion, and named the town after his son, Lword. While Eastern Russia was still occupied by the Tartars, the Poles were dominant in Red Russia. There are also Russians in Turkey, upon the Danube, and even in the ancient possessions of Russia in North America. Next to the Russians, the principal Slavonic race consists of the Poles, with nine and a half millions distributed over Russia, Austria and Prussia. Third come the Czechs, numbering five millions; fourth, the remnants of the Siberian Servians who are settled in Prussia, while upon the shores of the Adriatic the inhabitante of Carniola, Styria, and Carinthia are, for the most part, Slavonic." The almanac then enumerates the Serbo-Croats, some of them under the yoke of Austria, and others forming the semi-independent States of Servia, Montenegro, etc., and adds that the seventh division of Slavonic peoples is to be found in Bulgaria, where the number more than five millions. Its conclusion is, that just as the Russian freed themselves from the yoke of the Tartars, and as at the beginning of this century part of the Servians shook off that of the Turks, so may the other Slavonic peoples aspire to ultimate freedom under the sway of the Russian Czar.—N. Y. School Journal.

The loss on each side in the recent Franco-Prussian war was perfectly appalling. On the part of the Germans it was in killed 19,216, wounded 91,537, missing 6,195; total, 116,948. Of the French 89,000 were either killed in action or died of their wounds. This does not include the deaths among the civil population caused by slaughter, famine, grief, etc. Nor does it include a large number of deaths resulting from wounds. Altogether it will be a low estimate to multiply the above number by four. In other words, nearly half a million of lives were sacrificed on both sides in this war entered upon "with a light heart," as the French minister declared at the outset.

This statement in relation to the French, enables us to find the balance sheet of the empire under Louis Napoleon. Upwards of 120,000 Frenchmen are mouldering away in the Crimea. 40,000 died in Italy, 35,000 in Mexico, and 10,000 in sundry other distant expeditions. If we add to these the 89,000 men killed during the Franco-Prussian war, we have a total of 294,000 victims, besides those outside of the army.

The Cost of War to France.—A clever statist in Paris has summed up the pecuniary results to France of the late war with Germany as follows: War indemnity, 5,000,000,000 francs; interest on the same for two years, 300,000,000 francs; the keep of the German troops. 273,637,000 francs; requisition, 227,581,000 francs; value of objects taken without requisitions, 254,172,000 francs; war contributions levied in Paris, 200,000,000 francs; and so on till the account forms a total of 6,673,811,000 francs (£266,952,440). But this enormous sum is exclusive of pensions to the army, the damage done to material, and the expenses of reorganization, which swell the total to 13,000,000,000 francs (£520,000,000). The average value of a day's work in France is one franc and a quarter; and thus it would take one million of men thirty years to work it out.

Reform News.

Lecture Notes from Rev. H. H. Hinman.

Albia, Iowa, May 4, 1877.

Dear Bro. K.: Leaving home April 21st, I reached Newton, Jasper county, Iowa, on the C. R. I. & P. R. R., a little past midnight, and on Sabbath morning, the 22d, walked four and a half miles to Wittemberg in time to attend the Sabbath School and preaching in the Congregational church.

This place was settled by a colony of Christian families, animated with a spirit of reform, who came here to establish a college on the manual labor principle. A good building was erected and a school for a time maintained, but the abundance of colleges and the excellent free school system of Iowa has prevented its success. Two of the former pastors, Bros. Whiton and White, were my co-laborers in missionary work in Africa. They were men of fine ability and devoted piety. The Great Head of the church has called them to be with him. Their memory is very precious to all who knew them.

I met with a most kind reception, and was invited by the pastor, Bro. Arnold, to preach in the afternoon, at which time I had a good congregation and gave notice of a lecture on secretism for the next Thursday evening. Sabbath evening and Monday I spent with Bro. E. T. Preston, a veteran reformer, and his most excellent family. On Monday evening I spoke in the Wesleyan church near Baxter, to a full house and with good attention. A generous collection showed that the faith of the brethren here was not without works. Bro. Dawson of this place has labored successfully in our reform.

From here I went to Oskaloosa to attend the State meeting, of which I will only say that it was unexpectedly large and interesting. Finding my name on the programme for Thursday evening, Bro. J. P. Richards, my co-laborer in the Illinois work, kindly consented to fill my appointment at Wittemberg, which he did much to the satisfaction of brethren there. Bro. R. is spending about four weeks in this State and is doing a good work in our cause.

After the convention I went back to Baxter. The severe storm of rain and snow prevented my lecturing as I expected, but I preached in the Wesleyan church twice on the 29th. From there I went to Hickory Grove, Monroe county, where on the evening of May 1st I spoke in the Associate Presbyterian church to a large congregation, and with the sympathy of nearly all who heard me. Several neighboring pastors were present and expressed their approval. A generous collection was taken.

The evening of May 2d was very dark and rainy, yet a fair audience met at the Surface U. P. church and gave excellent attention. The pastor, Rev. S. C. Marshall, expressed his convictions by a cash contribution to the Publishing House Fund.

Last night I spoke in the U. P. church in this place, the county seat of Jasper county, to a large and attentive audience, and have an appointment at the same place for to-night. From here I go to Van Buren county.

Yours in the Lord,

H. H. HINMAN.

MICHIGAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

QUARTERLY CONVENTION.

Pursuant to a call from the Executive Committee, the friends of our cause met at Howell, Livingston county, Michigan, April 24th and 25th, for the purpose of holding a quarterly meeting of the State Association. The weather was fine and everything seemed favorable for those who attended to have a good time. We were cheered by the presence of the National Agent and Lecturer, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and our State Lecturer, Rev. D. P. Rathbun; also Rev. John Levington, each of whom lectured before the Association, and the volume of truth that they gave the people on that occasion will not soon be forgotten. A good representation of the craft was present each evening, and succeeded well in keeping their jewels; though it was plain to be seen that they were wonderfully sick, as indicated by the pale cheeks and long faces after the storm subsided.

There was one feature of the meeting that was especially interesting,—a continual manifestation of the Divine presence, more than has been felt at any of our previous gatherings. We had a prayer-meeting each day, in connection with other exercises, and all felt that it was good to be there. The friends who attended the Association were well provided for by friends of the reform in Howell, and acquaintances were formed and ties of friendship woven, which we trust will never be broken.

By vote of the Association the offices of Lecturer and Agent were combined in one, making Rev. D. P. Rathbun Lecturer and Agent. C. B. Remington was continued as Corresponding Secretary. Arrangements were made whereby the claim that Bro. Barlow holds against the Association will be duly met and by which the ready pay system can probably be carried out in the future affairs of the Association. Bro. Rathbun has been kept very busy since he came into the State, and there are invitations enough ahead to keep him busy for some time to come.

The following resolutions were presented and unanimously adopted by the Association:

Resolved, 1. That Freemasonry, falsely so called, is a huge system of falsehood, fraud and swindle.

2. That the obligations and teachings of Masonry are designedly anti-Christian, to the extent of rejecting Jesus Christ by name; in a word Masonry is atheism.

3. That Masonry is sworn treason against the government and laws of our country, and against the government and law of God Almighty.

4. That no man can take even the first degree of Masonry without knowing that it is bad, very bad.

5. That no man can be an adhering Mason and a saint at the same time.

6. That he who is an adhering Mason, is thereby disqualified for the Christian ministry, and for membership in the church of God.

7. That being an adhering Mason is a disqualification for office in either church or state.

8. That he who is an adhering Mason is thereby disqualified to act as judge, juror or witness, where one of the parties in the suit is a Mason and the other is not.

9. That the silence of the pulpit and press with regard to Masonry is highly censurable, and for either pulpit or press to advocate Masonry, is utterly intolerable.

10. That the other secret societies that abound in our country are the offspring of that called Masonry, and have more or less of the Masonic poison infused into them.

11. That as secret societies rely upon concealment, so exposure must prove fatal to them. That which renders it necessary for them to conceal, renders it equally necessary for us to reveal.

The Convention was composed of representatives from six religious denominations, all of whom seemed to be united and zealous in the work of tearing down the institutions of darkness in our land.

The time and place for holding the next meeting of the Association was left with the agent and lecturer, Rev. D. P. Rathbun, whose headquarters in the future will be at Hickory Corners, Barry county, Mich., where letters may be addressed to him in care of E. W. Bruce.

I will take the liberty, in connection with this report, to relate a little incident which took place on my way home from the Association.

On taking my seat in the cars at Eaton Rapids, I found myself near a friend of the clerical order, with whom I soon engaged in conversation. I did not learn his name, but found that he came from Homer and was a member of the M. E. conference. Being acquainted with some of the ministers in that denomination, I mentioned them and made some inquiries concerning them. I finally stated to him that I was on my way home from the State Christian Association opposed to secret societies where I had met some of the representatives of his denomination, among whom was Rev. John Levington, of Detroit.

He asked how those State and county organizations were prospering and I told him that the most of those that were first organized were still existing and that many more were being organized, and that secret societies, especially the Masonic fraternity, were wonderfully agitated about the advancement we were making. I asked him if he was a member of the fraternity, meaning Masonry, and he said no.

He spoke of Ronayne's rascality and disrespectfully of Anti-masonic lecturers and supporters, and I made up my mind that he was a "Jack," to say the least. Having learned his position I opened fire, and pointed the artillery in the direction that I supposed would be most effectual, viz: the Christlessness of the Masonic religion. He said that Masonry did not claim to be a religion but simply a "help" in spreading morality and bringing souls to Christ. I quoted Mackey to him under the headings "Prayer," "Religion," "Shock of Entrance" and the "Gavel," and he said we perverted the meaning of Masonic teachings. "For instance," said he, "Ronayne came to our place and passed through with the ceremonies and teachings of the order, and gave them his own meaning; and everybody thought that he placed the matter before the people much worse than it was. In fact the general opinion was that he was paid by the Jesuits, with the understanding that he was to use his influence in faver of the Roman Catholic church." But said he, "It is not true that Masonry denies the name of Jesus Christ and the authenticity of the Bible, as you assert." Said he, "I was initiated into Masonry once and I know better than you do." I was surprised to hear so plain a falsehood from a minister, (he at first said that he was not a Mason, then acknowledged that he had been made a Mason and it was plain to be seen that he had not yet renounced it,) and asked him if he had taken more than one degree. He said, "Yes, a good many of them." Then said I, "You are able to certify that the revelations concerning Masonry are true?" Said he, "The wrong construction is placed upon the whole thing. They do not deny Christ, but rather teach the resurrection of the body and the immortality of the soul, through the merits of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, which is Christ." I quoted Mr. Mackey to him again, who says that these important doctrines are founded upon the legend of the death and resurrection of Hiram Abiff. I also pointed him to the fact that the candidate representing Hiram Abiff lays wrapped up in a blanket "fourteen days" when he is finally raised on the five points of fellowship, and Christ has nothing to do with it.

He gave a Masonic smile and said, "Perhaps I may be allowed to divulge the secrets of Masonry a little, and we will suppose a candidate in the lodge-room covered with the blanket as you say, and there are three parties interested in raising the body. The first party try to raise him in their peculiar way, but the skin cleaves from the flesh and they fail. The next party try and find that decomposition has set in, and the flesh cleaves from the bones. [I had said nothing about these secrets.] The third party says, 'I will go and raise him in the name of God, and through the power of the Lion of the tribe of Judah,' and succeeds." Said he, "There is a very important lesson to be learned in all this. It shows that human instrumentalties may be used again and again, to save men from sin, and to effect their resurrection after death, but nothing can be done save through the name of Christ. When I lay in that condition representing death, and was raised, I obtained a better knowledge of the resurrection through Christ than I ever had before. A feeling of solemnity came over me, and the grandeur and glory of the resurrection through Christ, was revealed to me more perfectly than I had ever received it from any other source."

Just then the brakesman shouted "Hastings," and I left him, to meet him again in the judgment, and prayed that God would have mercy upon him, and prepare him for that trying day.

Oskaloosa Items.

Friend Kellogg: Oskaloosa, Ia., has a population of about 6,000. It has but one saloon, and that is in defiance of law. Two denominational Colleges, "Friend" and "Christian," two graded school buildings, each costing about $20,000, and a beautiful brick "High School" ornament the city. Another interesting fact came to my notice; near the city lives a man with a dislocated neck. It was unjointed by a wagon wheel passing over it. The head is kept in its proper position by a kind of harness. Prest. Woody of Penn College, gave us a cordial welcome at his institution. He is a seceding Freemason, and attended the convention and expressed himself in hearty sympathy with it.

There was much surprise manifested at the fact that the Oskaloosa "Friends" generally stood aloof from the Association. One of the delegates, a "Friend," was deeply touched by the fact that not one of his brethren would open their house to him. Tears filled his eyes in speaking of it.

The first State Association called four years since had but twelve delegates, this one numbered seventy, twenty-eight of whom were ministers.

It is hoped that E. I. Grinnell of Chickasaw Co., Iowa, can be secured as State lecturer. Yours truly,

W. I. Phillips.

Correspondence.

A Lively Correspondence.

Waverly, Iowa.

Editor Christian Cynosure: Enclosed is a correct copy of three letters received as drop letters through the postoffice at Waverly, Bremer Co., Iowa. That you may more fully understand the case I will say, we have had a series of union meetings here with the Baptist, Methodist and Congregational churches, and testimony and requests are frequently called for. We had a request to make, which was simply this: that the praying people, those that are acquainted with the Lord should pray to Almighty God that these Masonic preachers might see themselves as God sees them in the Masonic lodge, stripped of their clothing, hoodwinked, with a rope around their neck, swearing that they would not have illicit carnal intercourse with a Master Mason's wife, nor her mother, sister or daughter, they "knowing them to be such." "So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of this my most solemn oath."

About this time (before we were through our request), the people say we had a glorious sing, and we sat down and enjoyed the song very much. This request was made on the 11th day of February last. Soon after this we received a valentine with the following writing on it: "Hell, Hypocrisy, Freemasonry. Head him off with a picture of Old Sanctimonious." Next comes the beautiful letters written I suppose by "old Sanctimonious" himself. We showed the first letter to our Masonic preachers and asked them to preach a sermon from it. But of course we do not get the sermon. But the substance of what we do get is, they tell us they are sanctified and are living without sin. And I have no doubt but what the devil makes them believe it.

Yours, &c,, H. M. Woodford.

Woodford—Beware! If you persist in your course the fate of Morgan awaits you.

From a friend who would save you.

Midnight, 21 day of Feb., '77.

Adam Smith: As a friend I warn you of impending danger. Guard yourself well. Ere another Moon of high Twelve the lightning falls and your fate is that of Morgan's. The avenging council meet to-night and God only knows what will be the result. I will save you if possible. Anti-mason.

Westbrook, Feb. 22.

Anxiety for your safety has induced me to divulge and violate a binding and sacred obligation. I hasten to notify you that at a meeting of the Grand Council of Ten at Jerusalem an edict went forth signed by the Grand Viceroy and acting Primonettote, written in the book of a victim ordering that all persons after a fair warning continuing their opposition to our sacred order shall by the uprising of all the lodges throughout the land at a given signal by their majesty banish from the face of the earth all who are so foolish, if any, as to persist in their opposition to our righteous and sacred order. Beware of an infuriated brotherhood before it is everlastingly too late, for when the Grand G. M. S. H. X. X. sounds the death knell bugle then the day of your calamity will be at hand and there shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. O remember the fearful destiny that inevitably awaits the foolish. A Friend.

Two Confessions.

Editor Cynosure: Recently I met a Master Mason who was to our surprise reading a copy of the Cynosure which I had left in the family. After a short conversation, he turned to the pages on which "Freemasonry at a Glance" is printed, and the following conversation took place:

Mason.—Pointing to the engraving representing candidate as Hiram Abiff falling into the canvas. Here Mr. Ronayne has made a mistake.

Anti.—In what is he mistaken?

M.—He represents the candidate as being struck with a setting maul, and no such thing is used in Masonry.

A.—Is the rest correct?

M.—It is.

A.—Are the signs of Masonry ever changed?

M.—Some of them change quarterly.

He then gave the penal sign as used when he was in the lodge the last time. He made it by drawing the right hand across the forehead with the palm downward and thumb in, and dropping it by the side. He said the sign was made in the movement of the hand and not in the place where it moved.

A.—Has Masonry as far as you have gone been exposed by Mr. Ronayne?

M.—With a few exceptions it has.

A.—Are Masons bound by an oath to protect each other?

M.—They are bound by their oaths to protect each other even if they are in a wrong; and this is one objection I have to the order. If a Mason has committed a crime I am compelled by the oath I have taken to protect him, even if it is against my conscience.

A.—Are Masons divested of their clothing at any time?

M.—They are partly divested of their clothing when initiated.

On the next day I told another Mason what his brother said about the expose and the acknowledgment he made to its truthfulness, when he said he was "a d—— fool." Out of their own mouths shall they be condemned.

Yours for the truth,

I. W. Lowman.

Interview the Lawyers.

Custom has sanctioned the propriety of interviewing scientists, scholars, professional and public men generally, in all their various callings and pursuits of life. Would it not be well, therefore, for the readers of the Cynosure to interview lawyers in all parts of the country and report their opinions as to the presence of Masonry in our courts and the best means to be applied for the removal of the evil? Something should and must be done in this matter soon. The reform is not half fought if this field of contest be left untouched and in the hands of the enemy. Remember that every day which passes witnesses some innocent party brought to grief by the power of Masonry within our courts. Let this not so continue, but let the vile usurper be cornered and driven out.

One of the tricks perpetrated upon the unimformed by lawyers who are members of the craft, or by those not members who possess not the boldness to confront it, is to declare to their clients that so many members only, being a moiety of a jury, are subject to challenge and removal by either party to a suit. This declaration, deceptively made, is intended to throw their clients off their guard and prevent them from making a proper assertion of their rights. This particular species of challenge is called peremptory, and means a mere challenge without the assignment of a cause, whereas every member of a jury is subject to challenge for cause, and when assigned, if found good and sufficient, all who are obnoxious to it can be removed, or the trial if proceeded with, the jury being unpurged, can be vitiated and the verdict set aside. This statement is given for the reason Masonry was allowed to play its pranks in a case recently reported to the undersigned, where a challenge as to its presence was not made because the lawyer managing the case dodged his duty and defeated the rights of his client through the above subterfuge. Let all who feel an interest in the faithful administration of justice make a note of these facts, and warn their fellow-citizens not Masons against the perfidy and wiles of lawyers who are Masons, or against those who are not Masons who lack the moral courage to discharge their duty by combatting the vile institution in the interest of their clients.

Why he Refused.

St. Charles, Ill., April 26, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure: At a union revival meeting held in Springfield, Ill., during the past winter at the Second Presbyterian church, where the invitation had been given for any one to present requests and subjects for prayer, either written or orally, the Rev. R. M. Barns, pastor of the First M. E. church of Springfield, Ill.. having charge of the services, refused to read the following request:

Inasmuch as the institution of Freemasonry is an oath-bound, blood-stained, Christ-rejecting institution, I therefore ask prayer for its removal from the Christian church.

Charles G. Webb.

The grounds of refusal were it is an unfit, or improper subject to present.

The Rev. Barns is a Mason, and Mr. Webb has withdrawn from the lodge. M. V. Clute.

Quarrelsome John's Mother Out Again.

Albion, Iowa, Apr. 30, 1877.

Dear Editor: When Mr. H. H. Hinman was here to give us an Anti-masonic lecture, the spokesman of the Masons W. C. Smith, rushed to the Marshalltown Times and published scandalous stories about him, calling him "Old tramp Hinman," etc. Now they, the Masons, have sent off and got a woman to come and help them out, and she has done it "butifly," so the Masons think, but others think that she made a perfect failure. I will give you her name and try and tell you what she had to say, her name is Mrs. DeGeer, from Chicago, Illinois, so she says, and pretends to know Mr. Ronayne and Mr. Blanchard of Wheaton, and makes them out very bad men; said that Ronayne stole eight hundred dollars from Keystone Lodge of Chicago, or from relief fund, and that was the reason that he was turned out of the lodge. She had a debate with Mr. Blanchard and that she "scooped" him out beautifully, and that Mr. Blanchard is such a radical man that he turned out several of his students because they belonged to the Sons of Temperance. She says that Masonry dates back to the fall of man, and that the "Twelve wise men of the East" were all Masons and that the devil was an "Anti," and that the "Anti's" are of the devil; that Masons are the only class of Christians that, when smitten on one cheek, will turn the other also. Freemasonry the oldest institution; is a school where knowledge is sought and found. You find an "Anti" and you find one that will misrepresent. In 1870, sixty-three Masons were put to death because they were Masons in Cuba, were stabbed in the dark. Is secrecy an evil, if so then the Bible is full of evil. She says Ronayne got mad because Mr. DeGeer objected to his using a part of the relief funds sent in after the fire in Chicago. Ronayne was Master of Keystone Lodge at one time. Masonry is superior to Christianity; when the churches have done as much good as the lodge, then we would not need any lodges; also when the three leading "Anti's" of Illinois were two hundred miles away from Chicago on the Northwestern railroad pass themselves off for single men with the girls, but that Masons don't do that way. Lorenzo Dow was a Mason. All the best men of the nation are Masons. John the Evangelist and Baptist were Masons. In 1303 the priests were all Masons. Masonry is where art is obtained. They have Judases. Christ had a Judas.

Mrs. DeGeer is a stranger to us here; we never heard of her till she came here. Yours, ANTI.

Our Mail.

We have found a new friend in Burlington, Iowa, Joel H. Austin. On the receipt of some Anti-masonic tracts, he writes:

"I will endeavor to see that they are judiciously distributed to do their mission work."

Rev J. C. Hench, Nickleville, Pa., writes that he will prepare an article for the Cynosure as soon as he gets time. He says:

"I can say a good deal of interest to those who conscientiously oppose the infidelity and power of the lodge."

We await his communication with interest.

Justus Miller, Pikeville, Ind., writes:

"I was badly crippled last September by a team running away with me in a wagon, and am not able to get around as yet, but as soon as I can I am going to work in the good cause of reform The grange here is dead and buried, and the Masons are mourners. We need a good lecturer to lecture for us and the work would then go on. I am the only one here that stands firm and advocates the anti-secret cause."

John Clayton, Vanmeter, Iowa, writes.

"I think we will have to get Ronayne to come and stir the people up. My best wishes attend you. This from your old friend, 76 years old."

J. B. Crall, Berrien Center, Mich., writes:

"I like to carry something with me all the time to give the people. I do a pretty fair business in this line. I consider the Lord has me engaged at present in sowing seed, and I trust it may bring forth a bountiful harvest."

J. W. Murray, Round Plains, Ont., Can., writes:

"We some expect to have the pleasure of listening to Mr. Ronayne lecture in a short time, as we are trying to get him to come to Tilsonburgh and also to Otterville, within a few miles. When a few of us anti's commenced to read the Cynosure and to talk of its contents in this place, the Masons made a great howl, but as they dare not argue the subject, they soon cooled down, and now it is almost impossible to get any one of them to say a word on the subject, except it be to sneer and laugh at us, and a very sickly laugh it is too."

John Wilson, Ontario, Lagrange county, Ind., writes:

"I am speaking every night in Lagrange county."

S. Kelly, Moravia. N. Y., writes:

"More men are afraid of Freemasonry than of anything else."

R. S. Ball, Huron, O., orders one copy of Ronayne's Hand Book sent to a physician in Erie, Pa., and writes:

"A few weeks ago the Doctor wrote to me that he had taken the Entered Apprentice degree in Masonry, and wished me to tell him what I thought of it. Having taken the same degree several years before I was fully prepared to give him my views on the subject, so I recommended him to get Ronayne's expose and thereby get the balance of the farce at a reduced rate. So in his reply he requested me to get one for him. I hope by this means to prevent his being victimized. I am of the opinion that he like myself was disgusted with the manner of the initiation. I hope so. I think he ought to be. Indeed, I think every good man ought to be as soon as he becomes acquainted with the proceedings of each degree. It is now and has been for years a matter hard to reconcile in my mind, how a truly regenerate soul can continue to be affiliated with that order. I look upon it as a Christless order, yea more, anti-Christ. I may at some future time, God permitting, tell the readers of the Cynosure what impressions I received upon being admitted to the Entered Apprentice degree of Masonry and what effect it had upon me."

LESSON XX.—MAY 20, 1877.—JONAH AT NINEVEH.

SCRIPTURE.—Jonah 3:1-10. Commit 5-10. Primary verse, 10.

1. And the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time, saying.
2. Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee.
3. So Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the Lord. Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city of three days' journey.
4. And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and he cried, and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.
5. So the people of Nineveh believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them.
6. For word came unto the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes.
7. And he caused it to be proclaimed and published through Nineveh by the decree of the king and his nobles, saying, Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste any thing: let them not feed, nor drink water:
8. But let man and beast be covered with sackcloth, and cry mightily unto God: yea, let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the violence that is in their hands.
9. Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?
10. And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it; because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here."—Matt. 12:41.

TOPIC.—"Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation."—2 Cor. 7:10.

No one can hide himself from the Lord. "The ways of man are before the Lord, and he pondereth all his goings." That is a fact for the wicked to fear and for which the righteous should rejoice. 2 Chr. 16:9; Job 26:6; 31:4; 34:21; Ps. 17:3; 139:1-12; Prov. 5:21; 15:3; Jer. 16:17; 17:10; 23:24; 32:24; 32:19; Heb. 4:13.

No man ever obtained either comfort or honor by disobedience to the word of the Lord. However rough and difficult the path may seem that he bids us enter, that of disobedience is far worse. There is triumph in the one—sure defeat in the other. 1 Sam. 13:13, 14; 1 K. 13:26; Job 23. 12; Ps 119:120; John 4:32-34; 8:31; 13:17; Heb. 10:38, 39; 12:28, 29; Jas 4:17.

The effect of Jonah's preaching upon Nineveh shows how much one man can do who is commissioned of God. There was no need of Jonah's shrinking from the task because numerically he was so insignificant. The Spirit of God multiplied his power so that he could cope with even that great city. "We are more than conquerors through him that loved us." 2 Chr. 20:27; Is. 25:8; Rom. 8:37; 1 Cor. 15:54, 57; 2 Cor. 2:14; Eph. 5: 25-27; 1 John 4: 4; 5:4, 5; Rev. 12: 11.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

SUGGESTED TOPICS.—The significance of Jonah's mission to Nineveh. 1st. To Assyria. 2d. To Israel. 3d. To the world. The reconciliation of God's changeable providences with his immutable character and purposes. V 10 with Num. xxiii. 9. What should be the attitude of civil government to revealed religion? Repentance secures forgiveness. Importance of the principle in interpreting the minatory portions of Scripture, particularly with us in interpreting the imprecatory psalms. Those psalms were born of conflict. Those speaking in them were the representatives—not simply typical but actual—of God's cause. Their triumph was his. And their only hope of that on earth was through the destruction of their foes. And hence for that they prayed. But that destruction was but a means, not an end. Had these foes surrendered to God none would have rejoiced more than those who were then praying for their overthrow, as those psalms which sing of the future conversion of the world abundantly show. The thought that destruction is only conditional on continued impenitence is indeed in the Psalms but once formally expressed, Ps. vii. 12; but it is to be always understood—Evangelical Repository.

Teacher, Pray for Them.

If you love your scholars, dear teacher, pray for them. You can do them but little good unless you love them enough to pray for them. And your best efforts for them will fail without God's help. It is soul work that you are doing. Eternity will take the measure of your work. The great final judgment will weigh its results and reveal its motives. You must pray for the dear, precious souls under your care, or you will fail. Pray for each one separately. Pray for them one by one, and name them before the Lord. Dwell upon the special, peculiar case of each one until your own soul glows with intense ardor of love and deep earnestness of desire. If you do not love them enough to pray for them, you certainly are not yet in a fit condition to be a teacher of immortal souls. You need the strong promptings of love and the firm grip of faith. God speaks to you in gracious words: "Call unto me, and I will answer thee."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1877.

The National Convention.

Chicago, May 3, 1877.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors, held May 1st, at 221 West Madison street, it was voted to hold the Tenth Annual Convention of the National Christian Association on the 10th, 11th and 12th of July, 1877. Rev. Milton Wright of Dayton, O., Rev. H. H. George, D. D., West Geneva, O., and J. P. Stoddard were constituted a committee on programme, with the suggestion that the opening session of the Convention be at 8 P. M. on the 10th, and that this be preceeded by an informal meeting for conference and prayer at 2 P. M. of the same day. The Directors hoped by this arrangement to avoid the meetings of the General Assemblies and Conferences and College commencements occurring in June and earlier, and the annual conferences occurring later in the season. It seems practicable and desirable that this meeting be the largest and most effective ever held in our reform work. The interest devoloped all over the Northern States, the condition of our country, and the place of gathering combine to highten the interest and warrant the expectation that no previous occasion will equal this in its importance or effects, in exposing that system of iniquity against which we contend. Every friend of the cause, male or female, who possibly can, should be there to add strength and wisdom to that gathering.

It is very desirable also that this should be not only a rallying point but a radiating center, and that the whole State and country should be made to feel its power. To secure this end I desire to arrange for meetings along the several routes by which our lecturers must pass to and from Dayton. D. V. I shall be in Dayton soon, and if parties desiring lectures will send me their requests with name, post-office address, including State and county plainly written, I will as soon as possible systematize this part of our work and notify parties that they may have time to make all necessary arrangements. Lecturers desiring to attend this convention, and who are willing to address meetings at different points along their routes, will please write me at Dayton, stating how much time they can give to this work, what route will be most convenient for them, and any other facts in reference to this matter. I want to hear from Bros. Stratton and Post of N. Y.; Bro. Barlow of Canada; Bros. Raynor, Baird and Callender of Pa; Bro. Cook of Ind.; Bro. Rathbun of Mich.; Bros. Hinman and Richards of Ill.; Bros. Browne and Kimball of N. H.; Bro. Vandever of Iowa; Bro. Cooper of of Missouri, and others east, west, north or south who are willing to engage as evangelists and workers in this army of the Lord.

This will be a very favorable opportunity for the friends all along the different routes to secure the services of competent and effective speakers on terms within the reach of all, and I trust there will be a hearty and speedy response. Do not let this opportunity pass unimproved. Set about making the necessary home arrangements at once, and write me at Dayton, Ohio, in care of Rev. Milton Wright, and let as many as can begin to arrange to attend the Dayton meeting. Let prayer and supplication be made to God by all our friends and the lovers of truth and righteousness for the Divine presence in and blessing upon our ninth anniversary.

Your Brother in Christ,

J. P. Stoddard.

Chicago Congregational Association; Second Advent of Christ; Wheaton College, Etc.

The Chicago Congregational Association met in the southern suburbs of the city May 1st, with the Oakland church. The session continued all day adjourning for an elegant lunch provided by the ladies of the church.

There are thirty-two churches in this body, including the large churches of the city. A general revival and large increase is reported.

Prof. G. N. Boardman, of the Congregational Seminary, read a long essay, which was exhaustive and able, against the pre-millennial coming of Christ, held by Mr. Moody and his associates. While Prof. Boardman's criticisms of the pre-millennial views of Dr. Lord and others were well sustained, as against a literal, personal reign of Christ, etc., his whole essay was too negative to make much impression in favor of his own theory, if he has one, which was dimly and vaguely shadowed in his long and labored production. His doctrine, that there are many comings of Christ mentioned in the Scriptures, is true. But he insisted on confining the words of Christ in Matthew 24th and Luke 18th so entirely to Christ's coming at the destruction of Jerusalem, and shifting dispensations from Jewish to Christian, almost made those Scriptures seem fulfilled and obsolete as a last year's almanac.

The fact is all those prophecies of Christ are intensely generic. They are fulfilled by all events which answer to them down the ages. Even the "Woe to those who are with child and who give suck," which Mr. Boardman thought only belonged to the flight from Jerusalem, applies just as well to Christ's coming for the destruction of slavery in our late terrible war. Prophecies, like proverbs, are fulfilled by whatever fulfills them. So that, as Matthew Henry says, "The Scripture hath many fulfillings." In short, Prof. Boardman did not equal himself. He exposed some errors and expounded many Scriptures. But, as a piece of instruction on the second coming of Christ, "When he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him," he was vague and diffuse.

For ourselves we believe in the pre-millennial and the post-millennial coming of Christ, both; that his coming will take the world by surprise; that it will be attended by terrible judgments; that that day is near and "hasteth greatly;" and that the Scriptures which describe it are given for use, and we like Mr. Moody on the subject because he seems to have no definite theory drawn out in detail but wishes to impress his hearers with the fact and its near approach.

WHEATON COLLEGE

was introduced to the Association by Dr. J. B. Walker, in a paper proposing that the Congregational Association of Illinois, if it would endow and would endorse and sustain the reform principles of the College, should be given more entire control of the institution.

The paper was respectfully received, and the College referred to a committee to report to the State Association to meet soon at Sterling, Illinois.

But the ministers of the Association, some thirty in number, all having Masons in their churches, began soon to be restive under the appointment of the committee. Several prominent members, in private conversation, protested against binding the Association to endorse and sustain the reform principles of the College. They therefore voted to re-consider the resolution; dropped the committee and expunged the minute of the appointment of the committee from their records.

Meantime, the representatives of the College were treated with entire respect, and assured that the good will of the members toward the College would continue as heretofore.

A colored man who has been a slave and deeply felt the fearful experiences of that condition writes the following:

Knoxville, Ill., April 16, '77.

Through the kindness of Mr. W. A. I have had the reading of one of your papers and also of a tract entitled "The American Party." You are I think on the way to perform a great and a good work and I hope you will have great success. I am a member of the African M. E. church and am grieved to know that the preachers in our church are admitted into the Masonic lodge for a very small fee so as to be an inducement for others to join.

We are just out from under the heavy yoke of slavery where we were bought and sold like cattle. Now that we are made free from bondage to the white slave-holders, we as a race are fast becoming slaves to the most intelligent of our own race, for the colored clergy are very near all Masons and after supporting them and the church they try to have us pay of what small amount the Lord has blessed us with to the support of Freemasonry.

I wish to ask what is the best thing to do with this fast-growing evil. These colored preachers are great nabobs in this way. Please inform me if there are any colored men in your party as workers in this worthy cause. I am pleased to learn that there is a band of soldiers fighting this the greatest evil of this day.

J. B. S.

The brother proposes a great practical question, which is growing daily in importance: Shall Southern slavery be perpetuated with equal intensity and in worse degree? the bondage of the body to the driver be exchanged for that of the conscience to the lodge oath and the intellect to its vain rites and impious philosophy? This question is of equal importance with the efforts of the Jesuits to gain the colored people to allegiance to the Pope, which is sincerely deprecated by all good men, and which our various denominational bodies are seeking to avert by missionary efforts in the South. While we are guarding this gate the adversary of God and man gains his end by means of the deceptive wiles of the lodge.

The statements of the letter are confirmed by the word of intelligent and observant freedmen in other places. With a very few exceptions they are heedlessly led by their teachers into patronage of some secret order here in Chicago. Their Masonic funeral processions parade with martial music. It is of little account that the Grand Lodges of the various States will not recognize them nor allow their association in the local bodies, the system is managed to secure the fees, and influence and bind the conscience of the freedman. What shall be done to check this evil? We regret that we cannot answer the brother's inquiry for friends of the reform among his race satisfactorily. Those of our acquaintance are few and not especially active.

This subject would not be unworthy of an hour's discussion at the Dayton Convention.

—The General Agent returned from Michigan in time to attend the Directors' meeting on Tuesday last.

—Past Master Ronayne cannot be in Ellington, N. Y., at the time announced last week, May 14th, on account of appointments in Canada. He writes that he will reach Chautauqua County and speak in Ellington May 21st to 23d. Friends in that vicinity please notice.

—Secretary Grinnell sent in his report of the Oskaloosa Convention too late for the readers of this number. It will appear next week.

—Bro. Hinman finds plenty of work in Iowa, which is a good recommendation both of speaker and people, but he will arrange to leave it a season while attending the National Convention.

—We are sorry to reply to an Iowa correspondent that, if we are correctly informed, Rev. Arthur Edwards, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, is a high Mason. This information is several years old we hope he has since seen the folly of professing two so different religions at once and has abandoned that invention of the "god of this world and his besotted followers, modern Freemasonry."

—Bro. Stratton of the Wesleyan announces his intention to attend the National Convention and speak on the way thither. There should be a score of our best lecturers from as many different points concentrating the forces of reform toward Dayton about the first of July. See Secretary Stoddard's announcement.

—Add further to the items reported from Oskaloosa by Bro. Phillips, that the convention was unusually large and interesting. Rev. J. P. Richards, State lecturer for Illinois, was present and arranged for lectures at Wittemberg. Bro. Hinman has also several engagements following the convention. A proposal to raise a State fund of $50,000 to sustain a State lecturer was brought forward.

—A note from Treasurer Parish of Wisconsin, acknowledges, with thanks, the receipt of $2.50 from O. C. Blanchard of Ironton, Sauk Co., to assist the State Association in providing lectures in the State. There are five hundred others in the State who are able, if they can be made willing, to do as much, and thus keep an able man in the work the year round. Such sums entrusted to Bro. Parish will be honestly and carefully applied.

—The Odd-fellow society in Illinois lost in 1876 2 938 members whose names were dropped, and 1,174 who withdrew or resigned. The initiations during the same time were 3,169, and the gain for the year only 126. We need not talk of the wonderful spread of secret societies in this State any longer, if this be a fair representation of them.

—In mentioning the meeting of the United Brethren General Conference at Westfield, Illinois, this month, the Banner of Holiness says:
